The Governor of North Carolina recently called upon the officials of the State to plan a dedication service pledging people's loyalty in every co-operative way to aid in the success of our armed forces.

The meeting was opened with the following prayer:

PRAYER

O Almighty God, in Thy Name and presence we here dedicate ourselves, our time, our labor and our substance to Thee and the cause of freedom.

While we recall with grateful hearts the achievements of our own freedom, and steadfastly purpose to protect and deserve its continuance, we recognize our responsibility for the freedom, happiness and security of downtrodden people—joint members of the human race with ourselves—everywhere.

So now we gather in this solemn presence and dedicate ourselves to the steadfast purpose to achieve in winning this great endeavor—the freedom and protection of all mankind and of every race and people.

We determine, with unfailing and united purpose, to match in our daily work and labor for the cause, the gallant courage and bravery of our own peoples on the battle front. That together, by God's help, we shall work and labor and fight, that peace may prevail and brotherhood and freedom be established among all nations and people.

And so with confidence, we here dedicate ourselves, our souls and bodies, to the cause of freedom, depending for help on Him who is the Creator of all good, our God and Father, in Whom we trust. Amen.

F. W. WARNECKE

HOW YOUR BIBLE GREW UP, THE BIBLE AND THE FIRST WORLD STATE, WRITING SCRIPTURE UNDER DICTATORS. By Roy L. Smith, Know Your Bible Series. Abingdon-Cokesbury Press, Nashville. Paper, 25c each.

These are three excellent new booklets (some sixty-four pages each) making available in non-technical language for the laymen the newest Biblical scholarship. As the author writes in the introduction, "Many cults and sects have fattened upon the fact that lay people in large numbers remain ignorant of the background of their Bible." The catechetical method is used to convey the facts. The first study is a general Biblical introduction. The second one discusses the oldest books of the Bible (in their present form): Amos, Hosea, Isaiah and Micah. The third study covers the period from 721 B. C. to 586 B. C. These bookslets are well conceived, excellently written and are splendid material for young people's groups, Bible Classes, or any group that wishes a helpful and accurate introduction to the Bible. We are glad to note that it is proposed to continue the series to cover the entire Bible.

DO YOU KNOW LABOR? By James Myers. John Day Company. New York City. 240 pages. $2.

War time strikes are breeding a great deal of controversy and prejudice about the labor movement. This book is particularly timely, for it tells very fairly the labor side of our industrial life. It does this without idealization, without harangue, and without underestimating the importance of the management. Mr. Myers' method is to tell oof the accomplishment of the labor movement; to acknowledge and explain its failures; and to describe its methods. This is done with a wealth of example that will answer in detail the questions of many. There are chapters telling of the National Labor Relations Act, of how grievances are to be adjusted, and one on the Church and labor. After reading this book, the average person will admit that he didn't know labor! Most of us have too often spoken from the hastily born prejudices of our own economic background. Mr. Myers has had a wide experience within the ranks of the labor movement. He is now the Industrial Secretary of the Federal Council of Churches.

THE RELIGIONS OF DEMOCRACY. By Louis Finkelstein, J. Elliot Ross, and William Adams Brown. Devin-Adair. $2.00.

One of the most popular and effective ways of building mutual understanding among the three great religious traditions of our country is by "triologues," whereby representatives of Catholics, Jews, and Protestants appear on the same platform. This volume gives an adequate view of the finest presentations of these three traditions in chapters of eighty to ninety pages each, each written by an expert. Dr. Finkelstein is President of the Jewish Theological Seminary of America; Father Ross is a distinguished teacher and has been a chaplain to college students; Professor Brown is one of the great leaders of the movement for church unity and for forty-four years taught at Union Theological Seminary. Sponsored by the National Council of Christians and Jews, this book should be widely distributed and read. R. C. M.

THE SERVANT OF THE WORD. By Herbert H. Farmer. Scribner's. $1.50.

Preaching is more important than ever. The underlying and indescructible unity of the churches has been due primarily to preaching. Today, more than ever before, we realize the "terrible potency in speech." The heart of preaching lies not in its intellectaul content, its propaganda value, or its psychology, but in an "Event" of history which is given. This giveness of Jesus Christ in history is proclaimed and related to life situations. Preaching is part of the divine saving activity of the Gospel. Preaching is an "I-thou" relationship, mediating God to man in a personal equation. This amy mean drudgery and long hours, but it also means preaching sacramental. There are great insights here, for preacher and hearer alike.

WHAT IS RELIGION DOING TO OUR CONSCIENCES? George A. Coe. Scribners, New York. 120 pages. $1.50.

Dr. Coe has recognized that "changes that have occurred in almost the whole of civilization within three decades" have made him a "dissenter from some of my own published writings!" He begins his discussion of the change without and the change within by speaking of the "osmosis from the 'seceular' into what is taken as sacred." He examines the forces in our American democracy and points out the ambiguities and the inter-relations that our American life has brought to religion in our country. This, says Dr. Coe, is all to the good. "Our way of life in nearly all spheres of interest is that of vigorous motion in undetermined directions!" "Unremitting revaluation of our values is in fact, the only way in which anything can have continuing recognition of good!" This continuous recreation of a man's conscience is one of the great goals of religious living. "Though new applications of our principles are to be discovered, the principles themselves are everlastingly there, so that only a one-way adjustment is possible—an adjustment of ourselves to principles, never the adjustment of principles to ourselves!" This is a stimulating little book, packed full of points that will open great avenues of thought to a sensitive conscience. Not the least interesting part of it is a Postscript in which Dr. Coe gives us a pre-view of the criticism he expects of his position. Some of these criticisms are much to the point. But as Dr. Coe points out ambiguities in thought and life are an incentive to exploration and discovery!

THE ROOT AND FLOWER OF PRAYER. By Roger Hazelton. Macmillan. $1.75.

The Dean of the Chapel at Colorado College has written an interesting and helpful piece on the place of the pastoral prayer in non-conformist worship. It is a book which clergy of the liturgical communions would do well to ponder, for it will enrich their sense of common worship in the selection of their prayers. The final chapter illustrates his principles with a cycle of prayers.

HAVEN . . .

By J. W. KENNEDY

"O what a beautiful morning,
O what a beautiful day,
(I've got a wondering feeling
Everything's going my way."

This catchy opening song from the smash hit "Oklahoma" is in the mood which we should begin each day. But there are two sides to it. The one is the self-exalting, look what I've done kind of feeling, that places self at the center of the morning and therefore the day becomes self-centered, which means the day will probably not be a very beautiful one. The other side is the inner certainty that God controls and suggests this day all we design to do or say. That wonderful feeling in the second instance is love and faith inspired while in the first instance it is a manufactured something that will stand no wear or tear. Too many people sing themselves a song trying to invoke the inner feeling through the words heard, trying to wipe away dissatisfaction and feelings of failure and frustration by giving self a pat on the back when what self needs is—please understand the phrase—a kick in the pants. More pious tripe is poured out for public consumption to keep ego intact than any other one thing and the old game of putting a flower in the buttonhole of life and fixing a pseudo grin on one of two faces is playing to continuous houses throughout the day and night. We may fool our fellow man who trusts our sincerity but we cannot fool God who watcheth and waiteth for our return to the different kind of life He expects from all who have caught the Spirit of Christ's way. Persons whose hearts walk around in hobnailed shoes and whose minds are dulled by cunning camouflage or whose eyes are covered by the hazy film of indifference or whose ears are stopped with the wax of conceit—such persons will never make their singing of our morning song a smash hit. Even the spiritually unmusical will discern the wavering melody, the sour note, and be untouched by the uncontagious spirit behind it all.

We who acknowledge that we are Christians and thereby proclaim our difference from those who are not Christian must meet the challenge of our words or swallow them unspoken.

In the ancient book of Nehemiah, a book dealing with just such two-faced, never facing individuals—who said one thing and did another, who promised but never produced—there is a verse (8:8 to be exact) which goes like this: "Thus they read in the book of the Law of God distinctly, and gave the sense so that they understood the reading." Whenever we fail to get to the reality of God's word for us as we read or pray, so that we can stand for Him and make His presence real to others, we are hypocrites and have failed Jesus Christ who gave us our second chance and first glimpse of a new life.

Remember Independence Day, which we celebrated not long ago. But for Christians, individually and nationally, it will always be Dependence Day—dependence upon God day, which to forget automatically takes away our freedom and make us slaves of every selfish littl fancy that sways us to and fro. What a truly beautiful morning and day it will be if we know beyond a single doubt, that without God in Christ Jesus we are lost, but that leaning on His everlasting arms we are found and are moved along by the inner power of His might. Such belief will change our day and mend our way.

Praying Hands

The League of Intercessors

THE PRAYER OF FAITH

"The prayer of Faith" is actually a prayer for a sick persons by the presbyters. "Let him call for the elders," says practical St. James.

That summons is in itself an act of faith, a call for the prayer of faith, and for the man of faith, even as one calls for a doctor.

As one considers a hospital, and reads its annual report, what an efficient organization it seems. Its analyses, X-rays, blood counts and pressures and various other ingenious means for determining the ailment; and then, for indicated treatment, its appliances, medicines and operations. No hazy guess-work; no panaceas or cure-alls for all cases alike. Individual, personal treatment. The doctors nowadays do not work "in the dark," but according to charts.

The Elder has often slender means for spiritual diagnosis and for specific individual treatment. His Prayer Book, his extempore prayers his laying on of hands or anointing, for the most part are the same for all cases (unless he is a specialist), and for the busy Rector time seldom serves for a full investigation and understanding of each situation.

True, the pastor is supposed to know his people; but pastors come and go and so do people. (The saying is, "Lawyers see the worst of people, pastors see the best in them, and doctors see them as they are." And the last is the crucial need.

Seldom is it possible, however desirable, for doctors and elders to work together. But there it is, "The prayer of faith shall save the sick." The Church, religion, elders, have their function and their responsibility.

Let it then be THE PRAYER OF FAITH, by the man of faith, believing in the ever-present, everywhere present, really present, kind, wise and able Saviour; the prayer that is not timid, uncertain; but quietly, simply, humbly authoritative, coming "boldly unto the throne," "In the Name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost".

The attitude is more potent than the form. The prayer of faith believes (is sure) that God not far away in heaven, is pervasive as the air of the room, life giving and essential to life, and abides in the bodies and souls of all present, sick or well. It is our "blindness of heart" that prevents our recognizing Him, and the prayer that is not conscious of His blessed and blessing presence. Who "healed them all," will not "save the sick" because it is the prayer of "little faith."

Equanimity is a necessary characteristic of a good doctor. Also of a good elder. Conscious of God, he cannot be moved.

And when he prays, he "enters into a secret place and shuts the door". Wandering thoughts may clamor for entrance; they often intrude; and only practice and the grace of God can enable us to "put them all forth" lest they profane the sanctuary. Here the elder's own secret prayer life stands him in good stead, his own experience and practice of the Presence of God. This is his test; and he recalls that his Master said, "For their sakes I sanctify myself".

"The fervent, effectual prayer of a righteous man availeth much." St. James 5:16.

SHUT IN

LORD, in this quiet room
Thou art my constant Friend.
In sunlight bright or loneliest gloom
Each hour with Thee I spend.

Help me in peace to muse
On days gone and to be
That I may see I did not choose,
'Twas God that guided me.

Dear Lord, my sin forgive
And by Thy healing grace
Cure me and send me forth to live,
To serve, to love, to bless.

TOWARDS BELIEF IN GOD. By Herbert H. Farmer. Macmillan, New York City. 252 pages. $2.

Some years ago Dr. Farmer wrote "Experience of God," an analysis of why we believe in God. That volume is now out of print. Rather than reissue it, Dr. Farmer has written a new book on the same general lines. In clear-cut prose that is generally non-technical, Dr. Farmer says that our certainty of God cannot be demonstrated, yet that certainty is assured by the pragmatic and "coercive" test of experience. Since God is not an abstract idea, but a living personal Will, His Presence is best known in the concrete situations of life where decisions must be made.

Eightieth Anniversary of its Foundation Observed on February 9, 1943

International Red Cross at Geneva, Switzerland

Its Work a Beacon of Light in a World of Chaos

By MARIE WIDMER

A WAR OF never before experienced devastation is engulfing the world today. There seems no longer to be any room for humanitarian feelings, brotherly love and charity. However, if one looks closer, one discovers next to hatred infinitely surpassing love; next to destruction far more powerful reconstruction, and next to death, overcoming all obstacles, charity.

This wondrous power of good against evil is the International Red Cross which on February 9, 1943, observed the 80th anniversary of its foundation at Geneva. Glancing over the history of this noble institution one learns that in 1859 Jean Henri Dunant, citizen and philanthropist of that Swiss city, happened to be an eye-witness to the terrible sufferings of the wounded on the battlefields of Lombardy, where the armies of France and Piedmont were fighting the Austrians. Dunant helped as much as he could, then appealed to humanity in his brochure" Memoirs of Solferino."

Several prominent citizens became intensely interested in the problem, among them the Genevese lawyer Gustave Moynier. Having had considerable experience in international congresses, Moynier, then president of the "Societe Genevoise d'utilite publique," called a meeting of that society for February 9, 1863. That conference was also attended by Dr. Louis Paul Amedee Appia who had volunteered in Italian hospitals in 1859; by his friend Dr. Theodore Maunoir of Geneva; by Jean Henri Dunant himself, and by Swiss General Dufour. These five men formed, eight days later, a "Commission of Five" which was the foundation stone of the International Red Cross Committee.

AT A MEETING held on August 26, 1863, this commission decided to call an international conference for October 26, 1863, to discuss measures for the improvement of the medical and nursing service of armies in the field, and for the organization of a voluntary unit to do this work. Plans were made to invite not only physicians and other persons likely to be interested in the problem, but also the heads of various governments. In order to make the conference a success, the indefatigable Dunant made several trips to arouse interest for the commission's plans.

The conference took place at Geneva from October 26-29, 1863. It was attended by 36 persons from 16 different countries, and by 18 physicians and diplomats who had been delegated to it by 14 governments. Military authorities of the various nations were at first skeptical of this charitable organization, so that Army doctors, too, were afraid that the volunteers would not adhere to military discipline. However, with Moynier presiding, an agreement was reached which already contained the basic principles of the convention of August 22, 1864, when the International Red Cross treaty was signed in the City Hall at Geneva. Gustave Moynier became the first President of the International Red Cross Committee and functioned as such until his death in 1910. He was succeeded by Gustave Ador, another prominent citizen of Geneva, who was President of Switzerland in 1919.

IN AUGUST, 1914, as soon as reports came in of the first battles of World War No. 1, Mr. Ador founded the now universally famous Central Information Bureau for Prisoners of War whose main purpose is to act as intermediary between prisoners of war and interned civilians and their families and friends. The Bureau was modestly started in Mr. Ador's private residence. However, as soon as its existence became known, its work assumed such proportions that the city of Geneva placed its newly renovated Musee Rath at its disposal.

On many occasions Mr. Ador visited prisoners' camps where he found men so badly maimed in battle as to be of no further military use. Inspired by pity for these unfortunates he proposed the exchange of the severely wounded. Finally, after many futile efforts, he succeeded, with the aid of the Pope, to arrange for such exchanges.

Mr. Ador died in 1928 and Dr. Max Huber, former President of the permanent Court of International Justice at The Hague, assumed the presidency of the International Red Cross Committee. He has filled this post brilliantly ever since.

The International Red Cross Committee has always regarded it as its duty never to relax its vigilance and always to keep in mind the possibility of a war. It there fore has constantly worked to bring about the conclusion or revision of conventions to improve the conditions of victoms of war. Thus the "Geneva Convention to Ameliorate the Condition of the Wounded and Sick in the Armies in the Field" of 1864, was revised in 1929. The "Convention Relating to the Treatment of Prisoners of War" came into being in 1929, largely as a result of the experiences made during 1914-1918. Switzerland's countless charitable activities on behalf of war sufferers during the first World War will forever remain a highlight in her long and glorious history.

IN THE PRESENT WAR activities of the Central Information Bureau for Prisoners of War began immediately in September, 1939. This time the special Palais du Conseil General became its headquarters, but as the war swept on and on, the organization soon outgrew these premises. At present its workers are also established in Geneva's Musee Rath, in the large Hotel Metropole, in a "freeport" for packages, and in some 26 auxiliary sections distributed all over Switzerland.

Recent statistics show that from September, 1939, to March, 1942, the Bureau has received approximately 13,400,000 pieces of mail. In the same space of time 12,600,000 replies have been sent out. According to war events, incoming letters have reached a daily figure as high as 60,000. On July 8, 1942, the Bureau received 85,520 letters and dispatched 161,229, making a total of 246,749 letters handled in one day.

Working methods of the International Red Cross were somewhat simplified during the Spanish Civil War. As a result there is now a uniform correspondence card providing for messages of 25 words. Uniform packages with food and clothing having also been introduced.

Here it must be remembered that this staggering amount of work is done by about 5,200 Swiss citizens of all ages and walks of life. Some 3,400 of them are residents of Geneva and the remainder are assistants in the auxiliry bureaux. Especially worthy to be mentioned is the fact that only 700 of these workers receive a modest salary. In addition it should be emphasized that the Swiss Federal and Cantonal authorities, also various public and private institutions, and the public in general, contribute about 75 per cent of the funds necessary for the maintenance of this humanitarian organization. All premises used in Switzerland have been placed rent-free at the disposal of the International Red Cross.

Dr. Marc Peter, Minister of Switzerland in Washington from 1919-1939, is the official representative in the United States of the International Red Cross Committee, with offices in Washington. Dr. Peter inspects internment camps for civilians and prisoners of war in this country, while other delegates carry out such inspections in other lands. They, as all other activities of the International Red Cross, serve as an assurance to suffering humanity that there is still a beacon light in a world of chaos.

Churches Are Called Upon to Go Into Action

TO RESTORE CHRISTIAN HOME

A CALL TO THE 220,000 churches of America to restore the custom of daily family prayers as an antidote to the rapidly increasing wave of crime and juvenile delinquency has been issued by the Family Altar League from its headquarters in Chicago. It offers free preaching materials and campaign guides to pastors who wish to carry on a home devotions revival.

J. Edgar Hoover, Director of the F. B. I., who knows more about crime conditions in the United States than any other living man, in a statement to the Family Altar League, calls upon the churches to go into action to restore the Christian home. He points out that juvenile delinquency and immorality are shooting upward at an alarming rate and says that this is only the beginning. He says that religion is the only preventative. His assertions are echoed by sociology and law enforcement authorities and many churches throughout the land.

The Salvation Army and the International Council of Religious Education alike, have issued warnings that juvenile delinquency is booming and that most of the waywardness comes from the twenty million boys and girls of the United States who are growing up in Paganism, having no religious training whatsoever, and who never hear the name of God except in profanity.

The directors of the Family Altar League, made up of businessmen, writers, publishers, lawyers, and others, are one in asserting that the great task before the Church today is to reach lost youth with a virile Christianity that will stir them to loyalty and personal service to Christ. They are convinced that if God is not honored in young life and Christ is not taken as the Saviour, we will have a generation of exploiters, gangsters, and law-breakers and selfish people to deal with, which will all but doom the Church.

"Christ has established His Church on earth for one purpose only—to redeem mankind. Great buildings, billions in property, complex organizations, social affairs and activities are merely auxiliary to this central fact. If Christ is not proclaimed and people converted to His way of living, then everything also is in vain."

The Family Altar League believes that the next great revival lies in the home, with whole families converted to Christ and households dedicated to His service. Children reared in a robust environment will absorb vital Christian truths and practices and we can bring forth a generation of Christian disciples who will be able to conquer the world for the Master. "We espouse no denominational ties but seek to be the servant of all in this field. If we can be of any service to any church or denomination which proclaims Christ as Saviour and Lord, we consider it a privilege to be called upon. We believe that a vigorous family life means a strong Christian Church, with people flocking to the House of God because they want the Living Word, not because they are attracted by some novelty or device."

The Family Altar League headquarters are at 189 West Madison Street, Chicago. Its Executive Secretary is Dr. William F. McDermott, Religious Editor of The Chicago Daily News. All members of the staff except the office secretary serve without pay. The sole aim is to advance the Kingdom of God.

People and Purpose

Christian people are committed to a very definite philosophy of history. To state it very simply it is this: God is the Creator of this world, and all therein; God revealed Himself to the world in the person of His Son Jesus Christ; He is still operative in this world through the Holy Spirit; and the evidence of that operation is through the Church. This is oversimplification we admit. The main thesis is that life has purpose and that purpose is found in God.

St. Paul in his letter to the Ephesians gives the Christian philosophy of history its real meaning. He writes that the purpose of history is "to sum up all things in Christ, the things in the heavens and the things in the earth." (Ephesians 1, vs. 10.) As a modern commentator has well expressed it Paul is answering the question, "What is the secret of the mystery of the ages? The mystery that has deepened and been made so wonderfully impressive by modern scientific discoveries of the past and its speculations on the future. The widening of the span of time beyond the limits of knowledge and the comprehension of our minds leaves us bewildered. But Paul, who in this Epistle soars in thought above the ever rolling stream, is not dismayed. He sees the ages that are past and still to come gathered in a focal point in Christ. They wait upon Him, and the light of the glory that is in Him they gleam with meaning. However vast the aeons of time that passed before Christ came, they were all needed to make ready for Him, and vaster still must be the ages yet to be, if all the promises that are to be found in Him are to be fulfilled." That is the faith that interprets history. That is the faith to which we as Christians are committed.

It is increasingly difficult for vast numbers of people to grasp the meaning of that faith. As Christians we should recognize this. It is a brutal fact but because of that we should face its tragic meaning realistically.

We all claim to be busy people. Added to the normal duties are war calls. We imagine that many of us spend a part of the day reading the daily press and listening to our favorite radio commentator. How many times have you heard this world's Creator named? or His Son; or the Holy Spirit, or the Church? We do not mean referred to but spoken of as having some effective power that will shape the destiny of men. Except for regularly broadcast church services, or the reports of a few sermons, delivered in our large cities, the space devoted in the press to God is nil, and the time over the radio is the same.

This means that as Christians we belong to a minority group. We do not like to think that this is true. But it is. The point of all this that we are apt to forget in the midst of the plans that are being made for a "new world", that that "new world" can only come when "all things are summed up in Christ."

We are thinking too much in terms of plans, economic, social, political—with the emphasis on the plans, and not on the people for whom the plans are made. This thought is beautifully expressed in the hymn:

> "When wilt Thou save the people?
> O God of mercy, when?
> Not kings and lords, but nations!
> Not thrones and crowns, but men!
> Flowers of Thy heart, of Thy heart, O God, > are they;
> Let them not pass like weeds away
> Their heritage a sinless day.
> God, save the people!"

What to do? There should be in every parish church groups studying carefully all plans being issued for a post-war world As individual Christians we should begin now to train ourselves, to see men as potential children of God, in Christ. To that philosophy of history we are committed.

This does not imply that we will be given the privilege of ushering in the millennium. We take heart from Paul's words, that vast aeons are ahead before all the promises made by God in Christ are fulfilled. At the same time it does not relieve us from the responsibility of working now, to bring people to see God's interest in them. There is a purpose for people. That purpose is found in the life God longs for them to live.

We live in a generation that is increasingly impersonal. Our Christian faith teaches us that life is personal and purposeful because it is personal.

Memorial Services

There is an increasing use being made of memorial services for men who have made the Supreme Sacrifice, in the armed forces of our country.

We suggest that the Commission on Prayer Book Revision take under consideration the adoption of a service that will be more or less uniform in the Church. We wish to see the genius of the Prayer Book preserved. We understand that the services used at present run the gauntlet of sentimental nothingness to Requiem Masses! The latter certainly foreign to the Protestant Episcopal Church.

If the Prayer Book Revision Commission is not the proper body, we suggest that the Forward in Service Commission issue suggestions for such a service. It is needed.

By THE REV. C. F. D. MOULE, M. A.

Vice-Principal of Ridley Hall, Cambridge

Editor's Note: We reprint the following article from "The Record" of London, England, June 18, 1943. We believe it is timely because of the impending discussion at General Convention of the report of the Commission on Unity.

CLEAR THINKING by itself is not going to accelerate Christian fellowship. But a mental fog may retard it; and it is therefore a Christian duty to get as clear a view as possible of what the New Testament has to tell us about Church Order. For instance, many devout people use the word "priest" in an irresponsible way without realizing that it fosters a confusion of thought which blurs one of the foundation truths of the Gospel. By derivation, it is merely a shortened form of "presbyter," which is Greek for "elder." But by usage, it is the regular translation for an entirely different Greek word (hiereus), which roughly speaking, means "a sacrificing priest," i. e., the priest of a religion in which the worshipper is considered unable to approach God without the help of an intermediary who knows the secrets of the prescribed sacrifices and ritual. Of such a type were practically all the religions contemporary with the birth of Christianity, not excepting some interpretations even of Judaism; and it is not always clearly enough recognized that the Greek word hiereus, "priest" in this sense, is never used in the New Testament of a Christian "minister." Where it (or a related word) is associated with Christianity by the New Testament writers, it is applied metaphorically, and either to believers in general (e. g., I Peter 2:9, "a royal priesthood"; Revelation 1:6, "priests unto his God and Father") or to Christ who can alone properly be called our High Priest (Hebrews 3:1, etc.), as offering the sacarifice of His obedience to God. This shows that "sacerdotalism" (from sacerdos, the Latin equivalent of hiereus) is alien to the New Testament conception of the ministry. Christinaity was almost unique in its refusal to countenance any class or "caste" of intermediaries possessing secret knowledge or exclusive powers. Access to God as nearly direct as is possible for man is not the monopoly of an "inner circle": the keys of the kingdom of heaven are not entrusted exclusively to any specialized group of Christians, but to all Christians as such. To this latter statement, which many would challenge, we must return shortly.

BUT MEANWHILE, there are four other important words whose history is full of meaning—"Presbyter," "Bishop," "Deacon," and "Apostle." "Presbyter," as has been said, is simply Greek for "elder." The duties of elders were probably not defined with any exactitude until after the New Testament period. Even the Epistles to Timothy and Titus do not tell us much. But the elders seem to have been generally responsible for the pastoral care and management of the congregations in which they served. To Jews and Greeks alike, ancient custom would have made leadership by a body of men with ripe experience a natural and obvious form of organization. "Bishop" is the regular translation of a Greek word (episcopos), from which it is, in fact, derived—a word which literally means an "overseer" or "foreman." Now, a careful study of these two words, "Presbyter" and "Bishop" (as in J. B .Lightfoot's famous dissertation attached to his "Philippians") puts it beyond all doubt that in the New Testament they both apply to the same persons, "episcopacy" or "overseership" being part of the function of a presbyter. The New Testament knows nothing of bishops as distinguished from presbyters. As for "Deacon," it is the Greek for "helper," "minister," "attendant," or "servant" (as e. g., in Matt. 20:26, 22:13; John 2:5, where ordinary servants are obviously meant). But it also appears in certain connections to have been used in a specific way for a recognized church minister. Exactly what his functions were, it is impossible to say. Again the Pastoral Epistles are vague. But it is reasonable to suppose that he (or perhaps sometimes she—Romans 16:1?) was simply a junior assistant to the presbyters. There are no grounds, by the way, for assuming (as is constantly done) that "the seven," appointed, according to Acts 6, to relieve the Apostles of administrative hackwork, were the first deacons and became the foundation of the Order. They are not once so much as called deacons (though the corresponding verb does occur in Acts 6:2). The only one given a title is Philip, and he is called not "the deacon," but "the evangelist" (Acts 21:8). "The seven" of Acts 6 were simply a body of men appointed to meet a particular crisis in one particular local church. The term "Apostle" is a storm-centre of controversy, and any delicate and exact treatment of it would require much more space than can be afforded here; but it is roughly true to say that, as a rule, it is used of the twelve (that is, the eleven, plus either Judas or Matthias). St. Paul is the most obvious exception, and his claim to the title, vigorously defended in his Epistles, was evidently disputed by his opponents. But practically all the evidence, including St. Paul's case, is covered if an apostle is defined as one who had been commissioned by Christ Himself as His witness. The exceptions are where it either means "a messenger" or "delegate" in a quite ordinary sense (Philippians 2:25), or a messenger of Christ indeed, but not, perhaps, in that special sense of having been commissioned by Him in person (e. g., ? Barnabas Acts 14:14, Andronicus and Junias Romans 16:7, and possibly James the Lord's brother, though Galatians 1:19 is not conclusive. For Matthias' case, see below). This brings us to the much-debated question of an apostle's functions. The evidence seems to suggest that his primary and specific function was witness to Christ. It was the apostles who, as accredited eyewitnesses, commissioned by Christ Himself, guaranteed the facts of the Gospel. They were, to put it otherwise, the "canon" of the oral period—the standard by which the traditions about Jesus, which were passed from mouth to mouth, could be checked, just as, in subsequent generations, the written gospels came to be the norm. That, perhaps, is the sense in which the Church is "built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets" (Ephesians 2:20; compare Matthew 16:18, Revelation 21:14). In support of this interpretation of apostleship, the following facts are worth weighing:

(a) The functions to which the Twelve were appointed ("ordained" in the A. V. only means "appointed'') by Jesus are defined by Mark 3:14, 15 as preaching and healing by virtue of special intimacy with Jesus, for which He Himself had chosen them.

(b) Acts 1:8 defines their function (see verse 2) quite simply as witness to Jesus (compare Acts 4:33).

(c) In accordance with this, when a twelfth is to be chosen in the place of Judas, his qualifications are (Acts 1:21, 22) ability to witness owing to intimacy with Jesus and His circle from the time of the Baptist's mission to the Ascension. (Admittedly this is not strictly a commissioning by Christ Himself, and, in this respect, is a further exception to the suggested definition. But the casting of lots was perhaps at that time looked upon as a ''non-human'' mode of decision, and the nearest approach possible in the circumstances to a directly divine commission. In any case, the function of witness remains clear.)

(d) Acts 6:2, 4, again, points to the Apostles' consciousness that their proper function is preaching and prayer rather than organization and administration.

(e) St. Paul's case is exceptional, in that he lacked the intimacy which the Twelve had enjoyed with Jesus before His Ascension. But his claims are otherwise the same, namely, to have seen the Lord and to have received a preaching commission direct from His own lips (1 Corinthians 9:1, 15:8; Acts 22:21, 26:16-18).

(f) Matthew 16:19, often alleged to mean that Christ bestowed on St. Peter the function of chief organizer and director of the future Church, is far from conclusive. In the first place, the similar commission in Matthew 18:18 is not limited to St. Peter—perhaps not even to the Twelve; and, in the second place, what is the ''power of the keys'' It may well be that solemn power of helping to admit into God's fellowship or to exclude from it with which every Christian, as such, is endowed —an inescapable responsibility which the confession of Christ entails. (For the metaphor of the keys as representing simply the responsibilities involved in the knowledge of God, compare Luke 11:52).

There is one passage, admittedly, which seems to point to a distinctive power lodged exclusively with the apostles. This is Acts 8, where Philip ''the evangelist'' baptizes, but his converts have to await the apostolic touch before receiving the Holy Spirit( verses 14-17). But this is a solitary instance; and, to balance it, did not St. Paul receive the Holy Spirit by the ministry of an otherwise unknown disciple, Ananias (Acts 9:17)? It would be precarious to erect on a single reference in one New Testament writer a theory of a kind of magical transmission of power by apostolic hands.

THE UPSHOT of all this seems to be that Church apostolic function. As the inner circle of the organization was at most only secondarily an original disciples the Apostles may have been looked to, to take the lead in the earliest days; St. Peter certainly was. But little or nothing is heard of most of the Twelve, which is surprising only until it is realized that their specific function was not leadership but witness. The organization and administration of Church life seems (as we have seen) to have rested mostly on the elders (presbyters).

But there s no evidence that there was at first a predetermined uniformity of Church Order at all, let alone an apostolic system. Although the late Dr. B. H. Streeter's ''The Primitive Church'' has been widely attacked in its details, its main thesis still seems eminently reasonable, namely, that if you had made a tour of the different towns and cities in the early days, so far from uniformity, you would have found a variety of types of organization. At Jerusalem, for instance, there had soon come to be a body of elders (presbyters), men marked by age and experience as the obvious leaders, with James the Lord's brother (not an Apostle in the narrower sense) at their head as a kind of chairman. His position is, as a matter of fact, perhaps the nearest approach that can be found in the New Testament to that of a bishop—the senior pastor presiding over a college of others. But, if so, it is at a rudimentary stage. Streeter speculates about ''the Elder John'' and one or two other figures in Asia Minor as representing a similar approach to episcopacy, and he may be right; but there is little substantial evidence. At Antioch, on the other hand, the only leaders mentioned in Acts 13:1 are prophets and teachers—not bishops or elders; and although it is precarious to argue from silence, it seems possible that the Church here at that time possessed no regular organization at all. The same may hold good for some of the Churches founded by St. Paul. It is quite true that Paul and Barnabas did ''choose'' (for so it seems the word should be rendered in Acts 14:23) elders (presbyters) in the churches of their first preaching tour; and similarly Titus (according to Titus 1:5) was authorized by St. Paul to appoint elders in the cities of Crete. But there is extraordinarily little in the two Epistles to the Corinthians to suggest a Church Order of any recognizable type at Corinth. Thus, Streeter's theory of an original diversity which was only gradually, in process of time, reduced to uniformity, has much in its favour, even if we dare not be as specific in our details as he is. F. J. A. Hort was equally far from believing in any uniformity imposed authoritatively; and in the same vein the late Dr. C. A. Anderson Scott, replying to the question Was the organization ''from above'' or ''from below''? says ''Neither; it was from within. . . . The body secreted the skeleton'' (''What happened at Pentecost?'' in ''The Spirit,'' edited by B. H. Streeter, page 153).

WHY IS IT THAT, so soon after the New Testament period, a developed episcopacy is found and much stress is laid upon the authority of tradition, is a question outside the scope of this article. But it may be suggested that the answer lies in human nature which—so soon as ever the vitality and first spontaneity of a movement begin to wane, has always had a way of trying to shirk personal responsibility and take refuge in clearly prescribed, authoritative rules and an accredited dictatorship.

Be that as it may, the evidence does suggest that Christ actually dared to entrust His cause to the guidance of the Holy Spirit spoke of in St. John's Gospel, instead of creating in advance a cut-and-dried, irrevocable system of Church Government or countenancing one and only one channel of His grace. It suggests, indeed, that the Nineteenth Article of Religion is scriptural when it never so much as mentions a specific type of ministry among the essentials of the Church—more scriptural, perhaps, than the sweeping words prefixed to the Ordinal. Our conclusion, therefore, though negative in form, carries with it corollaries of immense positive importance. For is there is no New Testament evidence even of a stereotyped organization in the early flowering of Christian Church —let alone of the transmission of some mysterious grace from Christ through the apostles—then it is impossible to claim scriptural support,at any rate, for denying the validity of present-day Church Orders which cannot claim the authority of ''apostolic succession'' and do not wish to do so.

BETSY'S COOKIES

Today, at last she could make the cookies. Betsy hurried into the coat-room, grabbed her sweater off the hook, and almost ran out of the school-house.

She skipped through the ward, singing to herself, "Today's the day—today's the day." Mother had promised to help her put the cookies in the oven, but she was going to mix them herself. They were to be her first cookies. Last week she had wanted to do it, but mother had been too busy. But today—well, nothing, absolutely nothing, would keep her from making those cookies.

"Oh, Betsy." It was Helen, coming down her front steps. "I've been watching for you. What's our home work for tonight?"

Betsy did not want to stop. "Why weren't you at school this afternoon—then you wouldn't have to ask." She kept on walking.

"I had to take care of the baby. Mama couldn't, she was sick."

"Oh, Betsy, please tell me about it. Helen had been absent last week and had a hard time catching up with her class.

"Do we have to memorize anything for tomorrow?" Helen sounded frightened.

"Not much. Just some things about rubber that the teacher read."

"Oh, Betsy, please tell me about it. I'm afraid to go tomorrow unless I know. Last week she was cross because I didn't know the home work."

Betsy frowned. If only she hadn't met Helen. Mother had insisted that right after school was the only time she could help her. But she knew Helen was right. The teacher had been cross. Perhaps she didn't know why Helen had to miss school so much. "Maybe if you tell the teacher why you were absent, she'll excuse you," she suggested.

"But I'll still have to learn the home work. To night I haven't anything to do. Please, Betsy," Helen pleaded.

"Nothing to do tonight! Well, I have. . . . " Betsy bit her lip to keep back the words. "All right, Helen." Betsy sighed a big sigh and sat down on the bottom step.

"Well, the teacher read to us about rubber, where it comes from and what it's used for. Our home work is to make a list of twenty things made of rubber."

"Twenty things? I don't know that many!" Helen gasped.

"Oh, yes, you do," Betsy assured her. "I'll help you get started. What does your baby sister chew on?"

"A rubber teething ring," Helen answered.

"What does she play with?"

"A rubber rattle," Helen laughed.

"What does Towser play with?" asked Betsy.

"Oh, this is going to be fun. A rubber mouse," Helen cried.

Fun, yes, but those cookies! "What do we play jacks with?" Betsy sighed.

"A rubber ball. Oh, Betsy, I didn't know it was so easy. The way you ask me questions is much easier than learning it from a book," Helen beamed.

"Now you tell me some without the questions," Betsy said.

Helen thought for a moment. Then she said, "Daddy sprinkles the yard with a rubber hose. Baby sister's carriage has rubber tires. Our automobile has rubber tires Now, wait a minute—"

"Fine, go on," Betsy said.

"Oh, yes, when it rains I wear rubbers. My raincoat is rubber, my pencil has a rubber eraser on it, and—"

"Go on. You're doing fine," Betsy urged.

"That's all I can think of. You tell me some more, please," Helen begged.

"Well, there are rubber heels, rubber boots, hot water bottles, rubber corks, rubber jar rings and rubber bands. Then some things are made of hard rubber like combs and fountain pens," Betsy finished.

"I won't mind going to school now. All I have to do is to think about things and not words," Helen said happily.

Betsy jumped up and started for home. Maybe there would still be time for the cookies. Helen walked along with her.

"Look, Betsy, is that Sugar? It looked just like him. He ran behind the house," Helen cried.

"Where? I don't see anything. Anyway, it can't be Sugar. We never let him outside alone. He is such a little pup, he won't come when he is called." Betsy was very sure.

"Let's run back and see," Helen urged. "I'm pretty sure it is Sugar."

Just then a little light-brown, sugar-colored cocker spaniel darted across the yard. "Oh, it is Sugar," Betsy cried, "Here, Sugar! Here, Sugar!"

Sugar stopped for a moment, cocked his head on one side, looked impudently at the two girls, and dashed away in the opposite direction. "Oh, what'll I do? He just won't come when he is called." They ran after him, but the faster they ran, the quicker his little furry feet scampered away.

"You watch where he goes. I'll be right back," and Helen ran to her house. In a minute she was back with Towser in her arms.

"What are you going to do?" Betsy shouted.

"I'm going to put Towser where Sugar will see him. He'll run to play with him and when I call Towser, Sugar will come, too," Helen explained.

In a moment Sugar and Towser were rolling on the grass together. "Now let's start walking toward your house," Helen said.

"O, Helen, I'm so glad you were here. I never could have caught him," she said.

Just then Betsy saw a car stop in front of her house and her mother got out. So mother was late, too, and hadn't been waiting for her! Suddenly she had a wonderful idea. "Listen, Helen, why don't you come in with me and help me make my first cookies?"

After all, it would be much more fun for two of them to learn together. And it certainly was a good thing that she had stopped to help Helen. For how would she ever have caught that little scamp Sugar without Helen's help?

Both little girls ran up the steps with Towser and Sugar at their heels. "Oh, look," Helen pointed to Sugar's rubber mouse on the porch. Then she began to sing happily to herself, "Rubber rattle, rubber hose, rubber tires, rubber bands—"

And Betsy know just why Helen was singing because she wanted to sing, too.

FOR ALL THINGS NEW

For all new things we thank Thee,
God;
For leaves on trees, and bursting sod
Where tiny flowers pushing through
Have washed their faces in the dew.
We thank Thee, God.

For little birdlings in the nest,
And baby chicks, with down all dressed,
For golden butterflies on wing,
For every fresh and gladsome thing
We thank Thee, God.

And we are glad that children, too
Can grace a world that's fresh and new;
Can be a part of everything
That speaks Thy nearness in the Spring,
We thank Thee, God.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF THE NEWS

Bishop of China Arrives in New York

Bishop Y. Y. Tsu, of Kunming, in charge of work in Southwest China, has arrived in New York for conference with Church authorities regarding the Church's postwar program in China. After a few weeks in the United States he will go to England for similar conference there.

It is not possible at present for the Chinese House of Bishops to assemble as some are interned and war conditions hinder travel, but at their most recent meeting, in May, 1941, in Shanghai, anticipating the situation which developed at the end of the year and made such meetings impossible for a time, the bishops asked Dr. Tsu to act in free China as a special delegate of the House of Bishops. He had an informal meeting of the bishops who are in free China last May in Chungking, which provided opportunity for them to discuss matters which he will now present to the Church in America and England. The Rev. H. Alexander Maxwell, a missionary of the English Church Missionary Society in China since 1926, was consecrated at that time to assist Bishop C. T. Song in Western Szechuan.

Bishop Tsu has had an unusual opportunity to learn about current conditions of the Church in China as he made a trip to the occupied area last February, which took him from Shanghai to Hankow. He saw Bishop Roberts and Bishop Craighill in Shanghai only a few days before they were interned. He was impressed by the very large attendance at services. Hankow is on the battle front, but in both places the Chinese clergy are carrying on as best they can under difficult conditions.

In free China Bishop Tsu has been over the Burma Road to Tali, has visited Hua Chung College in Hsichow, and is in close touch with the new work and large opportunities in and around Kunming. He spent an interesting month in Burma shortly before the border was closed, taking confirmations for Bishop G. A. West, of Rangoon. It was the first experience the diocese had had of the Oriental bishop. English was frequently used as the common language, except for Tamil and Burmese congregations when Bishop Tsu was interpreted. Among those confirmed were an Anglo-Indian soldier under sentence of death and a sick boy in a hospital. Bishop Tsu dedicated a new church in Lashio. This formerly small and sleepy town on the Burma border and had a boom in trade when China opened the Burma Road, and is now a busy city, more than half Chinese in population.

Bishop Tsu flew from Kunming to Washington. As he is a graduate of the General Theological Seminary with a Ph. D. from Columbia, he knows much of the United States and has had several previous arrivals, but always coming by boat and entering the country through the noise and confusion of the docks and waterfront. "This time," he says, "flying from Puerto Rico to Washington, along the Atlantic seaboard, looking down on forests and farms and highways, and then landing in Washington, in the midst of the city with its great airport and fine buildings. I was impressed as never before with the richness and magnificence of the country. The other foremost impression I have from the trip is the wonderful care the United States is giving its armies abroad. In India, Africa, Brazil and Puerto Rico, the story is the same, good mess halls and dormitories, wholesome food, a reproduction of American life with comfort and health provided for in a way I never dreamed of, but as it should be."

PRESIDING BISHOP'S FUND

Church school children at St. Stephen's Church, Sewickley, Pa., have sent to the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief a gift of $50 designated for relief of Greek children. Eight Swedish ships carry food and medical supplies from North America to Greece, the Greek Relief Association reports. In a year they have taken more than 150,000 tons of Canadian wheat, 20,000 tons of other food, and more than $100,000 worth of medical supply, mostly provided by the American Red Cross.

Russian War Relief recently informed the office of the Presiding Bishop's Fund, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York, that medical supplies, seeds and clothing are most needed; ships are going out every week, and every ship carries its portion of Russian relief materials.

DIOCESE OF SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA

Miss Louise Reiley, for the past six years superintendent of the nurses at the Church General Hospital, Hankow, leaves this month for Alaska, where she will assist Dr. Lula M. Disosway at the Hudson Stuck Memorial Hospital, Fort Yukon. Dr. Disosway was forerly with St. Elizabeth's Hospital, Shanghai, so the Fort Yukon Hospital will have two former China missionaries on its staff. Both hope, after peace comes, to return to China, but meantime, are happy to help the Church's work in Alaska. Miss Reiley has secured her transportation, so that her departure now seems assured.

SPECIAL CONENTION OF THE DIOCESE OF WASHINGTON

The special convention called by the Standing Committee of the diocese in session July 29 at St. Stephen's and the Incarnation Church postponed election of a Bishop to succeed the Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman until after the meeting of the General Convention in October.

The Convention confined its action to this one subject, and was in session only two and a half hours.

In several speeches preliminary to voting, the relationship of the presence of the Presiding Bishop in residence in Washington was referred to, but its action was taken because a desire, almost unanimously expressed, to have more time for consideration of nominees for the office of Bishop at the Nation's Capital.

No fears were expressed that the diocese would lose its autonomy through any action taken by the General Convention in making its Bishop "auxiliary" or "assistant" to the Presiding Bishop as the diocese has already, in action taken in its session of May 6, declared its will against such relationship.

Such an arrangement could not be effected with the present Constitution and Canons of the General Convention, and it goes without question that the General Convention would not by any action deprive a diocese of regulating its own affairs.

RELIGION GOES TO THE HOSPITAL

An Editorial

The Rev. George Ossman, Rector of The Monumental Church, took over the duties as Chaplain of the Medical College of Virginia Hospitals on April 15. Mr. Ossman will continue in his present capacity as Rector of Monumental Church.

Increasing demands are being made upon religion these days in the treatment of the sick and the art of healing. In modern hospitals the Chaplain is recognized as an essential member of the staff. The growth and complexity of the modern hospital has made religious needs more imperative than ever, and throughout the country the larger hospitals have found the services of the clergyman indispensable. He ministers to the spiritual needs of the patients and collaborates with the physician in the healing of the whole man, which includes body, mind and spirit. This is no longer an experiment for many institutions have found the services of the trained chaplain invaluable and as necessary for complete healing as that of the physician or the surgeon.

Sometime ago the authorities of the Medical College of Virginia, in Richmond, and the Vestrymen of Monumental Church got together to discuss ways and means whereby these two neighboring institutions could better serve each other. The final result of many conferences was that Mr. Ossman, the Rector of the Church, was invited to become the official Chaplain of the Medical College of Virginia Hospitals. This appointment received the approval and was sanctioned by the Richmond Ministerial Union. This venture is being financed by the Diocesan Missionary Society of the Episcopal Church.

RESOLUTIONS

WHEREAS at the meeting of the Board of Managers of the Kanuga Conferences held at Kanuga Lake, July 20, the Rev. A. Rufus Morgan submitted his resignation as Superintendent of the said conferences for good and compelling reasons; and whereas the Board of Managers regretfully accepted the resignation for the reasons that were given:

Be it resolved:

1. That the Board of Managers place on record its affectionate and grateful appreciation of the devoted services that Mr. Morgan has rendered to the Kanuga Conferences since their inception in the year 1928. Sharing the faith and wisdom of his great and revered chief, Bishop Finlay, he worked with him with ability and faithfulness and loyalty to translate their heavenly vision into the actuality of the mountain of the house of the Lord which is now known as the Kanuga Conferences throughout the length and breadth of the Church. Sharing his chief's anxieties as well as his joys, he has seen Kanuga grow from a daring experiment into the largest summer conference enterprise in Christian Education in the Episcopal Church, involving as it does more than 1,000 people each summer. Under God's never failing guidance Kanuga owes more to him than to any other person

NECROLOGY

Beverly, Mass.—The Rev. Charles Hastings Brown, at the age of 69 years, died on June 20 in his Beverly home to which he retired in 1941 after having been rector of Grace Church, Norwood, for 32 years. Mr. Brown was known beyond the confines of his diocese, in which he took an active part in religious education, by his work for the Order of Sir Galahad for boys, whose manuals he edited and of whose supreme council he was a member.

Mr. Brown graduated from Harvard University, cum laude, in 1896, and from the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, in 1904, having taught in a private school in Salem, Massachusetts, for four years before beginning to study for the ministry. He served as curate of St. James' Church, Roxbury, for two years, and as curate of St. Stephen's Church, Lynn, for two and a half years, there being associated with the late Archdeacon Ernest J. Dennen, rector of the parish, who founded the Order of Sir Galahad, now incorporated as a nation-wide organization for church boys. Mr. Brown was a student by inclination and ability, and he not only taught the Old Testament in the training schools under diocesan auspices, but conducted correspondence classes in Biblical study under the National Council's Department of Religious Education.

Funeral services were held in St Peter's Church, Beverly, on July 23. Mr. Brown was a widower without children, Mrs. Gladys Brown having died in 1922.

ONE WORLD

One Lord, one faith, one baptism,
One Father, God, of all.
This means we're bound to scrap schism,
Smash each dividing wall.

One world was God's creation,
One world His pity moved.
Christ brought one world salvation,
One world His Father loved.

One globe for generations
Held human races kin.
One heart-beat in all nations
Hates sorrow and fights sin.

Why then uphold division?
From strife we crave release.
Welcome the larger vision,
One world, God's world of Peace.

—P. F. Hall.

"MADE LIKE UNTO HIM"

When I consider earthly life
With all its vast perplexity,
There comes again into my mind
The Stone Face of antiquity.

Just as that youth of old did gaze
Each day upon the Great Stone Face,
And gazing at its form, became
Like unto it in every trace,
So does the human heart, I think,
In spite of all its false attires,
With slow but certain change become
Most like the thing it most admires.

Then gaze, my heart, with love on Him
Whom inward eye can surely see,
Who through His Body is revealed,
Who loves and saves humanity.

ADDITIONAL MISSIONARIES INTERNED

Indications Are That Mail May Be Received

New York, N. Y. —The National Council has received official information of the internment of additional missionaries of the Philippine Island staff at the Baguio Internment Camp. They are the Rev. John Mears, with Mrs. Mears and daughter, Kathleen; Church Army Sister Ada Clark; Miss Naomi Skeeters, who was transferred from Shanghai to the Philippines; and Miss Elizabeth Brushfield.

Mr. Mears had been at Upi, and later went north to Donsalan. There has been no direct word of him and his family since the spring of 1942.

A letter sent by the Overseas Division of the National Council indicates that there is a possibility that mail will be delivered to internees. Letters should be addressed:

should be very careful not to mention any public matters, or any matters even remotely concerning the armed forces of the United States or any other nation, or of the personnel thereof. Letters should be short and limited to purely personal and family matters. It is deemed unwise to refer to any informal reports that have been received previously concerning the persons listed or others interned in Manila; to do so might endanger their welfare." The Department ventures no opinion as to time required for delivery of mail to internees.

HYMN OF ALLIED UNITY

This poem was originally read at a meeting in Paris in the Church of L'Oratoire, which celebrated the entrance of the United States into the first World War. Notable religious leaders were present, both French and American. The address was given by Charles Wagner, author of "The Simple Life".

Almighty God, whose will alone
Abides through time a changeless throne;
Our storm-tossed nations, like the sea,
In tides of prayer turn unto Thee.

Lead all our peoples by Thy might;
Inspire our armies by Thy right;
We consecrate our hosts to Thee
To free and serve humanity.

Uphold our allies—may we stand
Steadfast in faith at Thy command.
Lead us as one, that we may save
The holy birthright Heaven gave.

Freedom to call Thy skies our own;
Freedom to reap what we have sown;
Freedom to keep our heartstones bright
By love's pure flame and faith's clear light.
Give to our arms, O Sovereign Will,
Conquests of good suppressing ill;
Not provinces in thraldom bound,
But lands made free as holy ground.

Grant to humanity Thy grace,
And let the glory of Thy face,
Through truth acclaimed and victory won,
Shine on a world where strife is done.

—Ernest Warburton Shurtleff.

With the co-operation of the clergy and laymen, the Diocese of New Jersey hopes to become a testing and proving ground for an effective and stimulating laymen's program, Mr. Campbell says.

No. 3 IN A SERIES: THE CHRISTIAN OFFENSIVE

INDIA CALLS

The time has come when the Church must launch a Christian Offensive designed to take advantage of some of the tremendous opportunities resulting from the war.

—The Presiding Bishop

Time marches on in India and a new day is dawning for this vast seething empire. In the new day, the Church is wanted and needed. Literally millions wait to hear about Christ and His Message. India has probably the fastest growing Anglican diocese in the world: Dornakal, headed by Bihop Azariah.

The Church's answer to India's call should be immediate and substantial; it should be part of the American Church's Christian Offensive which Bishop Tucker sees as essential in the immediate future.

With more than half the area of continental United States India has nearly three times as many people. The impact of the war on India, midway between the two major battlefronts, is bound to cause far-reaching changes in the structure of Indian life. India is also making an impression on the rest of the world. The experience of American troops is sure to result in a quickened interest and a better knowledge of that land on the part of all Americans.

Indian Christians number about six million. Nearly a million are in the Church of India, Burma, and Ceylon, the Indian branch of the Anglican Communion. In a smaller or less populous land, their strength would be more evident, but all India's statistics are huge. Among its 350 million people, 200 languages are spoken. There are more than 240 million Hindus with their countless gods, 78 million Moslems heeding their call to prayer from tall minarets, and smaller numbers, but still counted by millions, of Animists and Sikhs.

Dornakal is the diocese to which more than a third of the 1943 American gift to British missions is designated. Bishop Azariah, the first native-born Indian bishop was elected when the diocese was organized in 1912, so he has been, for more than thirty years, the head of what is now one of India's most active dioceses.

His Christians number more than 230,000. Dornakal Christians have been trained to consider their Church life incomplete unless they are active in carrying the message of Christianity to others. As a result of this constant emphasis on lay evangelism, whole villages come into the Church at one time, requiring long and patient teaching before and after their baptism. They are almost simple untaught country people, living on the narrowest margin above hunger and the ills of poverty.

But many calls remain unanswered. Villages send delegations to wait all day alyong the roadside in order to beg the missionary when he goes by to send a Christian teacher to them. In most cases he must regretfully inform them that there is no one to send.

There are 150 Indian clergy in the diocese but they are too few to carry on the vast work of pastoral care and teaching. Baptisms average more than 8,000 a year. Only one of the clergy is an American, the Rev. George Van B. Shriver. From Bishop Azariah comes the urgent request for advance. With increasing contacts between India and the United States, the time has come to consider seriously sending more adequate help for this our sister Church. The Presiding Bishop and National Council propose that that be done during the coming triennium.

Dornakal is aiding, as the other dioceses are, in the effort to lift the heavy blanket of illiteracy that spreads over all India. More than a thousand village school teachers are on the Dornakal diocesan staff, augmenting the government's educational system. Courageous and often lonely men, in many a village the teachers are the only Christians in the whole community and rarely see a fellow Christian from another place.

Health needs of India are stupendous and as yet largely unmet. Missionary clergy, teachers, doctors and nurses provide the best answer. Church hospitals, far too few in number, give first-aid courses to village teachers and pastors and supply them with first-aid equipment. A motor car is equipped as a traveling clinic but still many Christian villages are not touched.

Dornakal offers its missionaries a wide variety of experience. Some of the missions are a century old and now have third and fourth generation Christians. In other parts Christianity is newly arrived and Christians are few, while there are still other places where no one has yet heard the Christian message.

"It is from here that India calls to America," writes Mr. Shriver. "It is from here, from jungle huts, from the one large coal-mining center of South India, and from distant and neglected areas, that the call comes for help. The cry comes for more priests, for a doctor, for nurses. The opportunity is vast and urgent."

THOUGHTS FOR THE THOUGHTFUL

It isn't love unless it can be translated to service.

There can be no enthronement of Christ without the dethronement of self.

It is better to be in a narrower place with Christ than anywhere else without Him.

When you hear an evil report of anyone, halve it,a nd quarter it, and say nothing about the rest.—Spurgeon.

The trouble with the man who never makes a mistake is that he doesn't know a mistake when he makes one.

God is not a beggar asking us for alms. He is our Benefactor and we are His stewards.

—John Ruskin.

Every duty which we omit obscures some truth which we should have known.

John Ruskin.

Heaven is pure and only the forgiven can go there.

Whatever else you neglect, do not neglect the church! In a chaotic and troubled world it is an answer to our greatest need. Its gospel is the world's salvation, and in its fellowship we shall find our peace.

—Alfred Grant Walton.

There is a joy that will not flee,
Surpassing all this world hath won—
Lo, joy in God, from sea to sea,
Is theirs who trust Him sun to sun!

—Louis Waterman.

"Through all the depths of shame and loss
Sinks the plummet of the Cross,
Never yet abyss was found
Deeper than the Cross could sound."

I am far within the mark when I say that all the armies that ever marched, and all the navies that ever were built, and all the parliaments that ever sat, and all the kings that ever reigned, put together, have not affected the life of man upon this earth as powerfully as has that one solitary life, the life of Christ.

—Phillips Brooks.

Every man is a joint architect with God to make his own future. God makes capacity, man makes character. You cannot dream yourself into a character, you must forge yourself one.

—J. G. Carter.

Victory is too much looked upon merely as something that will bring relief from peril. We do not look to it as something that will also bring the opportunity to achieve a great mission in the world. It is only out of such a faith that men develop their greatest power.

—John F. Dulles.

A doctor was once asked by a patient who had met with a serious accident, "Doctor, how long shall I have to lie here?" The answer, "Only a day at a time," taught the patient a precious lesson. It was the same lesson God had recorded for His people of all ages, long before: The day's portion in its day. Faithful for one short day, long years take care of themselves.

MY RENDEZVOUS

By Florence Selden Peple

I'll have no rendezvous with Death
When I go forth to that grim place
Where hovering always is his face,
I will not let him dim my way.
With all my strength I'll fight past Death,
I'll plunge, I'll leap, I'll fly, I'll pray!

He shall not ever take my hand
To lead me into his dark land,
Or close my eyes, or quench my breath,
Till I have served for Freedom's cause
With life exultant—filled with breath!
Won peace, won honor, won just laws!
When spring comes round again this year,
In spite of Death, I'll still be here!

God knows I mean not to blaspheme!
He gave me will when He gave life.
My country needs rich life—a stream
Of blood red hot in veins kept whole;
Not corpses lying stark and white!
I'll make a tryst with my own soul.
Through shell tossed day and shrieking night
I'll pierce straight on unto my goal,
For I to my pledged Will am true—
With Faith I'll have my rendezvous!

These lines were not intended to compare with the poetic beauty of Alan Seeger's I Have a Rendezvous With Death.

They were written during World War I for a young aviator friend, hoping to suggest a more inspiriting psychology. They were also used in a base hospital in France for wounded soldiers who lay with only will and faith left to take them through.

RESURRECTION SURELY POSSIBLE TODAY

We see many discussions of faith and if a resurrection of the body is possible, and as from experience I can speak I send this small tribute to the Southern Churchman in the hope it might help some one, who even temporarily has felt the way lost. The reason it goes to the Southern Churchman is that the writer since three years of age (1878) was brought up in a home in which this paper was regularly read and Dr. Sparrow revered, and has taken it still under its many changes, and finds therein much that has helped and on occasions somewhat that hindered. When a small child I was taught to have faith in God, faith in prayer, faith in the loving forgiveness of sins, if truly repented of and I was shown that faith, if the right kind, gave a joyousness of life and kept one unspoiled by prosperity and able to endure with courage reverses of many kinds.

Illness, grave illness, came and not only did the Light seem obscured, but it appeared to have gone out. Very wrongly faith became dim and then waned until all was dark. It's too long a story to give details of this rehabilitation of Faith that came, so suffice it to say the beginning came through a sermon preached in simple terms by a young Seminary student. Just a sign board on the road, one had lost, seemed to come in sight and point a straight and direct route beyond this unfortunate detour. To reading my Bible again I returned, and there, sure enough, was a treasure trove and very certain lines pointed to follow. Here I give a few of the passages that lighted again my path and I know if earnestly read and followed can do for others what they have done for this just average person.

First, Believe—"He that promised is faithful. Hebrews 10, verse 23.

Second, Remember—Christ, when others said the woman had wasted precious oil, said, "She hath done what she could." St. Mark 14:8. That with His love and willingness to accept made the deed sufficient.

Third, Rejoice—Read Philippians 4, verses 6, 7, 8, 9.

Fourth, Have Courage—Philippians 4, verse 13, "I can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth me."

By these the Way was pointed to me; open to all through diligent prayer and earnest effort and by God's grace, help, all can achieve and regain what will never again be lost. Also I found much of interest and constructive help in Dr. Alexis Carrel's article on Prayer published in March, 1941, by Reader's Digest. If procurable that could help others a great deal even as Dr. Churchill Gibson is able to be helpful and encouraging right here in Virginia.

I know it to be a definite and indisputable resurrection of the body, for as much as if the body had been entombed, was it lifeless and useless? It's not so much for outward appearances even now but a zest for life has been rekindled, a desire for service to God and man; many useful ways formerly unknown have been learned and put into use for others, which always can bring a reflected joy to a clean heart. Keen interest in general things, such as church services, reading, theaters, association with others, rendering kindly services and sharing things with them have revived. All of us have some way to help another, however small it may be. In this case the resurrection of body and mind and even more of soul has made it possible not to just dwell on what is most desired and not possible still, but to be able to "carry on" happily in spite of disappointments and have no bitterness or, what is more important, no fear or lack of courage to "March breast forward."

From one to three awards will be made annually by the International Council in conjunction with its annual meeting in Chicago. One citation may be made in each of the 38 states and provinces where there are councils, and in some of the larger cities. These will take the form of engraved certificates and emblems.

HAVEN . . .

By J. W. KENNEDY

There are three thoughts (and many more) embedded in verses 20 to 26 of chapter 5 in St. Matthew's Gospel. The thoughts came to me this morning in reverse order. The first has to do with "agreeing with thine adversary quickly." The second with "first be reconciled to thy brother." The third with "your righteousness shall exceed." The King James Version gives this slant on these three thoughts, or at least, this is the way the words speak to me and the lessons that God directs I must needs learn today. The concrete instruction of thought therefore seems to be "do not delay over settling a disagreement or misunderstanding." So often we delay doing the necessary getting together and gettings things straightened out when a dispute arises. Jesus admonishes us to do it immediately, that every moment's procrastination makes it more difficult and complicated, and the final entanglement will be as embarrassing and long-drawn-out as a court trial. Jesus did not mean just agree with one's adversary and tell him he is in the right when he is in the wrong, but not to get all steamed up about it and lose the power to reason, and above all to be honest and generous in the settlement. I could illustrate this with many true stories of automobile collisions where a very simple agreement could have been worked out and many moments of worry and regret eliminated if there had been calmness and control and the proper assumption each of his own responsibility. Do not delay the healing of a breach whenever this is possible. It may involve the cost of admitting one is wrong. Glory be. What a wonderful comedown for pride.

The second thought is really a personal variation of the first one, that is, never let barriers remain between self and any other person. "Brother" here means any other human being. This thought makes it inescapably clear that no gift of praise will be worthy to receive a due portion of glory so long as it is marred by personal peeves, grudges, resentments, unforgiveness, and the like. There seems to be only one method to follow. Go to thy brother and do what is right—ask forgiveness or give it—above all, grow up beyond nursing grievances. No hurt to pride (the inflated self) is to compare with the sinful hurt of continued deliberate breach between two persons. No matter who was to blame. Each is to blame so long as the rift remains. Sunday after Sunday, good church people come to services of Communion and wonder why it is not holy communion for them, when some long neglected anger or judgment or vow concerning a brother is blocking the way. Communion with God depends in large measure on intercommunion among men. This thought needs to be applied to many marital situations.)

The third thought is the root and branch of the other two and perhaps should have been first. It is the definite command that the Christian's righteousness must exceed that of the non-Christian, which means that the Christian must usually be the humble one and take the initiative for restoring community and fellowship. We must do more than others. This is the divine imperative, the hallmark of the Christian plus. It sets the Christian apart and makes a light bright enough for men to see the glory of God within him coming through.

On the cover of a recent issue of Time magazine were these words under a picture of Ingrid Bergman: "Whatever Hollywood's bell tolled for, she gave it." That phrase sets her apart. The portrait of everyone who would follow Christ needs and gets just such a caption: "Whatever Christ's demands, He will give it."

Christ demands the highest.

> "It is not the tale of years that tells the whole
> Of man's success or failure, but the soul
> He brings to them, the songs he sings to them,
> The steadfast gaze he fixes on the goal."

This indeed is dawn.

Report of the Commission on Approaches to Unity to the General Convention

MAJORITY REPORT

"We, the majority of the commission, are ready to envisage union according to the direction forecast in Basic Principles. A minority is not. We are not asking any action by this convention on Basic Principles [the summary of points under discussion] but are printing it as work in progress. It does clearly indicate the direction our negotiations have taken. This direction stands under the judgment of the general Church as does the commission." So runs the majority report, just released, of the Episcopal Church's commission on approaches to unity, in regard to the discussions which have been held with a similar commission from the Northern Presbyterian Church.

Four questions are asked, in this majority report which will be presented to the Episcopal Church's General Convention meeting in Cleveland October 2: "Is the Episcopal Church prepared to move toward organic union (1) with a Church which is willing to accept the historic episcopate while not prepared to accept a particular doctrine concerning it? (2) With a Church which, initially at least, has no order of the diaconate integrated with the order of the priesthood and of the episcopate as one of 'three orders'? (3) With a Church which is prepared to accept the rite of Confirmation 'as a representative rite of the whole Church' but which at present is not prepared to restrict the administration of this rite to bishops only? (4) With a Church which is not asked to subscribe (as our clergy are not asked to subscribe) to any theory of the priesthood beyond that which is implied in the second of the alternate ordination formulae in the service for the Ordering of Priests in the Book of Common prayer?"

"The time has come," states the majority report, in part, "when this Church must fairly face all the implications of her own formal actions in relation to Christian unity. It has become increasingly evident that, without a clear acceptance by this Church of these implications, negotiations with the Presbyterians or with any other churches with which the commission on approaches to unity is in conference, cannot be carried to completion. The department of Church cooperation and union of the Presbyterian Church have given us the assurance of their willingness to recommend to the Presbyterian Church the acceptance of the Historic Episcopate."

In view of the foregoing considerations, the majority report will ask General Convention to continue the commission on approaches to unity and to direct it to carry forward its negotiations with the Presbyterians. It will ask, however, that any plan for the union of the two, before being submitted to the General Convention for final action, be referred to the Lambeth Conference for consideration and advice. This decennial meeting of Anglican bishops from all over the world was scheduled for 1940 and postponed by the war. No date has been set for the next one. Its function is not legislative but advisory.

REPORT OF THE JOINT COMMISSION ON APPROACHES TO UNITY

Section I

General Convention in 1940 appointed the Rt. Rev. E. L. Parsons, Chairman, Bishop Fenner of Kansas, Bishop Strider of West Virginia, Bishop Stevens of Los Angeles, Bishop Wilson of Eau Claire, Rev. Angus Dun, D. D., of Massachusetts, Rev. Francis J. Bloodgood, D. D., of Milwaukee, Rev. Theodore O. Wedel, Ph. D., of Washington, Rev. Alexander C. Zabriskie, S. T. D., of Virginia, Rev. H. E. W. Fosbroke, D. D., of New York, William L. Balthis of Western North Carolina, Dr. Kenneth C. M. Sills of Maine, Clifford P. Morehouse of Milwaukee, John C. Spaulding of Michigan, Dr. William Eddy of Rochester. Dean Fosbroke resigned and the President of the House of Deputies appointed the Rev. Dr. Howard C. Robbins. Dr. Eddy resigned to enter military service, and Dr. Alexander Guerry of Tennessee was appointed.

The Commission asked Bishop Oldham of Albany and Bishop Burton of Haiti to serve as associates of the Commission. In 1942, Bishop Burton resigned because he had accepted election as Bishop of Nassau.

The Commission has recently appointed a Theological Committee: Rev. Dr. Charles Lowry, Chairman, Rev. Dr. W. Russell Bowie, Rev. Dr. Leicester C. Lewis, Rev. Dr. Cuthbert Simpson, Rev. Dr. Theodore O. Wedel. The Commission records its gratitude to the Theological Committee for its study and report on the Diaconate.

The Commission has met semi-annually with the Presbyterians. It has not been possible, to date, to arrange a meeting with any of the Lutheran Churches as they are engaged in problems of their own reunion.

Reports on the relations of the Commission with the Reformed Episcopal Church and with the Methodist Church respectively are here submitted.

At the last General Convention the House of Bishops authorized the Commission to issue a pamphlet on the subject of "The Lambeth Conference and the Reformed Episcopal Church." The purpose was to make available certain information recently brought to light which had a bearing on the report made to the Lambeth Conference of 1888, by the American Bishops in regard to Reformed Episcopalian Orders. This pamphlet was sent to all Bishops of the Anglican Communion with the idea of offering a plan of procedure if their replies indicated a willingness for it. The pamphlets were ready to go in the mail the week of the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor. Quite a large number of Anglican missionary jurisdictions were immediately cut off from all communication. The mailings went out as widely as possible but no one can tell how many, outside the borders of the United States, may have reached their destinations. Scattered replies have been received from American Bishops, from others in Canada and the West Indies, in England, Ireland, India, South Africa, New Zealand, Ceylon and Australia. All have been favorable to an approach on our part to the Reformed Episcopal Church but there have not been enough of them to warrant any definite steps. In the meantime the Commission of the Reformed Episcopal Church has developed a strong reluctance to any further advances. Apparently matters are at a standstill at least for the duration of the war.

The commission on Approaches to Unity held a profitable meeting with the Commission on Interdenominational Relations of the Methodist Church in Cleveland, Ohio, December 10, 1942. Papers presenting the positions of the respective Churches were read by members of the two Commissions on the following subjects—"Doctrinal Standards," "Polity," "The Ministry," and "The Sacraments." These papers have been published in the Anglican Theological Review.

In the discussions of the common faith, the conferring Commissions found themselves agreed in their acceptance of the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments as containing the Word of God and furnishing the supreme standard of faith and morals; in the belief that these Scriptures sought to be placed within the reach of all men freely; and in the assurance that within the Catholic fellowship there is room for diversity of interpretation. They agreed that the faith and doctrine of the Church should be set forth in acknowledged standards; accordingly they acknowledged the Apostles and Nicene Creeds as declarations of that faith and doctrine, which has served to unite the Church Universal on a common basis of Scriptural truth and fact and to protect it from fundamental error; and they recognized later formularies (such as the Thirty-nine Articles and the Twenty-five Articles) to be historic expressions of the Christian faith as they have severally received it.

The conferring Commissions were at one in acknowledging that the Sacraments of Baptism and the Lord's Supper are divinely instituted as effectual signs and seals of the saving grace of God and that through them members are admitted, renewed and strengthened within the Body of Christ to form one fellowship in Him of life and service in believing and thankful dependence upon His Spirit.

They were agreed that the Ministry is the gift of the Lord Jesus Christ to the Church; that in accordance with His purpose, it is a ministry not of any section of the Church but of the Church Universal; that He calls to this sacred service whom He wills; that the admission to it is through prayer and the laying on of hands by persons commissioned thereto; in the faith that God will bestow enabling grace on those whom He has called through His Son.

They were agreed in the faith that the Church is grounded not in the will of men but in the eternal will of God, Who gathers men into a fellowship rooted in Christ and sustained by the power of His Spirit; that the life of the Church is a life of worship toward God, of growth in grace and of service to mankind; and that the Church is charged with the Divine Mission to bear witness to Christ and to proclaim to the whole world the gospel of the redeeming grace of God through Him.

A sub-committee of the two Commissions has prepared an agenda for another meeting at which the similarities and differences of the two Churches, in regard to their doctrines of the ministry and sacraments, will be studied further.

Section II

Your Commission submits its report with a profound sense that through the events of our time as well as through His revelation of His will in Jesus Christ, God is imperatively calling upon all who believe in Him to become one flock under one Shepherd, so that the world may believe in its Redeemer. We are under the judgment of God. Church unity is not a goal of human devising; it is the will of God. It is not merely a pious aspiration; it is essential if the Church is to live and fulfill its mission. It is not remote from the need of our age; upon us the end of the world has come, and the events of the last decades have shown that unless the Church becomes an active factor in human affairs, as a united community of faith which transcends nationality, race and class, and therefore can hold divided groups in cooperation, further and more destructive ideological wars are inevitable. The ecumenical movement is the most important fact about Christianity today. It is the Lord's doing and it is marvelous in our eyes. Of this movement, the negotiations between the Protestant Episcopal Church and the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A., to fulfill the declared purpose of achieving organic union, are a small but very important part. Whatever the difficulties and the costs, however long the process, we dare not turn back.

Steps in Our Negotiations

At the General Convention of 1937 your Commission was charged with a specific yet far reaching task. The course of our negotiations with the representatives of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. is reflected in various documents which we have offered to the two churches for study and criticism. These have been made public in order to keep the churches informed of the developments and for the benefit of the resulting comments. These documents represent a logical and natural development from the more peripheral to the more central issues involved in wrestling with the problem of reunion.

Your commission began by considering with the Presbyterian Department of Church Cooperation what appeared to be an immediate concern—namely, how to make possible in local areas in which need was obvious a shared church life. To meet this need some way had to be found to create a ministry recognized, even for limited interchange, by both Churches. This stage of our negotiations is represented by the document known at the Concordat. The two Commissions however, soon found the base of their deliberations widened by being led to a consideration of the more fundamental problems involved in securing a future ministry which could be acceptable to the two churches. The document known as Joint Ordination marks this stage of our journey.

Wrestling with the questions presented by these more specific issues led us to the conclusion that the solution of any particular problems could only come in the light of a more comprehensive plan for a United Church. We were forced to ask ourselves what type of a United Church we envisaged, and to set forth at least a rough ground plan of such a church so that issues which had to be settled could come to the surface and be honestly faced.

The document known as Basic Principles in its successive forms is the result of these deliberations. After launching upon the work of sketching a first scheme for a United Church, the two Commissions felt it wise to withdraw the proposals for Supplemental or Joint Ordination. They felt that all problems connected with interim arrangements, or with special needs and areas, could only be satisfactorily solved in the light of the more fully developed plan for a United Church.

Basic Principles is not a finished piece of work. It is still in a fluid stage. Indeed, the form in which it comes to you as part of this report contains important modifications and amendments adopted by the Commission of both Churches since its last publication. These modifications are the results of many comments and criticisms received by the Commissions and of further study. Your Commission is aware of the fact that this document still needs much clarification and development. Certain elements in it have not as yet received more than preliminary consideration.

Underlying Assumptions

Our own discussions, and the widespread discussions in the Church, have increasingly led us to the conclusion that the issues before us are deeper than those explicitly embodied in Basic Principles.

For this reason your Commission has concluded that its chief duty at this time is to help the Church understand what are the underlying issues upon which decisions must be reached, and the assumptions upon which these decisions must be based, if the negotiations with the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. are to be carried forward. First we list these assumptions:—

1. The aim of our negotiations is to achieve organic union between the two Churches rather than the lesser goals of cooperation and federation. Your Commission has envisaged a Church spiritually greater and richer than either of the two bodies in separation to which each will contribute all its heritage of faith and practice, and in which each will recognize that those things it regards as precious have been preserved; a Church within whose unity there will be considerable diversity in forms of worship, and in modes of local organization and practice, and as great a diversity of interpretation of the faith and order of the Church as exists today in the Anglican Communion. Such unity will not destroy the right of heirs of either tradition to hold and promote their own particular views within the larger family of the United Church, as today differing views are championed within our own. Indeed, it is desirable that diverse views should be proclaimed, so that as much as possible of the spiritual inheritance of Christendom may gradually be appropriated by the United Church. It will be easier to share them with others after we have become members of one Church family, for then there will no longer be the danger of their being regarded as walls of exclusion.

2. The Lambeth Quadrilateral, issued in 1888 and reaffirmed several times subsequently, stated the essentials which must be preserved in any union to which an Anglican Church is party. The four points are:—

a) The Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testament, as containing all things necessary to salvation and as being the rule and ultimate standard of faith.

b) The Apostles' Creed as the Baptismal Symbol, and the Nicene Creed as the sufficient statement of the Christian faith.

c) The two Sacraments ordained by Christ Himself —Baptism and the Supper of the Lord—ministered with the unfailing use of Christ's words of institution and of the elements ordained by Him.

d) The Historic Episcopate, locally adapted in the methods of its administration to the varying needs of the nations and peoples called of God into the unity of His Church.

Your Commission has assumed that if these four features were agreed upon, differences on other points would present no insuperable barriers to the beginning of a united church life. Very important as are Confirmation and the Diaconate, to mention but two items, they are not matters which must be fully settled in advance. In fact, the House of Bishops in 1886 considered a request to make Confirmation a precondition of unity and did not do so. Nor did your Commission feel free to insist upon particular theories of the Episcopate, the Ministry and the Sacraments which, though widely held within the Anglican Communion, have not been declared binding upon its members.

3. The Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. is part of the Holy Catholic Church. We have felt that this is the view of the bulk of Anglican thought, and also that it is a necessary implication of the wording of the so-called Declaration of Purpose: "The two Churches, one in the faith of the Lord Jesus Christ, the Incarnate Word of God, recognizing the Holy Scriptures as the supreme rule of faith, accepting the two Sacraments ordained by Christ, and believing that the visible unity of Christ's Church is the will of God, hereby formally declared their purpose to achieve organic union between their respective Churches." Furthermore, the Presbyterian Church has always maintained that it is part of the Holy Catholic Church and is unwilling to negotiate on any other basis. To say that the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. is part of the Holy Catholic Church is to say that its ministry is a real ministry of the Word and Sacraments, and that its Sacraments are genuine means of grace.

4. In carrying on negotiations for unity it is important not only to explore the differences of faith and practice, but also to recognize and build upon the great body of Christian belief which the two Churches hold in common. In trying to understand what are the similarities and differences, your Commission was governed by the official formularies of the Presbyterian Church, rather than by vagaries of individual members or by instances of lax administration of its standards, even as we insisted that the Episcopal Church be similarly judged. On the basis of such official formularies, your Commission has been convinced that there is substantial agreement in the fundamental doctrines, such as those concerning God, Christ, the Holy Spirit, man, sin, salvation, the Church, Baptism and the Holy Communion.

5. Final action on the present negotiations will be deferred till after the Lambeth Conference has been consulted. Though the Lambeth Conference has no legislative authority, yet its moral influence is so great throughout the Anglican Communion that no branch thereof would feel justified in taking irrevocable action on matters of grave importance to all other Anglican bodies without consulting it.

6. The accomplishment of organic union with the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. is a slow process. Changes in our Constitution will be involved in any plan of union, and these will require action by at least two successive General Conventions; drawing up the Constitution and Canons of the United Church, and arranging the detailed matters of property, is bound to be a slow process; educating the constituency of the two Churches so that the members of each know what is proposed and what is not proposed, so that they understand and appreciate the genius of the

An Important Statement

In the current issue of "Christianity and Crisis," excerpts from an extremely important document are published. This paper was prepared in Geneva by the Study Department of the World Council of Churches. The document contains eleven points, as reported by Dr. John C. Bennett, upon which the Christians of the world, in the Protestant group may find agreement. Here they are:

1. The Church has a specific task in relation to peacemaking and the creation of international order.
2. The Church performs its task in this realm by being itself a worldwide fellowship under one Lord in which national differences are transcended.
3. The Church is to announce to the nations that Jesus Christ is Lord over all men and all powers.
4. The Church is to proclaim the divine commandment concerning the order which is to reign in the world.
5. The Church is to call all nations to repentance for their common guilt and to work for their reconciliation.
6. The Church is to proclaim that international relations must be subordinated to law.
7. The Church is to proclaim that the state is neither an aim in itself nor a law unto itself and that its God-given function is to maintain an order based on law which guarantees fundamental human rights.
8. The Church is to proclaim that political power must be exercised with a sense of responsibility toward all those who are affected by that power.
9. The Church is to proclaim that Society must provide all of its members with the opportunity to fulfill a meaningful vocation and that it should provide conditions of social security for all.
10. The Church is to proclaim that the nations are interdependent and that they are all to share in the resources of the earth.
11. The Church is to proclaim that no people can claim the right to rule over another people, and that the dominating purpose of colonial administration must be to prepare colonial peoples for self-government.

All of the principles set forth in the famous Atlantic Charter are implied in these eleven points. However, in this statement representative of the Churches, the emphasis is placed upon the rights of individuals. The source of authority in government rests in God, and God through the Christian revelation is interested in persons. Secular government without a religious background tends to become an end in itself.

There is another significant note to this statement. It is this, the Church clearly has a duty to perform, and that is to see that "the structures of social life," are founded upon God-given principles.

It is suggested that small groups in our parishes study these eleven points. Analyze them carefully. If possible draw a statement in regard to them and see that such a statement is given publicity. If enough Christian people will bestir themselves and become interested in all these statements relative to a new world-wide order, perhaps the voice of Christendom will be listened to at the council tables of the world.

Approaches to Unity

We print in this issue the majority report of the Joint Commission on Approaches to Unity. It is our sincere hope that this report will be read thoughtfully by a large group of our subscribers. It is only through an enlightened lay membership that the deputies to General Convention can act intelligently. We advocate the readers of this report writing to their deputies and the Bishop of the diocese, expressing their honest views of this report.

Next week we will publish the minority report of the Joint Commission. We suggest that it, too, be read carefully and likewise the views of the readers be expressed in letters to their deputies.

Frankly we are disappointed that the Commission could not hand in a report on which all members of the Commission, at least, could agree. We believe in the sincerity of the signers of the minority report. We cannot agree with their suggestion that an entire new commission be appointed, composed largely of parish priests. The average parish priest has not the time to devote to intensive study. The men on the faculties of our seminaries have both the time and the talents to study the theological issues involved. We would agree that it might not be a bad idea to add a few men engaged in active parish work. The majority of the Commission should certainly be trained scholars.

This leads to another suggestion. We have felt for some time that the lay membership of the Church has not been sufficiently instructed as to the steps that have been taken in the past and are contemplated in the future. We hope that General Convention will accept the majority report, and that continued Joint Commission on Approaches to Unity, will find new means to keep the laity informed, as to the progress that is being made, and the set-backs that may be encountered.

other, and so that they desire the merger, is essential to an effective union, and this cannot be achieved over-night.

But before the process of living a common life can begin, certain issues must be faced and certain decisions taken. In the judgment of your Commission the Episcopal Church has come to a valley of decision after fifty-seven years of intermittent negotiations with the Presbyterian Church. We have indicated what we regard as the assumptions which must be made if our negotiations are to pass beyond the stage of pleasant conversation. We turn now to the problems which must be faced.

C

Inescapable Problems

It is important in all serious negotiations to achieve the utmost clarity regarding the underlying assumptions involved. We cannot rest in the formulation of general principles. This is the case with respect to negotiations for peace among nations and for the unity of Churches. All men of good will agree that we should seek peace among the nations and unity in the Church. Wide agreement can be found as to certain of the fundamental conditions which are involved in international peace or in ecclesiastical unity. Such agreements do not, however, deliver us from the arduous necessity of applying the principles to actual circumstances.

Your Commission was charged by General Convention with the task of framing plans whereby the goal of organic union with the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. might be achieved. The attempt to frame such plans faces us with inescapable problems.

The problems arise out of the fact that the two Churches concerned have been living apart for several centuries have and developed traditions which differ in many respects. While both Churches officially acknowledge the Holy Scriptures as the ultimate rule of faith, and treasure the ancient creeds, they differ in the emphasis they give to aspects of that common faith and with respect to the weight to be given to the Church's authority as the Spirit-guided interpreter of the Scriptures. More obvious are the differences between their traditions of worship. One is a liturgical Church, the other has not been bound by set forms of common prayer. Our communion gives a larger place to sacramental worship as compared with the ministry of the Word than does the Presbyterian Church. In the area of polity or Church government there are many close parallels, but differences of usage and nomenclature. Admittedly the most stubborn problems arise out of the fact that we are an "episcopal" Church and they are a "presbyterian" Church. Here the difficulties to be overcome do not arise chiefly in the realm of Church government but arise with respect to the orders of ministers and their functions and the manner of their ordination. Our Episcopal Church has maintained the threefold order of bishops, priests and deacons. The Presbyterian Church has been served throughout many generations by the single order of presbyters. We have required that all ministers should be ordained by bishops. Among them the Presbytery has been the representative organ of the Church in giving the authority to minister the Word and the Sacraments. Closely connected with the problems presented by the differences are those concerning our cherished rite of episcopal confirmation, and the place which the Presbyterian Church has given to the Ruling Elder in the spiritual discipline and oversight of the congregation as well as in the government of the Church.

We do not enumerate those many difficulties as a reflection of discouragement or to produce discouragement. Other unions have already been achieved which had to overcome many of these obstacles. But it is well for us to face honestly the realities of the problem and the constingness in thought and adaptation and practice which are involved.

If we are to take seriously the goal of unity in variety and a genuine flowing together of two distinctive traditions, we must be prepared to decide what measure of diversity in worship and interpretation and organization shall be welcomed in the United Church. If we are to recognize the sacred reality of the communion with God in which the Presbyterians and their forefathers have lived, we must determine some way in which they can recognize their inheritance as truly continued and joined with ours in the life of one household of faith and worship. We must seek to become heirs of what God has given them as we desire them to become heirs of what God has given us. If we cannot agree to accept the Holy Scriptures as the ultimate Rule of faith and the ancient creeds as a sufficient statement of that faith, and trust the essential integrity of the two Churches to grow together into a fuller interpretation of that faith, we shall be asking for a joint formulation of the standards of faith more detailed than any which are now binding on the membership of our own communion. If we make particular interpretations of episcopacy or orders or sacraments, which are earnestly held by important elements within our Church but are not in practice required today in our Church, a condition of reunion, we shall be asking of the Presbyterians more than we ask of our own membership.

These are in outline some of the inescapable problems any Commission you appoint must face in carrying out your mandate. We believe that by much patience and prayerful conferences they can be overcome. But this Church should not set herself to the continuance of this task unless it is prepared to bear with all the difficulties and strains which are involved for us and for the Presbyterians alike.

Issues to be Faced

The issues, accordingly, which confront the Episcopal Church in a reunion movement with a non-Episcopal Church are momentous. These issues are ultimately theological. Your Commission has been mindful of this fact. Although the negotiations with the Presbyterian Church have not resulted in a strictly theological document, theological considerations have constituted the background of all our discussions.

Before venturing to define some of these issues in detail, we would emphasize a preliminary consideration. The Commission has not attempted to suggest decisions beyond a limited area of approach. As already pointed out, full organic union will be the result of a long process. Decisions will have to be made all along the road. The initial decisions, crucially important though they are, do not involve more than a few first steps leading to a ministry recognized throughout the uniting Churches which will open the way to a common sacramental life in one communion and fellowship. Clearly, no merging of Church administrations or conciliar governments, nor blending of worship traditions, can even be thought of until these prior steps toward a united Church life are taken.

Keeping this in mind, we venture to list some of the issues which have confronted your Commission in its negotiations, and which the Church must face if negotiations are to continue. For the sake of clear and honest report, they are phrased somewhat sharply.

Is the Episcopal Church prepared to move toward organic union:

1. With a Church which is willing to accept the historic episcopate while not prepared to accept a particular doctrine concerning it?

2. With a Church which, initially at least, has no order of the diaconate integrated with the order of the priesthood and of the episcopate as one of "three orders"?

3. With a Church which is prepared to accept the rite of Confirmation "as a representative rite of the whole Church," but which at present is not prepared to restrict the administration of this rite to bishops only?

4. With a Church which is not asked to subscribe (as our clergy are not asked to subscribe) to any theory of the priesthood beyond that which is implied in the second of the alternate ordination formulae in the service for the Ordering of Priests in the Book of Common Prayer?*

These are but a few formulations of issues which your Commission has faced in its negotiations. The document known as "Basic Principles" indicates that we are prepared to envisage first steps toward a united Church by accepting diversities, so long as fundamentals of Faith and Order are preserved. It cannot be emphasized too often, however, that a first step is only a first step. The door would not be closed to much further merging of traditions, many more negotiations, and an eventual achievement of desirable uniformity. For example, it is obvious that any general interchange of ministries, particularly on the parish level, must wait until many of the diversities which may exist at the outset are integrated. Furthermore, both Churches can take seriously the preamble to "Basic Principles" with its implied Bill of Rights. Retention on the part of the membership of our Church of our full heritage is not barred, nor the championing of convictions regarding any elements in it, so long as these are not maintained as well of exclusion in the larger fellowship. Your Commission, after much wrestling, is persuaded that union with a non-Episcopal Church is impossible unless it begins on the basis of great fundamentals, leaving to time and to the leading of the Holy Spirit the solving of the further problems along the road to a uniform Church life. Our first task is to open the way for the rebirth of the larger Family of God. God the Holy Spirit can then in the One Body lead us into all truth.

We have exposed as frankly as we can some of the issues we have faced in our negotiations. We the majority of the Commission are ready to envisage union according to the direction forecast in "Basic Principles." A minority is not. We are not asking any action by this Convention on Basic Principles but are printing it as work in progress. It does clearly indicate the direction our negotiations have taken. This direction stands under the judgment of the General Church, as does the Commission which has walked this pathway.

E

Conclusion and Resolutions

The Commission, therefore, offers the following preamble and resolution:

Whereas: 1. This time of world conflict, of social upheaval, and of earnest hope of a better world to come, is for us the day of the Lord, in which Almighty God is calling this Church to bold and constructive action with regard to Christian unity;

2. The time has come when this Church must fairly face all the implications of her own formal actions in relation to Christian Unity;

3. It has become increasingly evident that, without a clear acceptance by this Church of these implications, negotiations with the Presbyterians or with any other Churches with which the Commission on Approaches to Unity is in conference, cannot be carried to completion;

4. The Department of Church Cooperation and Union of the Presbyterian Church have given us the assurance of their willingness to recommend to the Presbyterian Church the acceptance of the Historic Episcopate:

Therefore Be It Resolved (the House of ..... concurring)

1. That the Joint Commission on Approaches to Unity be continued;

2. That the Joint Commission on Approaches to Unity be directed to carry forward its negotiations with representatives of the Presbyterian Church in the United State of America;

3. That any plan for the union of the two Churches, before being submitted for final action to the General Convention, be referred to the Lambeth Conference for consideration and advice;

4. That the Treasurer of General Convention be directed to provide the sum of $5,000.00 for the expenses of the Commission during the coming Triennium.

APPENDIX I

Basic Principles proposed for the Union of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, and the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America.

The type of unity envisaged in these proposals allows for much diversity of organization and worship. Unity would be "organic" in the same way as churches of separate geographical areas, yet of variant organization and worship, were one in the early Church.

The two Churches which have developed distinctive traditions or types of witness, worship and organization during the four centuries of their separated histories, would each preserve its tradition. But the traditions or types would be associated in the United Church and enrich each other. The immediate steps in amalgamation would occur in the sphere of order and administration. Two such steps are envisaged in these proposals: the adoption of the historic episcopate in a constitutional form and the adoption of the ruling eldership. No attempt however, would be made to abolish diversity in worship or local organization until greater uniformity resulted naturally from fellowship in the United Church.

We, therefore, set forth the following as essentials of the proposed United Church:

I

The Bible shall be received as the record of God's revelation of Himself to man and as the rule and ultimate standard of faith and life; the Apostles' and Nicene Creeds, the statement of the Church's faith; the Confession of Faith and the Book of Common Prayer shall be held to contain the system of doctrine taught in Holy Scripture, as the two Churches have respectively received it.

II

Forms of worship authorized by the existing Churches shall be continued unless and until the United Church agrees on a common form. The two Sacraments instituted by Christ, Baptism and the Lord's Supper, shall be observed in the United Church. Baptism shall always be by water and in the Name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost. In the celebration of the Holy Communion, Bread and Wine shall be used, and the service shall contain at least the following:

A commemoration of our Lord's death and passion and the recital of His words and acts in the institution of the Sacrament, in or with

A prayer of thanskgiving and consecration;

A presentation of the elements to God and a self-offering to Him of the communicants;

An invocation of the Holy Spirit;

The Lord's Prayer;

The Apostles' or Nicene Creed as a symbol of the Faith and Unity of the Church.

III

The government of the Church shall be administered through a series of graduated councils or judicatories. These shall be, in ascending order, such as the (vestry or session); the (diocesan convention or presbytery); (the synod); (the General Convention or General Assembly). They shall each, except the lowest, include a bishop or bishops, presbyters and ruling elders, sitting together with equal rights and powers, except as herein otherwise provided.

The historic episcopate in a constitutional form shall be accepted as a part of the basis of union.

The presbytery, or council of presbyters and ruling elders (in which presbyters alone participate in ordinations), shall be accepted as a part of the basis of union. Its powers and functions shall be set forth in a constitution to be adopted by the uniting Churches.

Through the Episcopate shall be transmitted to the United Church the life, ministry, ordinances and Sacraments of the Holy Catholic Church as found in the Churches holding the Historic Episcopate.

Through the Presbytery shall be transmitted to the United Church the life, ministry, ordinances and Sacraments of the Holy Catholic Church as found in the Reformed Churches holding the Presbyterian System.

The union of the Episcopate and the Presbytery, which in the two traditions have respectively represented the Church universal, assures an administrative direction and leadership under which, without sacrifice of inherited principle, the members of the two Churches may work and worship together and grow into one fellowship.

The Bishop shall officiate with the Presbytery on behalf of the whole Church at ordinations; shall preside at or take order for the meetings of the Presbytery or Diocesan Convention, and at inductions, installations and similar offices. A s Chief Pastor, he shall perform such other functions as shall be set forth in a Constitution to be adopted by the uniting Churches, among which shall be to shepherd the congregations within his diocese or presbytery, to take special care for the spread of the Gospel, and the increase of the churches, and to counsel with pastors and candidates for the ministry.

The presbyters shall retain all of the duties and powers now provided in the Constitutions or Canons of the Uniting Churches, unless and until otherwise ordered by the United Church.

The ruling elder shall have the status and functions set forth in Section V below.

IV

The ordaining of presbyters or priests and the making of deacons or licentiates, shall be by the Bishop and the Presbyters of the presbytery of jurisdiction, who shall join in the laying on of hands. Consecration to the episcopate shall be by at least three bishops, and by the electing presbytery which shall participate in the laying on of hands, through presbyters appointed by the presbytery.

The Churches look forward to the merging of the licentiate as it exists at present in the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America and the diaconate as it exists at present in the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States. The difference presents a problem for further negotiation. It is agreed, however, that this diversity, though preventing immediate full interchange of ministries, shall not be a bar to intercommunion, nor to mutual recognition of ministries and sacraments.

V

The Ruling Eldership shall be accepted. Ruling Elders shall be communicants of faith, wisdom and character, chosen by the membership of a local church, to serve with the minister in the oversight and leadership of the congregation; and with presbyters in the superior councils of the Church when elected thereto. They shall take vows of loyalty to the doctrine and government of the Church and shall be set apart by prayer and the laying on of hands by the minister.

VI

The presbyters and the laity shall have equal voice in the councils of the Church with the episcopate, and the official duties and powers of the bishops shall be determined by constitutional enactments requiring the concurrence of the representative legislative bodies of the Church.

VII

The present constitutional rights of congregations shall in no wise be affected by this union unless and until the United Church shall see fit to modify them.

VIII

Admission to the Holy Communion shall be by the minister in association with the ruling elders. Confirmation shall be adopted, and recognized as a rite of the Church through which increase of the gifts of grace is bestowed by the Holy Spirit, and by which baptized persons publicly assume for themselves the full responsibilities of Church membership undertaken at baptism, and are publicly admitted to the Holy Communion. Confirmation, as a representative rite of the whole Church, shall be administered by a bishop or by a presbyter duly authorized by the bishop and presbytery.

Until uniformity in the administration of the rite of confirmation shall have been achieved in the United Church, it is agreed that diversity in this rite shall not be a bar to intercommunion nor to mutual recognition of ministries and sacraments.

WIND IT UP

"It's the first day of spring," said Ann, with a gleam of mischief in her eye, as she skipped to the breakfast table.

"So it is," said Aunt Bee, sitting down beside her. "And it's a certain little girl's birthday, too. Come to my room after breakfast, Ann. I have a gift that I've been saving for ten years."

"Ten years!" exclaimed Ann with a little laugh. "Why, how funny! How could you—when I'm only ten years old?"

"That's just it," said Aunt Bee mysteriously. "My father gave it to me on my tenth birthday—and the first time I saw you, I made up my mind I'd give it to you on yours."

"Your father—I mean our grandpa—died soon after that, didn't he?" asked Stanton.

"Yes—the very next month," said Aunt Bee. "That's why I've always loved it so—the birthday gift I've been saving for Ann."

Ann was so excited that she swallowed her breakfast in a hurry—and then had to wait until every one else was through. But at last Aunt Bee rose from the table.

"May I come too—and see what it is?" asked Stanton. He was never jealous when anything nice came to his little sister.

Aunt Bee looked at Ann, and the little girl caught Stanton's hand. "Sure!" she said, and they skipped upstairs together.

Aunt Bee went to her bureau drawer and took out a flat square box—red all over and gold at the edges.

"What a pretty box!" exclaimed Ann.

"Yes," said Aunt Bee, "I looked all over town to find a box that would exactly fit. You may open the box yourself, Ann. But it's heavy—don't drop it."

Carefully Ann took off the cover, and there was the dearest little flat gold-colored statue about a foot high. It was a splendid, mettlesome horse, rearing up so that it looked like he would surely throw off the magnificent rider who sat on his back, in full uniform.

"Teddy Roosevelt!" shouted Stanton, who was always reading history books and was a hero-worshipper of Roosevelt the First. "It's when he was a Rough Rider, isn't it, Auntie?"

"Yes," smiled Aunt Bee. "And the little round clock in the middle of the statue will help Ann always to be on time. You must wind it up every night, dear. It will stop if you don't."

Ann's birthday was a very happy day. In the afternoon, ten little girls came to her party. The cake was lovely, with its ten tiny pink candles standing up out of the white frosting.

Before she went to bed, Ann took down her clock and wound it up. She did it almost every night for a whole week.

One morning Ann awoke with a headache. She hurried into her clothes and stumbled downstairs.

"My toast is burned, and my egg's too hard," grumbled Ann. Everything went wrong. By school time, Ann was in tears.

"Child," said Mother at last, "what is the matter with you? Are you sick?"

"It's just my head," sobbed Ann. "But I want to go to school—please do let me, Mother!"

Aunt Bee came running to take Ann's temperature. She showed the thermometer to Mother; and Mother said firmly 'No school for you today, Ann. Back to bed you go."

"Wh-what is it?" wailed Ann. "Small-pox or something?"

Mother smiled. "No, dear, not that—but measles, maybe, or chicken pox. We'll have Dr. Saunders come over and tell us."

That afternoon Aunt Bee was sitting beside Ann's bed, reading to her. It was measles, all right, and Ann couldn't read for herself for quite a while, the doctor said.

"But I needn't have been so cross," sighed Ann. I'm always getting that way, Aunt Bee—even when I'm not sick. Everything makes me fly off the handle. Why?"

Aunt Bee looked up at the little clock, and it gave her an idea.

"See what the clock's saying!" she exclaimed. "It says half-past seven—and here it's three o'clock in the afternoon."

"It stopped; but I set it right yesterday morning," said Ann.

"You did? Then you forgot to wind it."

"Oh," said Ann.

"I wonder if that's what my little girl does with herself," said Aunt Bee seriously. "She wants to be good—and she sets the hands of her heart-clock right—but then she forgets to wind it."

"Wind it, Auntie Bee?" asked Ann in surprise.

"Yes, dear. Every morning, when a little girl takes time to ask Jesus to help her to be good all day, she is winding up the clock of her heart. But if she forgets—well, you know what happened to your Roosevelt clock."

"I see! I see!" cried Ann, sitting up in bed. "I'll wind up my heart-clock every day, an' then it'll keep running all the time!"

I HAVE TO LIVE WITH MYSELF

One day a bank messenger, when emptying a waste paper basket, after the others had gone, noticed a peculiar looking parcel lying behind it. He opened it and found that it contained a roll of money.

"Isn't that lucky," he said to himself; "now I can go to college as I've always wanted to do. I'll never amount to anything unless I can get some more education, and here's my chance."

He put the roll in his inside pocket, finished work, locked the building, and hurried home.

Somehow, he put off telling his parents about it until after supper. He began to wonder whose it was, and how it happened to get into the building. "Some one must have dropped it as they were going out of the bank," he concluded. "I wonder if they have missed it."

After a while he went up to his room and looked at the money. "H'm," he

HEAD OF HONGKONG DIOCESAN SCHOOL FOR DEAF IN NEW YORK

Among Chinese students now in New York is Miss Luk Wa Li, head of the Hongkong diocesan school for the deaf, under Bishop Ronald Hall. Miss Li was on her way to the United States for special study when Hongkong fell, but hopes to resume her work at the earliest opportunity. Meanwhile for six months in St. Louis and for a month at Vassar she has been studying methods of educating the deaf. The school teaches the children lip reading and speaking, and does not teach sign language. In New York Miss Li has been staying at Pierce House, the recently opened Church residence in St. George's Parish, and at Windham House, the Church residence for graduate students. She hopes to attend the Cincinnati School of Applied Religion.

The school in Hongkong, the first of its kind in south China, was opened six years ago with six students, and had fifty-four, aged 5 to 18, when Miss Li came away. The school is temporarily closed now and the children were sent home long since, but word has reached Miss Li that the building is not damaged and furthermore that one of the teachers now interned has somehow been able to sell the school furniture and to use the money from the sale for the support of two little pupils who had no homes.

MISSIONARIES IN WUHU, CHINA, INTERNED IN SHANGHAI

The missionaries in Wuhu, China, were sent to Shanghai and interned in the Columbia Country Club, the middle of July, according to a cable just received at Church headquarters from Arthur J. Allen, of Kunming. This refers to Sister Constance, Miss Laura Clark, secretary; Harry B. Taylor, M. D., C. V. Rees, M. D., and Mr. B. W. Lanphear. St. Lioba's Mission, Wuhu, where they have been staying, Mr. Allen reports as now "occupied," presumably by the Japanese military. The information would indicate that Sister Constance and Mr. Lanphear have both sufficiently recovered from their long and serious illness to travel to Shanghai.

HOST BISHOP FOR EPISCOPAL CONVENTION

The Rt. Rev. Beverley Dandridge Tucker, Jr., Bishop of Ohio, will be the host of the 54th Triennial General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the U. S. A., which will convene in Cleveland on October 2, 1943.

Bishop Tucker is a younger brother of the presiding Bishop of the Episcopal Church, Henry St. George Tucker, and comes from a family with distinction both in the church and civic life of these United States. His father, for whom he was named, was for years Bishop of Southern Virginia. There were thirteen children in the family, nine boys and four girls. Their mother was born at Mt. Vernon, and their grandfather, Colonel Augustine Washington, was the last private owner of George Washington's estate which has become a public shrine. Four sons went into the ministry, two others became missionaries.

Bishop Tucker was graduated from the University of Virginia, and the Virginia Theological Seminary. He received the degree of M. A. from Oxford in 1908 after three years as a Rhodes scholar at Christ Church. He has honorary degrees of D. D. from the Virginia Theological Seminary; LL. D. from the University of Alabama and Western Reserve University; S. T. D. from Kenyon College.

In 1915 Bishop Tucker married Miss Eleanor Lile, daughter of the Dean of the Law School, University of Virginia. They have five children. Bishop Tucker was a Chaplain in the A. E. F. in World War I and his son, Beverley D. Tucker, Jr., enlisted upon his graduation from the University of Virginia in 1942, and is a corporal in the Field Hospital Service in North Africa.

Bishop Tucker was consecrated as Bishop Coadjutor of Ohio in St. Paul's Church, Richmond, Virginia, in 1938. Later in the year, upon the resignation of the Rt. Rev. Warren L. Rogers, he became the sixth Bishop of the Diocese of Ohio.

The original Diocese of Ohio covered the entire state. To promote effective administration the state was divided in 1874, the southern part of the state becoming the Diocese of Southern Ohio, the northern half keeping the original name. It includes 121 parishes and missions, 120 clergymen and 42,594 baptized persons.

ALASKA

A rapid succession of Prayer Book services took place recently in Alaska when John Boyd Bentley, bishop in charge, confirmed Shirley Frances Lewis, married her to the Rev. Wm. J. Gordon, Jr., at St. Peter's Church, Seward, and ordained Mr. Gordon to the priesthood at St. Mark's Mission, Nenana, on July 25. Bishop Bentley and the Gordons were going on in late July to St. Thomas Eskimo Mission at Point Hope on the Arctic coast, where Mr. Gordon will relieve the Ven. Frederic W. Goodman, who has been waiting to retire. Dr. Goodman's immediate plans are not known.

Miss Olive Tomlin, of Hankow, has arrived in Nenana to be treasurer of the missionary district of Alaska. Now that travel conditions in Alaska make it possible to have headquarters there, work hitherto carried on in a Seattle office is being transferred to Nenana.

Progress is reported in the long and fairly desperate search for a cook for the Hudson Stuck Hospital, Fork Yukon. A Canadian cook has been found, but immigration restrictions hinder her immediate entry into Alaska. Lack of a cook complicates life for a busy and isolated hospital in Arctic regions. It is one of the strange by-processes of the war in China that Dr. Lula M. Disosway from St. Elizabeth's Hospital, Shanghai, should find herself cooking moose steaks at Fort Yukon.

ADVANCE STEP TAKEN BY ST. PAUL'S CHURCH, AUGUSTA, GA.

St. Paul's Church, Augusta, now boasts a Missionary!

It was with mixed emotions that we gathered at the station Thursday morning of this week to tell Miss Emma Twiggs good-bye. She had volunteered her services to the Department of Foreign Missions of the Episcopal Church, and has been assigned to work in the Virgin Islands in the Missionary District of Puerto Rico. For several weeks she has been awaiting passage on the Pan-American Clipper, and four days ago was notified of the exact day to be in Miami. We envied her in the thrill of her new assignment and the aspirations of new work, but we reluctantly saw her take all her knowledge of religious education and great work away from Augusta.

It was at first thought that she would be assigned to work in Fort Yukon, Alaska, to which Emma readily agreed. But when the call came for an expert in religious education for the Virgin Islands, the Department of Foreign Missions, long familiar with quality of work done here and elsewhere, immediately asked her to accept assignment to the Caribbean field. Her address is: Miss Emma Twiggs, St. Paul's Church, Frederiksted, St. Croix, Virgin Islands. We know many of you will want to drop her a line.

As with all missionaries in the same area, the assignment is for three years, with three months' furlough then granted, with travel expenses paid. If she then elects to return, the same terms apply. Because of the difficulties and expense of travel, it at present seems unlikely that she can return before furlough time.

We believe that this event marks another stage in the coming-of-age of St. Paul's Church, Augusta. This parish is 193 years old, and Emma is our first foreign missionary. In recent years we have begun to give of our manpower to the ministry. Now at long last we can truthfully say that we are carrying the Gospel to the world.

Because of the strict requirements of the Department of Foreign Missions for all their personnel, physical examinations, education prerequisites, necessary experience, Christian Character, willingness to work, proven ability, it is a tribute both to Emma and to St. Paul's that she was selected for this field.

Emma's work at Frederiksted will be exactly the same as it was in St. Paul's, Augusta, the organization and administration of Church School and Young People's work, which is sorely needed there. Raising up future leaders for Christ and His work in the Islands of the Caribbean.

We hail St. Paul's first "gift of life" to the world field!

CHAPLAINS PRAISED IN AUSTRALIA

From U. S. Army headquarters in Australia, Chaplain Luther D. Miller writes to the Rev. Dr. Henry B. Washburn, of the Church's Army and Navy Commission: "As the chaplains of the combat troops come under my supervision I have visited them in the jungle and on the beaches, and have observed with pride the grand work they are doing. In the stress of battle they proved a power of spiritual strength. All commanding officers are lavish in their praise. It would do your heart good to hear the combat troops compliment the men of the Corps. The chaplains have suffered privations, they have gone days without sufficient sleep, they have lived in swamps for weeks at a time, they have cut and slashed their way through the most cruel jungle in the world in order to bring the solace of the Church to the men of their units.

"In the quiet areas most of the chaplains are building jungle chapels, buildings open on three sides. All have an altar and sanctuary. The roofs are thatched in true jungle style and the pews are cocoanut logs. The chapels are adequate for services of all denominations."

RESIGNATION OF MR. BOYLE

The resignation of Mr. Joseph E. Boyle as director of the National Council's promotion department is announced by the Presiding Bishop, effective August 1. Mr. Boyle has accepted a position in the public relations department of the J. Walter Thompson Company, national advertising agency. Bishop Tucker expects to appoint his successor shortly. "I need not say," Bishop Tucker writes, in informing members of the National Council of the resignation, "how great a loss this will mean to the department in which Mr. Boyle has rendered brilliant and invaluable service as director for the past five years."

Mr. Boyle will continue to act in an advisory capacity to the National Council's department. Part of his new work will be to assist in carrying forward the United Canvass. He came to the National Council after fourteen years in charge of publicity for the diocese of Chicago, preceded by long experience in newspaper work, first on William Allen White's famous Emporia Gazette, then with the Associated Press in the Midwest and Southwest. He is a graduate of Kansas State University.

The Episcopal Church's ministry in Latin America has recently been enlarged by the ordination of a Cuban to the diaconate and a Brazilian to the priesthood.

Deacon

In the Church of St. Francis of Assisi, Cardenas, Bishop A. H. Blankingship ordained Jose Augustin Gonzalez, lately returned to Cuba from the Virginia Theological Seminary, Alexandria. He is to work at the mission of St. John the Evangelist, Vertinientes. This is the church recently built after a design by Archdeacon J. H. Townsend, who had extra doors added at the sides because, he says, there are always besides the congregation, numbers of people who are too shy to enter the church but who will venture up to stand in the open doorway.

Priest

In the Church of the Crucified, Bage, Brazil, Bishop W. M. M. Thomas advanced to the priesthood the Rev. Antonio Joaquin Texeira Guedes, who will continue as assistant there.

Commenting on the freedom which the Brazilian Episcopal Church enjoys, Bishop Thomas writes: "Here we have said to himself, "I guess if I'd lost this much money, I'd feel pretty badly. Likely whoever owns it is hunting all over for it. They'll likely be in the bank tomorrow morning. They probably lost it just before closing time."

He said nothing to his parents that evening, deciding that he would wait until morning. He sat down by a table near the window, trying to think of his good fortune. On the table was a clipping that he had cut out of a paper a few days before.

"I have to live with myself, and so
"I would be fit for myself to know
I want to be able as days go by Always to look myself straight in the eye;
I don't want to stand in the setting sun
And hate myself for the things I've done."

He prepared himself for bed very soberly. He did not got to sleep very quickly, but when he did, it was because he had decided on something he would do next day.

In the morning, he went down early to the bank, and as soon as the manager went into his office, he followed him in and laid the package on his desk.

"Found this behind the wastebasket last night," he said abruptly, and started to go out.

"Hold on," said the manager, opening the parcel, "tell me about it."

So the messenger told him just where he had found it and how it had been hidden from sight by the paper in the basket.

"How did you happen to bring it back? No one saw you take it, and you know there is not likely to be any reward. You might have kept it and no one would have been any the wiser. Probably no one would have found you out?"

The boy looked up. "I wouldn't want to have anything to do with a fellow mean enough to do a thing like that," he said, "so I decided I'd bring it back 'cause I have to live with myself."

LUPE PLANTS A VICTORY GARDEN

"Lupe," I asked my little Mexican serving maid, "why have you put all these glass jars on my back steps?"

"Oh, Senora," she answered, "they are for Ramon to take away muy pronto like the snap of feengers in the air."

"But, Lupe," I remonstrated, "aren't they my old fruit jars which were stored in the cellar? I may need them this year."

"Exactamente," she responded airily, "that is why we take them away. When we breeng them back full of vegetables and victory we can steeck out our tongues at the Congress senores and their ration stamps. Now, Senora, if you will help me peeck our pecans for cake, I will tell you about garden which are overflow with victory.

"First, I tell sewing club that it are no use to try to stay indoors when mocking birds and cardinals seeng in huisache trees with hearts breaking for company, so we ask dancing club boys to help us make victory garden. Right away it are success like red firecracker on the Fourth of July.

"Ramon's padre are gardener for King Estate and he get permission for us to use large piece of ground with hydrant on heem. We make heem General and Manager and he give us extra plants from King gardens and plenty of advice absolutamente gratis.

"My madre have make grand plan for summer. She say nobody not even American Army and Ramon's goat, could eat all the beets and carrots we have planted, so she will can left-overs in new pressure canner which she won at Cinco de Mayo Fiesta in San Pedro Park for make the best enchiladas. Also she ask what ean we do with small left-overs which are too good for burro and goat to eat and I say that we will can them for soup next winter—tomatoes, okra, corn, carrots, and butterbeans all snug in same jar for consider the good theengs of the field how they grow.

"So now while we weed and hoe, we also prepare for results. We gather up jars and we put new paper on pantry shelves cut with fancy scallops by my abuela who say war is no whreeng theeft to people at last My abuela say, 'Lupe, what about your Senora who is always write on typewriter about victory but have no time for deeg in garden. We cannot let her weesh in vains for ration stamps; so we put up a few jars for her also.'

"All goes merry as marriage bell like in poem until I do not talk to Ramon for two hours, then the sadness wilts my lettuce like hot sun and no rain. He have no weeding hoe and I have no rake, so we exchange until Ramon take my hoe all the time and I am compel to weed my radishes and lettuce on my knees while Ramon make the laugh at me. But Senora, I do not stop the weeding, only the talking which make Ramon so lonesome that at final he promise to make me padded weeding bench like in advertisements.

"Then, Senora, I break my silence with 'Gracias' but no more, not a word except thanks, and now I am in bad feex. I want Ramon to come pronto with cart, but I have not make yet the pleasant talke necesario for asking favors."

"Well, Lupe," I said, "suppose you call Ramon and tell him that I will give him a new hoe if he will come as you say—pronto."

"Senora," she exclaimed with joy, "you always know how to maange the happiness. Btu first, Senora, I bake the cake and then I call Ramon so that when he come up walk, he will sneef the pecan cake like ten thousand joys and he will theenk that Victory are already burst in air like Star-Spangled Banner. Then he will offer to stay and wipe deeshes for me. Is not thees also good way to manage?"

THE BLESSING OF IRRITATION

"Bless them that curse you . . . and pray for them which despitefully use you." Life on earth would not be worth much if every source of irritation were removed. Yet most of us rebel against the things that irritate us, and count as heavy loss what ought to be rich gain.

We are told that the oyster is wiser; that when an irritating object, like a bit of sand, gets under the "mantle" of his shell, he simply covers it with the most precious part of his being and makes of it a pearl. The irritation that it was causing is stopped by encrusting it with the pearly formation.

A true pearl is therefore simply a victory over irritation. Every irritation that gets into your lives today is an opportunity for pearl culture. The more irritation the devil flings at us, the more pearls we may have. We need only to welcome them and cover them completely with love, that most precious part of us, and the irritation will be smothered out as the pearl comes into being. What a store of pearls we may have, if we will!

WELCOMINGS

In this round world there are many good things;
One of the best of all
Is to answer a knock at the door and find
Some one has come to call.
It's pleasant to ask the visitor in

He that is mastered by Christ is the master of every circumstance. Does the circumstance press against you? Do not push it away. It is the Potter's hand. Your mastery will come, not by arresting its progress, but by enduring its discipline.

To live above malice toward wrongdoers is to reach one of the high peaks of Christian living. It requires all that goes into living the Christian life to attain it.

—Dr. G. S. Reamey.

Every person we meet is different because we have known him. We may not always be conscious of our influence. Others may not be conscious of it, but it never ceases. If there is light within us it will shine. If there is darkness within us it will shade. We do and say many things with no thought of the effect upon others. —Gleanings.

Before there was ever a world, God loved it. Before there was ever a sin, God hated it. Before there was ever a soul to be lost, God planned salavtion for that soul. Before there was ever a gospel to be preached, there was a gospel in the heart of God to be preached.

St. Paul said, "I must also see Rome." Why must he? No one made him undertake that risky adventure that ended with his beheading on the Appian Way. I must see Africa, said David Livingstone. Why must he? No one coerced him from his Scotland home to die in his tent in Africa with his face fallen into the open pages of his Bible, a sacrifice to his high endeavor to paint the dark continent white. Here is the secret of man's greatness and his liberality, to have compulsion not from without, but from within.

PRAYER FOR THE BEREAVED

In wartimes, Presiding Bishop Henry St. George Tucker of the Episcopal Church believes that people should pray regularly and continuously for those bereaved. He suggests the following prayer for use by anyone in private devotion, or for use in Episcopal Churches if the form is authorized by the Diocesan Bishop.

"Almighty God, who didst offer Thine only Son to be made perfect through suffering, and to win our salvation by enduring the cross; sustain with Thy healing power all those whose loved ones have given their lives in the service of our country. Redeem, we pray Thee, the pain of their bereavement, that knowing their loss to be the price of our freedom, they may remember the gratitude of the nation for which they gave so costly a sacrifice. And grant, O Lord, that we may highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain, and that of the agony of the present hour there may arise a new and better world in which Thy will shall rule, to the honor of Thy Son our Saviour, Jesus Christ. Amen."

LETTERS

May 14, 1943,
before reaching C. T.

My dear Bishop:

I know you will forgive an unknown old man for writing to you; until I retired at 70, six years ago, I was for more than three dozen years first dean, then archdeacon of Bloemfontein in this country. Since retiring I have had more time for prayer, thought, reading, etc. I like every Christian who has awakened in some degree, to what Christianity really entails, I am intensely anxious that we really shall have "a new and better world" after the war, and of course we know that it can only be a better world, in so far as God's will is increasingly done there.

Now a few months ago I read for the first time the Dean of Canterbury's book on Russia, "The Socialist Sixth" (I rather fancy it has another title in the U. S. A.). That book was a revelation to me, up till my reading it, I had only come across one side of Russia's actions, the destructive; the constructive I was largely ignorant about. One had read about the assassinations of the Czar and his family; about the anti-God campaign and of religious and class persecution, but of the enormous constructive work for the welfare of her people that Russia has accomplished, of this I was very, very largely ignorant, and I have not the least doubt that there are tens of millions in U. S. A., England, South Africa, etc., of good and kind-hearted people, who have the same ignorance, and that biased ignorance is I believe a great hindrance to our own work of social reconstruction. I think when you read the Dean's book, you cannot avoid the conclusion, that though Russia has opposed the first and great commandment, to love God with all her heart, etc., that she yet sets Christendom a most marvellous example of the observance of that second command which "is like unto" the first, the loving our neighbor as ourself. And so, dear Bishop, if you have not already done so, I want you to read that book carefully and critically and in as far as you agree with my opinion of it, to do your best through the Protestant Episcopal Church and in other ways to get that book very widely read in U. S. A.

I suppose that after Victory, the U. S. A. and Great Britain will have to associate themselves with Russia, in very close co-partnership in the formation of peace terms and of the social and economic building of that new and better world for which all Christians pray every time they say the Lord's Prayer. It is essential to this co-partnership, and its smooth working that England and U. S. A. should know the truth about Russia, possessing neither a biased ignorance, nor an uncritical appreciation.

I feel, too, that Russia's great contribution to the health and education of her people should be studied by us who must have these among other aims in view, that we may consider what in her methods can be of assistance to us all. Our Lord tells us that when the physical needs of the poorest are met, when they are fed, clothed, visited, then, action to the more needy is considered as offered to Himself, and I most firmly believe, since reading this book, that Russia has, in the last decade or two, rendered Him in this way more service than any of the professedly Christian nations have done.

Do read the book, dear Bishop, if unknown to your serious study, and then see if you do not agree with me, and in as far as you do agree, get it widely read in the U. S. A., and all as a campaign towards the hallowing of our Father's name, the coming of His Kingdom, and the wider doing of His will as in Heaven above so more and more widely on earth below.

I know you will pardon my action in writing to you, it is an action, born in prayer, and from a hunger for the coming of His Kingdom.

Yours apologetically, prayerfully, hopefully,

Frank H. Hulme,
(lately Archdeacon, Dean, etc.)
Care Mrs. Chandler, 335 Loop St.
Tietermaritzburg
Natal, S. Africa.

P. S. Ten minutes ago I picked up an old Church Times and read of your election as President of the Federal Council of Churches. Congratulations, God bless and guide you in this extended sphere. It opens a big door, God help you to put through it all you can, for the promotion of His Kingdom. You will receive under separate cover a second letter from me. Could you send it for me to your equivalent of Church Times? Living Church, is it? Not sure of title of address. Once more apologetic thanks.

May 14, 1943,
Before reading C. T.

May 14, 1943.

I feel sure that your courtesy will allow you to permit a Priest from another portion of the Anglican Communion, its self-governing Province in South Africa, to address himself to your readers, and if what I say is obvious and unnecessary then please forgive an old man (76) for butting in, his excuse is amply sufficient, a real desire that God's will may indeed be done as in Heaven above, so on earth below. . . . I write on the day of our great joint victory in Tunisia and I suppose that I am not exaggerating our international influence when I assume that roughly speaking after the final victory, the U. S. A. and the British Commonwealth will, in the peace terms, and the design for "the new and better world" for which we are all hoping and praying, have approximately two-thirds of the say; the remaining third being taken by Russia in the Western settlement and by China in the Pacific sphere; of course Russia with her vast territory should be heard in both theatres, and many other peoples too, will rightly be welcomed to offer their contributions; but we may, I believe, hold without arrogance that you and we will possess that two-thirds' say, Russia and China exercising the remaining third. Now we must qualify for that tremendous responsibility, and it is of supreme importance that we should not only deeply appreciate our present indebtedness to the magnificent and self-denying struggle that our great Russian Ally is putting up month after month for our common cause, but we must also try to arrive at the real truth about Russia, so that we may be able to appreciate the people with whom victory will bring us into close and growing partnership. Until a few months ago, I, with, I expect, tens of millions of other Americans and Britishers, had knowledge only of one aspect of Russian activities, her destructive, not her constructive acts. I knew about the murder of the Czar and his family, the anti-God campaign and the persecution of religious, social, and opposing sections; but I was mainly in ignorance of that scientifically planned, and devotedly carried out campaign for the vast forward march in health, security and education of her teeming millions. I think it is no exaggeration to say that if Russia (in the past) set herself against the first and great commandment to love God with all our hearts, etc., she has on the other hand set us a shining example far beyond the present attainments of any professionally Christian nation, in her far-flung achievements in honoring that second command which is "like unto the first," the loving our neighbor as ourself. How do I arrive at this conclusion? Well, the object of this letter is to point you to the source, the Dean of Canterbury's book on Russia, "The Socialist Sixth" (though I believe the American edition has another title). I want you all to read it, if you have not already done so.

HAVEN . . .

By J. W. KENNEDY

A parent let me read a letter from a son who is on maneuvers in Louisiana. He describes the hardships in an uncomplaining way—wet all the time from rain or perspiration, sleep on the ground, no baths, mosquitoes, poison ivy and a host of other things that make one glad he is far away from such hardships. At the close of the letter, and this was the point she wanted me to get, he said: "Whenever the folks back home feel like complaining over the minor inconveniences of civilian life let them think of what we are going through." This young man, in spite of the toughness of his training, has many worse things in store for him when his mock enemy becomes a real one. We have been conscious often of the terrible things our boys are enduring "over there" in almost every section of the globe for our sakes. That is why one is a bit shocked to hear a single "yelp" of complaint from another over conditions that are relatively insignificant.

One of the truly remarkable traits of Jesus, since He was human, too, is that He never complained. This might seem surprising since He lived by faith alone. There was no regular income, no settled living place, no certainty of what would happen on any tomorrow. This characteristic Christian virtue of accepting things as they come, using what is possible and not letting the rest give harm or concern, is from Christ. He was in many uncomfortable and unpleasant and dangerous spots during the brief flash of His ministry, but not once a complaint. Even His cry in Gethsemane was not a complaint, but a cry for strength to bear; nor were His words on the cross bitter when He appeared to feel God had forsaken Him.

The old answer of the average human being, who is satisfied with his present spiritual stature, is usually "But I am not Christ." No, none of us is really like Christ, but because of Him we are enabled to bear anything and everything. Spiritual strength far surpasses physical strength and we are given witnesses daily as to how much men can suffer if they depend, as Jesus did, upon the High and Sustaining power of God.

We look at the situations of difficulty and trial in the wrong way. It is usually our selfish attitude that spoils the view and narrows it to a slit that leaves out more than it takes in. "Why did this happen to me?" Jesus never even had such a thought. His attitude of mind was a question: "What is God trying to show me in this situation or trial?" Too often we torture our hearts and half-craze our minds with the wild reiteration of our unanswered whys? We cannot always discover why it is our boy that is lost or why we have to suffer or our loved one was taken or another got the job we deserved. Life grows sour over such questions. There are answers in them, as many have found, when we look for the good in them and not at our selfish hurt because of them. Most of the resentments we nurse and keep again with an unanswered why and the feeling that I have been wronged unjustly.

In this day of major catastrophe for half the world, whether we be in one half or the other, there is a high note we as Christians must sound, and then live by its melody. In the first epistle of John, the theme of which is the admonition to "walk in the light of His fellowship," are these words, specific antidote for complaints and endless whining whys:

"This then is the message we have heard of Him and declare unto you, that God is light, and in Him is no darkness at all. If we say we have fellowship with Him and walk in darkness, we lie, and do not the truth: but if we walk in the light, as He is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin. . . . He that saith. I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him. But whoso keepeth his word, in him verily is the love of God perfected: hereby know we that we are in Him."

That is why in every situation the Christian finds not darkness but dawn.

COLLECT FOR NINTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY

Grant us, Lord, we beseech thee, the spirit to think and do always such things as are right; that we, who cannot do anything that is good without thee, may by thee be enabled to live according to thy will; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Commission on Approaches to Unity
Minority Report

Commending the study and exploration which have been done by the Episcopal Church's commission on approaches to unity, in its discussions with a similar commission of the Northern Presbyterian Church, a minority report of the Commission, just released, differs sharply with the majority in the conclusions drawn and action recommended. It is signed by Bishop Frank E. Wilson, of Eau Claire; the Rev. Dr. Francis J. Bloodgood, Grace Church, Madison, Wis., and Clifford P. Morehouse, Milwaukee.

Four matters needing further careful scrutiny, the minority states, are: the duties and powers of the episcopate, what they are and how determined; the relation of a system such as the Presbyterian, which has but one order in its ministry, with that of the Episcopal Church, which has three; the meaning and method of administering confirmation; and the nature of the priesthood. The minority urges that the language of Basic Principles is not clear in its implications.

The minority feels also that the commission has not accurately understood the purpose of the statement known as the Lambeth Quadrilateral. (This brief summary, mentioning the Bible, the creed, the sacraments and the episcopate, with brief comment on each, first appeared in The Church Idea, a book by William Reed Huntington, then rector of Grace Church, New York, writing in 1869. The term "quadrilateral" was suggested to his mind by the four famous fortresses of Lombardy which figured in the Sardinian campaign of Napoleon III, then fresh in people's minds. The four points were adopted by General Convention in Chicago in 1886, and again in 1888 at the Lambeth Conference, since when it has been known as the Lambeth Quadrilateral).

The minority of the present commission feels that the four provisions of the Quadrilateral are "a starting point for conversation—not a terminus of negotiations." "The [majority] report suggests that the Episcopal Church is committed to unity with any body of Christians who accept those four points" but the four provisions, the minority declares, "do not constitute in themselves a platform for reunion. They are the corner-posts upon which the other planks of a platform must rest."

The minority is asking that the present membership of the commission be replaced by an entirely new membership.

We, the undersigned, feel impelled to dissent from that part of the foregoing Report which covers the progress of negotiations between our Commission on Approaches to Unity and the Department of Church Cooperation and Unity of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. It appears to us that the Report uses a great deal of language to very little effect. It does not meet the actual situation squarely but circumvents it with rhetorical phrases. This is particularly true of the concluding resolutions and its preamble which we find to be exceedingly vague and confusing.

The reason we take exception to this kind of Report is not for what it says but for what it may be made to imply. We have already had an unfortunate experience in this respect with regard to the Declaration of Purpose as voted by the last two General Conventions. There is a distinct feeling of resentment in many quarters of the Episcopal Church at the way in which this Declaration of Purpose has been held over the heads of Churchmen as a mandate of General Convention for every utterance emanating from the Commission on Approaches to Unity. Repeatedly it has been said that "we have agreed to unite." Many of us do not believe we have done any such thing. We have declared our "purpose to achieve organic union" which is quite another matter. The Bishops and Deputies who voted the Declaration of Purpose had no idea they were voting the Episcopal Church into union with the Presbyterian Church. They understood they were launching on a voyage of exploration which might carry them through many and devious channels but which had a definite objective in the end. The two have been made to appear synonymous—which they are not. Opposition to one or another of the tentative schemes put forth by the Commission has been branded as a flouting of the will of General Convention—which is quite contrary to the facts. We would not have such errors repeated in the presenting of this Report to this General Convention. It seems necessary that we should make ourselves clear on a few specific points.

1—We believe it is time to correct certain current misapprehension in regard to the meaning of the Chicago-Lambeth Quadrilateral. The four requirements of that Quadrilateral are quoted in the Report and, while the Report does not exactly say so, it suggests that the Episcopal Church is committed to unity with any body of Christians who accept those four points. We would particularly stress the fact that the four provisions of the Quadrilateral were never meant to be four lonely props of a reunited Church torn out of their normal context in the full life of the Church in which they are embedded. They do not constitute in themselves a platform for reunion. They are the corner-posts upon which the other planks of such a platform must rest. The original resolution adopted by General Convention in 1886 declares that Christian unity can only be restored by "the return of all Christian communions to the principles of unity exemplified by the undivided Catholic Church during the first ages of its existence. . . . . As inherent parts of this sacred deposit, and therefore as essential to the restoration of unity among the divided branches of Christendom, we account the following"—then follow the four points of the Quadrilateral. In other words these four points are part of the sacred deposit to which all must return but they are not the whole of it. (See Journal of General Convention of 1886, p. 80.) The Lambeth Conference of two years later adhered to the same line. In adopting the Quadrilateral the Bishops said, "the following Articles supply the basis on which approach may be by God's blessing made towards Home Reunion." Then they add that they "hold themselves in readiness to enter into brotherly conference (such as that which has already been proposed by the Church in the United States of America) with the representatives of other Christian communions in the English-speaking races" (Resolutions 11 and 12 of the Lambeth Conference of 1888, the bold face being ours). We find the Quadrilateral to be a starting point for conversations—not a terminus of negotiations.

2—In one section the Report becomes specific by listing four issues which must be faced. Without saying it in so many words the Report strongly intimates that the Episcopal Church should raise no questions about these issues but should allow them to be quietly submerged into the comprehensive plan of mutual recognition. We believe each one of these issues must be carefully scrutinized and we would point out certain aspects of them which are bound to be troublesome unless they are fairly faced.

a—The Report asks whether the Episcopal Church is prepared to move toward organic union "with a Church which is willing to accept the historic episcopate while not prepared to accept a particular doctrine concerning it." We are impressed with the fact that while the Presbyterians are prepared to accept Bishops in the united Church, they are by no means ready to accept the Historic Episcopate. In the Basic Principles it is stated that "the official duties and powers of the bishops shall be determined by constitutional enactments requiring the concurrence of the legislative bodies of the (United) Church." It might be a fair question to ask whether an episcopate whose duties and powers are to be determined at some future date could in the nature of the case be the historic episcopate. However all uncertainty about it is dissolved by a covering letter which was sent out with the Basic Principles from the office of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church to the constituent Presbyteries. To quote: "The office of bishop as herein set forth is Presbyterian in its conception. . . . In Scotland, Knox helped to ordain what were designated as Superintendents. Our own Presbyterian Church has, for practical purposes, provided superintendents in many Synods and Presbyteries, and Executive Secretaries or General Presbyters in a number of Presbyteries." In a meeting with our Commission members of the Presbyterian Department have stated frankly that when they speak of Bishops they mean Superintendents and nothing more. Obviously the Historic Episcopate is still an unsettled issue.

b—The Report asks whether the Episcopal Church is prepared for organic union "with a Church which, initially at least, has no order of the diaconate integrated with the order of priesthood and of the episcopate as one of 'three orders.' " We believe this to be an understatement of the real issue. For four centuries the whole Presbyterian system has been built around the fundamental doctrine of the "parity of the ministry." It is not merely a question of fitting the Diaconate into a ministry which is wanting in that Order. It is the far deeper question of reconciling a ministry which is solidly founded on a single Order with another ministry which has always stoutly contended for the historic necessity of three Orders. This is a question which still awaits discussion by the two Commissions.

c—The Report further asks whether the Episcopal Church is prepared for organic union "with a Church which is prepared to accept the rite of Confirmation 'as a representative rite of the whole Church,' but which at present is not prepared to restrict the administration of this rite to bishops only." It is a serious matter to trespass on the Holy Scriptures and to break with nineteen centuries of Christian precedent by separating the rite of Confirmation from episcopal administration but in this case the rite itself is further emasculated by allowing the laying-on-of-hands to be purely optional. As one member of the Presbyterian Department expressed it, "if the bishop is a godly man, it would be just as effective to shake hands with him as to receive the laying-on of his hands." The name "Confirmation" is retained in the Basic Principles but the thing itself is abandoned.

d—The Report finally asks whether the Episcopal Church is ready for organic union "with a Church which is not asked to subscribe (as our clergy are not asked to subscribe) to any theory of the priesthood beyond that which is implied in the second of the alternate ordination formulae in the service of the Ordering of Priests in the Book of Common Prayer." This is an unfortunate way of stating it. At the time of their ordination our clergy are obliged to sign a pledge of conformity to the "doctrine, discipline and worship" of the Episcopal Church. That pledge covers the entire Prayer Book—not merely one alternative sentence in the service of Ordination. It covers the Ember Day prayers, the Offices of Instruction, the Office of Institution and all the rubrical directions for priestly ministrations. It may be true that the Church is lenient about demanding rigorous adherence to the terms of this ordination pledge from its own clergy but that is a very different matter than lowering the standard itself in order to accommodate the clergy of a different persuasion. We believe little is to be achieved by seeking the least common denominator of superficial agreement.

The Report asks whether the Episcopal Church is "prepared to move toward organic union" under these conditions and implies that the answer should be "Yes." We submit that it must be "No" until the issues have been truly met and fairly solved.

3—It seems desirable to indicate one other place where we appear to differ with the authors of the foregoing Report. We say "appear to differ" because the language is not clear. On one page the Report refers to the appended document entitled Basic Principles as an unfinished piece of work which "still needs much clarification and development." On another page it says that "We the majority of the Commission are ready to envisage union according to the direction forecast in Basic Principles." From such statements it may be difficult to determine just how far the Report means to commend Basic Principles. Nevertheless there is one provision which has appeared in every version of Basic Principles thus far and which bids fair to remain there. "The Ruling Eldership shall be accepted." That is plain and unequivocal. It would mean that the Episcopal Church would be obliged to accommodate itself to a drastic innovation of which it has no clear understanding either as to its character or its consequences. We are still uncertain as to whether the Ruling Elder is a layman or a clergyman. When this question was proposed to the members of the Presbyterian Commission they replied that "there are two schools of thought about it in the Presbyterian Church." The practical complications involved in merging the organization of the Episcopal Church which is built around the Episcopate with that of the Presbyterian Church which is built around the Ruling Eldership are fairly staggering. We are convinced that a great amount of territory remains to be explored before we would be justified in making any such uncompromising commitment.

For the past six years the present Commission has labored steadily and faithfully to carry out the desire of General Convention as expressed in the Declaration of Purpose. A succession of plans has been considered no one of which has received the unanimous approval of the members. Much preliminary work has

Can Christianity Help? "What About God"

First in a Series of Six Aadio Addresses Station KMPC, Los Angeles, March 17, 1943—

RT. REV. WILLIAM BERTRAND STEVENS

Bishop of Los Angeles

The good man is he who has determined to give the best that he has to the best ideal that he knows. He is a religious man when and if that best ideal is God. A good many years ago I was in a shipwreck. It was clear that to the frightened people involved, mere morality was no comfort. They wanted God, however much they had neglected Him, and they prayed, and as the late Shailer Mathews once said, "The God to whom men will not pray is only the ghost of God." One is not good merely because he abstains from habits and practices which are commonly considered bad. So often our ideas of "goodness" are incomplete. If I speak the word "good" and ask you to close your eyes and tell me what image you visualize, the chances are that you will say, a benevolent old man or woman smiling serenely in a rocking chair. "Courage," "heroism" and "service" are all active virtues in common thinking, but goodness is passive and needs to be rescued from the dullness and drabness into which it has fallen.

"In the beginning, God." The good man is the godly man. His understanding of what God is like may be faulty, but he feels that there is a code of conduct, worked out in human history, that is from above. He believes that the great moral achievements of mankind find their roots in belief in a supreme being who is a Father. He has learned that there has been a revelation of what men must do to live together in harmony, and if he knows anything of history he realizes that this revelation cannot be disregarded or defied with safety.

Because he has seen that life has been so greatly enriched by the idea of the Fatherhood of God, he knows that the brotherhood of man is an inescapable companion idea. That means that the good man is he who is guided by the best that he knows and is determined to share and practice that best among his fellow men. It is here that we find our first evidence of the existence of God, because man, in his search for a Heavenly Father, senses what God is like. The first question is not, "Is there a God?" but "What is God Like?" or as Bishop Gore put it, "The most pressing question is not whether we can believe in God, but of what sort the God is in whom we can or must believe." Therefore, the first support of a man's faith is his own religious experience. We need and must have the aid of one who is good, who is a Father and who meets our pressing needs. "Like as the hart desireth the water-brooks; so longeth my soul after Thee, O God. My soul is athirst for God, yea, even for the living God; when shall I come to appear before the presence of God? My tears have been my meat day and night; while they say daily unto me, Where is now thy god?"

We cannot think of God and ignore this quest of the human soul, a quest that has been expressed in numberless phrases. "O that I knew where I might find Him." "Love divine all loves excelling." "Show me the way." Ray Palmer, the author of "My Faith Looks Up to Thee," has achieved immortality by his expression of this quest of the soul. He was a Christian minister of distinction but he gained his true fame by these verses written while still a student.

"While life's dark maze I tread,
And griefs around me spread,
Be Thou my Guide;
Bid darkness turn to day;
Wipe sorrow's tears away;
Nor let me ever stray
From Thee aside."

Man's belief that there is a God is our first ground of confidence, for it has been said that there has never been a good human instinct that does not have its corresponding satisfaction. The validity of this hope cannot be demonstrated like a problem in mathematics, nor is it easily communicated to others. One who feels it deeply may stir the emotions and deepen the faith of another, but generally speaking it is a hope that must be caught rather than taught. It was said of an English cobbler that he had hanging in his shop a picture of Robertson, the great preacher. When asked why, he said the presence of that picture kept him on the right track and enabled him to lead a better life. "Purely imaginary," someone says. But the cobbler knew better. "The spirit of man is the candle of the Lord."

Nevertheless, since faith in God cannot be proved and since there is always the possibility of man's being told that it is all in the realm of fancy, he seeks for outside support of what he feels, some suggestion that his experience is real and not imaginary. Theology once taught a series of arguments for the existence of God. They are still helpful to the theologian but most of us are chilled by their mechanical simplicity. One phase of them is helpful, however. In the human mind there is a persistent demand for Reason or Purpose. You cannot escape the conviction that there is direction in the world and that life is not a series of mad accidents. Science and common sense demand that there be some explanation of why we are here, and, as the Archbishop of Canterbury puts it, "The only principle that will satisfy the scientific demand for complete intellectual satisfaction is the principle of Purpose," by which he implies that, since science relates only one fact to preceding facts, there must be some explanation of life that will tie all facts together. If we accept Purpose behind the universe we accept God, and in the words of the late Dr. Streeter "No theory of the universe can be satisfactory which does not account for the phenomenon of life."

The Christian Gospel is shot through and through with the thought of Divine Purpose. "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten son." I have tried , however, not to anticipate our Christian position, but to sketch the premises on which we build, to help us to avoid the difficulty of a frank layman, who told his pastor that a sermon on the nature of God had been most helpful because God to him had always been "a vague oblong blur." Our thoughts about God may be focused by the teaching and person of Jesus Christ. We find that God is in Christ, reconciling the world to Himself. Fatherhood and Purpose become real, as they are touched by the principles of love and sacrifice. But some of us feel the impor-

Religious Education

The New York Times, in its issue of August 8th, carried an article, in the "Topics of the Time" column, on "The Church and War." The topic was inspired by a sermon preached in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine by Bishop Thomas Casady. It is significant that the "Times" devoted an entire editorial column to this sermon.

We were particularly impressed with the last two paragraphs. We quote: "If it is desirable to emphasize the spiritual quality of the Church, we must not ignore the fact that the Church will not stay alive without some good hard work. The Church school in various forms in the various religions is the chief reservoir for recruiting the church members of tomorrow. The Church is in some degree of danger when sufficient leadership is lacking for the schools." That is a significant statement coming from the secular press. We trust that many Church School Superintendents, Directors of Religious Education and Rectors, will read this statement and also pass it on to their prospective workers. It may be a real aid in the recruiting of the Church School Staff.

The editor of this column quotes the Rev. Otto Maybe, director of research for the International Council of Religious Education, "that the war is taking more teachers from these schools, and points out that older men and women will have to resume responsibility for teaching the Bible in our Church Schools. Earnest people who are concerned over the spiritual aftermath of the war may here find a way to take hold the job of doing something about it instead of merely worrying over the question whether the Church may be "dying."

To all of which, we give a loud AMEN!

A Voice Across the Seas

We print in the Letters to the Editor column, a letter from the Venerable Frank H. Hulme, formerly Archdeacon of Bloemfontein, South Africa. We trust that many of our readers will see this letter. Dr. Hulme is seventy-six. He retired six years ago. We feel that his letter has point, inasmuch as there is prevalent in this country a distrust of our ally Russia.

Here is a voice from far over seas that pleads for understanding not only of our Ally, Russia, but a fine spirit of cooperation between this country and the British Commonwealth of Nations. This is no new plea. It is significant only in that it comes from a consecrated Christian minister in far away South Africa.

We admire, too, this writer's earnest prayer, for the growth of a spirit of understanding and mutual helpfulness that should characterize all Christian groups. It is this spirit and this spirit alone, that will bring to the world lasting peace.

A Queer Trilogy

Under an Associated Press date line, the press today carries a story about the Nazi occupation of Orel. Tucked away in this account of the revealed atrocities committed by the Nazis in almost two years of occupation, is an interesting item. Of the twenty-nine schools in Orel, all but five were closed. The five that were kept open were attended largely by adults. The press account states that the chief subjects taught in those five schools were military science, espionage and religious subjects! A queer trilogy!

Destruction, deceit and we suppose a faith in the rightness of these first two! That is about the sense of proportion National Socialism has exhibited, in its sense of values. Of course they mean you destroy your enemies, and in destroying your enemies all means are fair, and then you will have a faith born in the mighty force which the "new order" will display. This is materialism rampant.

The danger lies in the fact, that this rather simple and facile doctrine easily captures the imagination of the unthinking. Especially is this true when demagogues begin their work. We are not free from the danger of such insidious doctrines springing up in this country. There are those who are calling upon our leaders, to destroy utterly the lives and properties of our enemies. There are those who are saying any means are fair in accomplishing this end. There are those who say that after this is done, then we will have a new and robust faith in the greatness of our country.

As Christians we protest such specious reasoning. It is our firm conviction that military measures must be used, and used to the limit. But there is still a code of fair play, which governs military operations, and the commanders of our forces have strictly adhered to that code. There is a legitimate use of espionage, that is closely allied to successful military operations. There is another type of espionage that only the weak brute uses. There is a religious faith in the rightness of a country's cause, which draws forth the best in that country's citizenry.

As Christians we would reverse the order of teaching that the Nazis used in Orel. Religious subjects would come first. A faith in God as revealed in Jesus Christ would be primary on the agenda. Espionage would be dropped as a subject. In its place we would put a course in the rights of others. Military science would be taught first to show its destructive power, and second its use only as a defensive means. Our ideal would be not the building of a vast military machine to cow friend and foe alike. But the building of confidence in the courage of the manhood of the nation, that in a time of crisis it would not fail. Just as our soldiers, sailors and airmen are proving on a hundred battlefields today that democracy does not breed a race weaklings!

This queer trilogy of the Nazis leaves us cold. As Christians we know that we can build upon no other foundation, than that is laid which is Jesus Christ

A Christian Basis for Reconstruction

(Following is the text of a statement signed by 14 British church leaders, including the Archbishops of Canterbury and York and the Moderator of the Church of Scotland, made public in Great Britain and the United States, July 29, 1943:)

We welcome unreservedly the statement issued by the Commission to Study the Bases of a Just and Durable Peace, instituted by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. We believe that the main principles stated are such as to commend themselves to Christian minds in this country, and we share the hope expressed by the Commission that combined action upon the basis of these principles may be taken by the United Nations.

We agree in joyful recognition of the truth that God is the Creator of the world and the Father of all men, that He created men and nations for fellowship in His family, that His purpose is the supreme reality in human history, and that policies which depart from that purpose must eventually lead to failure and disaster.

We must recognize that men do not put first among the objects of their ambition God's purpose of universal fellowship; they put in the first place what they suppose to be their own several interests, as individuals, as families, as classes in society, as nations, as races. From this self-seeking they can only be won by conversion to trust in the redeeming love of God. We agree with the American Commission that "the first and paramount task of the Christian Churches remains that of bringing more persons to subject their lives to the will of God as revealed in Jesus Christ."

Statesmen and governments have to act through and on behalf of men and women as they are now. Christions, while working primarily for the conversion of men's hearts, must recognize that there is need to hold the selfish desires of men in check, and need also to to subordinate force to law, while also seeking to secure that the law is just. For force, which when organized for the purpose of a nation is commonly called power, is a reality which exists and will continue to exist. Those who control it are under a perpetual temptation to use it for selfish ends. The lawless use of power for selfish ends will wreck all hopes of justice, fellowship and peace.

All war is a manifestation of the sin of the world, and the first duty of the Christian is to understand it in the light of the divine purpose and judgment. This is conspicuously true of the present war, which is more than a conflict of nations; it is a conflict of faiths. Consequently real victory in the war depends upon the clarity of our aims beyond the military defeat of the enemy, and the completeness and sincerity of our dedication to these aims.

I

We agree that "the peace must provide the political framework for a continuing collaboration of the United Nations and in due course of neutral and enemy nations." We accept this as a goal, and believe that without delay institutional forms should be created of a kind that will not limit or frustrate the fullest development of political cooperation on a world-wide scale.

We hold also that the achievement of such a world political organization will only be possible if the steps taken to accomplish it correspond to the most urgent necessities, so that it is the expression of a unity of action wrought out in facing the complex problems of world reconstruction. When the war ends in the victory of the United Nations (and that it should so end we hold to be necessary for the preservation and, still more, for the improvement, of our civilization) we shall be confronted with certain immediate and urgent needs, supreme among which will be the feeding of hungry people and the restoration of order. In the process of meeting the clamant needs we shall employ methods of cooperation likely to be of great value in developing the habit of cooperation in the new era.

Moreover, we attach great importance to a vigorous dealing with the question of security, assuring to all peoples freedom from fear. Unless the nations are set free from the fear of repeated wars, other goals will remain unattainable. It is not part of our task as Christians to say how this hope should be realized, but it is our task to insist on its primary importance. Practical cooperation in the establishment of order in the period after the cessation of hostilities will point the way to further developments. In this cooperation the lead plainly must be taken by the four principal powers of the United Nations—The United States of America, the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics, the Republic of China and the British Commonwealth of Nations. Not less plainly the responsible share to be taken by the smaller of the United Nations must be recognized. For any of the United Nations to fail in supplying its share of contribution to the armed force required—a share proportionate to its population, wealth and strategic situation—would be shirking a manifest duty. This acceptance of a burden of responsibility by the United Nations should be preparatory to the inclusion not only of the neutral but also of the vanquished nations in the corporate system of world order so soon as political and psychological considerations permit.

It will not be possible to deal with the many and vast problems affecting the whole world through a single international organization for world government; it may be best, as has been already suggested in several quarters, to have both functional and regional departments beneath a supreme World Council. International reconstruction demands probably not one council but several devoted to different aspects; there must be effective agencies of international justice and equity. It is in the actual cooperation of the United Nations in the service of all nations according to their need that we may best hope to find the way of continuing an order for the world which at once respects the rights of all peoples, including the small nations and the minorities within the nations, and also recognizes the leadership inevitably devolving upon the great nations and especially upon China, Great Britain, Russia and the United States.

II

We agree that "the peace must make provision for bringing within the scope of international agreement those economic and financial acts of national governments which have widespread international repercussions." Indeed, we would go much further. Private as well as governmental action can have large international effects. We consider that, apart from the desperate state of need in many parts of the world during the first years after the war, a permanent aim of the nations of the world and of their governments should be to develop and to mobilize the resources of the earth with a view to achieving for all peoples freedom from want.

In the case of industrial nations, and especially of Great Britain and the United States, this must include the avoidance of widespread unemployment. Unemployment has been, in part at least, a price which we have paid for forgetting that the primary purpose of production should be the satisfaction of the needs of ordinary people, or in other words, the establishment of freedom from want. It is by restoring this sense of purpose to the productive machine and by awaking the people of the richer countries to a sense of responsibility for achieving this aim, not only in their own country but throughout the world, that Britain and America will find the best hope of eliminating unemployment within their own territories. Such a task corresponds to the Christian belief that all men and all nations are members of the family of God, Who created the world and its resources for the benefit of all. To undertake it would inevitably promote fellowship and goodwill. The world has always been one fellowship spiritually, with one weal and one woe; it has now also become quite plainly an economic unit in which we can prosper together or suffer together, but cannot in the long run prosper at one another's expense. The successful pursuit of this aim involves two pre-conditions. One is the establishment of international agencies of economic reconstruction, to which, as to the common organs of social and economic security, the vanquished nations must, as soon as conditions make it possible, be admitted as equal partners; the other is a readiness in the victorious nations to forego economic advantages which it will be possible and very tempting to secure for themselves at the expense of others.

Something more than the "enlightened selfishness" familiar in international politics will be needed at this point. Nothing but dedication to a great ideal, with the readiness for sacrifice which true dedication involves, will be enough. It is at least doubtful whether that dedication can endure without religious inspiration.

III

We agree upon the need "to adapt the treaty structure of the world to changing conditions." As the American Commission further remarks, "change effected under the threat of force seldom is productive of peace, because change under such circumstances seems to reward and thus encourage violent and lawless elements. On the other hand nations, like individuals, seldom freely abandon their acquired legal rights. We doubt the feasibility of establishing a special mechanism for the revision of treaties. In major issues it is essential that the decision should be arrived at by the supreme world agency, whatever that may be. We hope that a continuing cooperation in economic tasks and in the maintenance of world order may create a readiness to negotiate together such as would enable the world structure to be responsive to the need for change.

IV

We agree that not only good government but self-government should be the goal for all men, and that the progress of backward or subject peoples towards complete responsibility is a proper subject of international concern. There are in fact many degrees between complete self-government and complete subjection, as the British Empire itself illustrates. Progress towards political autonomy must be united with progress towards an improved standard of living, education and social services, and it is probable that this can best be achieved by the maintenance, or establishment, of larger units of organization. Technical skill, knowledge and dedicated service should be made available as widely as possible; the economic and social needs of the backward territories demand aid on a scale only to be met by world effort. Accordingly we welcome the idea of an international colonial commission, which would have the right to inform itself upon the condition of subject territories, to report to whatever world political organization is created upon breaches of international undertakings, to supervise the application of pooled international resources in carrying forward economic and social development, and to watch over the development of self-government. Some such form of international supervision over not-fully-self-governing territories can be combined, as the League of Nations mandates system has shown, with that direct administration of each of these territories by some single Power, which experience has shown to be the most practical working arrangement, though, under modern conditions, it has become improbable that even the strongest single Power will continue to be able to defend and develop dependencies single-handed.

We have already stated our conviction that there must be an adequate international control of armed power, and our hope that the present association of the United Nations may develop into a world political organization in which would be vested armed power sufficient to prevent renewed aggression and the preparation of future wars. We think it essential to approach this question by way of a search for the means of a responsible, combined maintenance of peace, rather than by way of an effort to limit armament. As the American Mission remarks: "the positive purpose of control is to bring such military establishments as remain into the affirmative service of international order."

In this connection we think it right to include some definite statement regarding the treatment of the vanquished enemies. They must be disarmed and deprived of the means of aggression; but at the same time we must take care that there is open to their citizens the same opportunity as other people enjoy of an equal share in all that conduces to the good life, so soon as and so long as their states behave as good neighbors among the other states. The settlement following on their defeat must be militarily and politically severe, including the punishment of those proved guilty of crimes committed in this war; but it must be such that coming generations, in those countries, looking back with a fuller knowledge on the events of these years, can accept it as just. This involves a discrimination between those who direct the totalitarian regime in particular enemy countries, and those who are either its victims or its adversaries. We attach great importance to promoting by every possible means an increase in the influence, in these countries, of the elements in them which are most in sympathy with the ideals of world order set forth here, and in this connection we look forward to an increase in the collaboration of the churches across the divisions between the nations now on opposite sides of the conflict.

VI

With the emphasis laid by the American Commission upon securing to individuals everywhere the right to religious and intellectual liberty we wholly agree. We consider that not only the rights of conscience of individuals but the proper freedom of churches as worshipping and witnessing bodies ought to be respected and preserved, and this should of course apply to the adherents of all religions. We attach great importance also to academic freedom both for the individual and for such organizations as universities. The problem of the refugee is likely to occupy much of the energy of the United Nations as of other friendly peoples, and although it includes many issues beyond that of safeguarding the differences of different groups in matters of religion and conscience, we think that no world settlement which does not give reasonable security and freedom to the religious, cultural and other minorities, and especially to the most ancient of all the Jewish people, can be said to have succeeded.

Governing all else is the mood or temper in which we approach the peace. We shall be very weary, and fatigue is a selfish mood. There will be great temptation to relax, to shirk responsibility, and to gather for our own advantage the fruits of victory. If we do that, the interval between this war and the next may be less than the twenty years of restless truce that ended in 1939. We need still the spirit of dedication and of sacrifice for the general good, which now means no less than the good of all the peoples upon the earth. For the tasks, though immense, are those which arise out of the historical situation in which we stand, and this situation, to those who believe in the Living God, is with all its vast responsibilities and difficulties still within the providence and purpose of God. It is He Who has given to us at this time the opportunity to serve in a manner new in history the interests of all mankind.

This spirit of service for the common good must be embodied in institutions designed to maintain and express it. Thus every nation which has the care of colonial dependencies should give an account of its stewardship to an international authority. Every nation should conform its commercial and industrial policy to principles laid down by an international council of economic reconstruction. And every nation should supply its quota of armed force to the world or regional council of security, so that the very armaments of the nation should be changed from being the instruments of selfish interest and mutual injury to become the common instrument of all peoples in the cooperative enterprise of civilization.

Institutions alone can effect little. The common institutions must serve common purposes and policies—in particular the establishment of freedom from fear and freedom from want. But these purposes can exist at all only so far as the people of the nations entertain them. To create a fellowship of all peoples in acceptance and pursuit of those purposes is a primary responsibility of Christians in all lands.

For in the end what is needed above all else is the recognition of clear moral standards which the nations and the citizens of the nations accept—in other words, the Law and Purpose of God. We need a change of heart; but we need also a standard for our conduct, a law to obey. We call men to recognize the Law of God as that by which they seek to guide their conduct, in national as in personal affairs, and as that by which they agree that their conduct should be judged.

CAN CHRISTIANITY HELP?

tance of an occasional excursion into what our grandfathers called Natural Religion, as opposed to the Christian revelation.

If man requires God, and if there is purpose behind human events, it becomes necessary for him to find that relationship to God and to further the Divine Purpose. That brings us back to where we began. The godly man is deeply concerned that the idea of God and the will of God shall dominate human affairs. The rule of God must therefore be preached with new insistence. All our troubles in the world today may be traced to its denial. Totalitarian philosophy has eliminated first—a God who is Father, second—a God who is concerned with the needs of all His children, and third—a brotherhood under a common father. Step by step it has edged out these ideas because they interfere with the ideal of racial or national supremacy. The world knows to its sorrow what tragedy has followed this denial.

Is there a road back? Can we restore the rule of God in human life? To the Christian there is only one answer. We can and we must.

In a recent booklet of the Forward Movement of the Episcopal Church there is a description of a man in deep mental distress. His pastor tried to show him the way out. "How would you get started on this?" the man asked. "If I were in your place," said the clergyman, "I'd get down on my knees and say out my own personal needs to whomever or whatever is running things in the universe." "Do you mean right here?" asked the man. "What better place than your own living room?" answered his pastor. And down on their knees they went and the man prayed something like this: "O God, if there be a God, help me now because I need it." That was all, but from it the man grew into a beautiful and a gracious religious faith.

Do we dare to act on the faith in God that we possess??

been accomplished. The Report reminds us that under the best of circumstances a long period of further negotiations lies ahead. It is a good time for a new Commission to be appointed. We recommend that all the present members of the Commission on Approaches to Unity be relieved of further service and that an entirely new membership be appointed including a larger number of parish priests.

Finally we would offer the following resolutions as substitutes for the combined Resolution numbered ——— in the Report.

RESOLVED, the House of concurring, that this General Convention receives with appreciation the Report of the Commission on Approaches to Unity and the Minority Report on the sections dealing with the Presbyterian Church.

RESOLVED, the Huse of concurring, that the Commission on Approaches to Unity be reappointed with a new membership which shall be more representative of the whole Church than is the present membership and that the Commission be authorized to initiate or to continue conversations with representatives of other Christian bodies with special emphasis on deepening the friendly relationship already established between the Protestant Episcopal Church and the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. through a persistent program of education over a period of years before specific terms of union shall be formulated.

RESOLVED, the House of concurring, that because of the intimate contacts existing throughout the world between the various branches of the Anglican Communion and corresponding branches of Presbyterianism, any commitments looking toward organic union between the Protestant Episcopal Church and the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. should first be submitted to the Lambeth Conference for counsel and advice before any action is asked of General Convention in order that the Anglican Communion may continue to speak in unison on matters which affect the welfare of the whole.

RESOLVED, the House of concurring, that the sum of five thousand ($5,000) be appropriated for the work of the Commission on Approaches to Unity during the next triennium.

CAPTAIN SOU'WESTER

Almost every afternoon when Captain Sou'wester was not busy catching crabs or digging clams or fishing for tomcod, Jane went across the road to his house and sat on his porch with him and asked Captain Sou'wester to tell her a story.

Captain Sou'wester's name was not really Captain Sou'wester, but Jane called him that because he was almost always wearing a black oilskin sou'wester hat. The sou'wester hat seemed almost as much a part of the old man as his gray whiskers. Jane admired both the hat and the whiskers very much. But she admired Captain Sou'wester's stories most of all.

"Tell me about the time you were shipwrecked," Jane would say, and then Captain Sou'wester would tell her about the time he had been shipwrecked.

Or Jane would say, "Tell about the time you saw ten whale all spouting at once." And then Captain Sou'wester would tell about ten whales.

Sometimes Jane said, "Please tell about the mermaid." And then Captain Sou'wester would tell about the time he thought he had glimpsed a mermaid in the waves, though, he said, it might have been a seal or a dolphin. Jane preferred to think it was a mermaid.

At any rate, it was a mermaid in the song which Captain Sou'wester sometimes sang for Jane.

"'Twas there I saw a pretty mermaid
With a comb and a glass in her hand."

Many things about visiting the seashore were fun. Wading in the little waves was fun, and building sand castles was fun and hunting for shells was fun. Jane wished she never had to go home to the city.

The two very best things about the seashore, Jane thought, were Captain Sou'wester, who was hardly ever too busy to tell stories, and the song the waves sang night and day. Jane loved the waves' song. She could hear it when she waked up in the morning and she could hear it when she was going to sleep at night. She could hear it any time during the day when she listened for it.

But at last it was time to leave the seashore and go back to the city. Mother was packing the bags and the suitcases. Jane's play suit was packed and Jane had to put on her going-on-the train clothes. There was just time left to go and say good-bye to Captain Sou'wester and Mrs. Captain Sou'wester.

Jane went across the road and sat on Captain Sou'wester's porch beside him. "Can you tell me a new story, one you haven't told me?" Jane asked Captain Sou'wester.

"There isn't time for a story if you're going to catch that train," Captain Sou'wester said. "But I have a good-bye present for you. It's something that used to belong to my little girl who is grown up now. I brought it to her from the South Seas when she was about your size."

Captain Sou'wester took Jane into his parlor and handed her a lovely large shell from the mantel. It was a white shell with a beautiful pink lining.

"When ever you get lonely for the ocean just hold that shell to your ear and you'll hear the song of the waves again. If you listen real hard you might even hear a mermaid singing," Captain Sou'wester said.

Jane held the shell close to her ear. "Oh! Oh! Oh! It sounds as though there were a little ocean inside the shell," she cried. "Oh, thank, you, Captain Sou'wester."

So Jane took the big shell back to the city with her and whenever she felt lonely for the seashore and Captain Sou'wester she held the shell close to her ear. Then as she listened the shell sang softly like far-off waves. Sometimes Jane was almost sure she could hart a faint mermaid song, too.

"The wide blue sea is always here,
And you'll be coming back next year."

was what Jane hoped the mermaid sang.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF THE NEWS

REPORT OF WASHINGTON COMMISSION ON SEE FOR PRESIDING BISHOP

A Presiding Bishop's See has been in the mind of our Church for many long years. Because the Church has not come to a definite decision about it the possible candidates for this High Office have been limited by geography and the size of the Diocese.

However, as time has passed the office of Presiding Bishop has changed and his duties have become greater and with the war and the reconstruction program for foreign missions and other programs that are anticipated after the war his duties will become still greater.

Therefore, he should be freed from all extra or Diocesan duties when he is elected to this office for life with a set retirement age.

What is the simplest way to accomplish this?

The Joint Committee to Consider the Matter of a See for the Presiding Bishop has suggested three simple steps to accomplish this:

1. As soon as any bishop is elected Presiding Bishop he shall resign his jurisdiction.

2. A Presiding Bishop's House, with offices, shall be erected in the District of Columbia.

3. At his retirement he shall receive a retirement allowance equal to half his salary as Presiding Bishop, minus whatever the Pension Fund allowance might be.

The Presiding Bishop now has by resolution of the General Convention and cooperation of the National Cathedral a seat in the Cathedral of Washington commensurate with his office.

The Presiding Bishop is now honorary chairman of the Cathedral Chapter. The National Cathedral is not now owned or governed by the Diocese of Washington, but by a Chapter or Board whose membership is more or less national. There is also an Advisory Council that is national and interdenominational. The Cathedral has been built and is supported by contributions from people all over the world.

The College of Preachers has been serving the whole Church and is supported by endowments.

So the Presiding Bishop would come into a set-up which has always had a national aspect without adding to his duties in taking care of it.

Now about the residence in the District of Columbia or on the Cathedral Close near his seat. There are several reasons why that should be, especially now and in the next few years. The Presiding Bishop has been commissioning his ambassadors or missionaries to all parts of the world and as soon as the war is over he will be sending forth many more. The world is looking toward Washington as the center of the greatest Christian Democracy of all time. They will look more and more for the Christian Ambassadors of Christ to come from that center too. Even now our Presiding Bishop is finding it necessary to confer with the Representatives of many foreign countries and the State Department in regard to our present mission fields. Now, much more in the future will this be necessary as new fields are being opened as new victories are being won by the Allies.

Another reason is that Washington is conveniently located between the north and the south and trains reach out in all directions toward the West. And after the war Washington will probably be the hub of one of the greatest commercial airlines of all times. Washington also has trains running every hour to New York so that it would be convenient for the Presiding Bishop to attend National Council meetings and other meetings by train or air.

There is nothing in the Constitution or Canons of the Church that requires our Presiding Bishop to have territorial jurisdiction so why burden him with any. He has sufficient real Jurisdiction as it is:

He is the President of the National Council, including the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society, and as such directs the general missionary work of the Church at home and abroad. (Canon 61.)

He has oversight of all the Domestic Missionary Districts of the Church, and in case of a vacancy in any one of these Districts is in charge of the same, and may appoint some Bishop as his Deputy to exercise his jurisdiction therein until an election can be made. (Canon 15, Sec. VI.)

All Missionary Bishops must report annually to him (Canon 20, Sec. III.)

He has the oversight of all the American Churches in Europe and Foreign lands not within the Jurisdiction of any Bishop of this Church. (Canon 57, IV, VII.)

He also has many other duties and jurisdictions provided by Canons.

Now, in regard to his retirement.

When the Church requires its Presiding Bishop to resign from his Diocese he no longer has a diocese to return to after his retirement as Presiding Bishop, which time is set by Canon the nearest General Convention after his 68th birthday. So the same provision is suggested for our Presiding Bishop as is in practice with our missionaries.

This set-up is the simplet and easiest as it only needs a few Canons to be passed to accomplish it. Then it would be possible for the General Convention to elect any bishop in the whole Church as Presiding Bishop.

Clyde Brown,
Secretary of the Joint Committee.

CHAPLAINS' EXPERIENCES HELPFUL IN FUTURE WORK

Washington—Many chaplains now serving in the armed services will return to civilian life after the war much better clergymen for their experiences, judging from two reports received this week by Captain Robert D. Workman, Chief of Chaplains, U. S. Navy.

Both reports are from men serving in the South Pacific. Our chaplain feels he will be a better minister after the war because in the Navy "the little petty things are stripped away and one has time only for those things that are important and real."

Continuing, this chaplain expresses a reaction that is general among clergymen in service: "Since leaving the States my work has been varied and challenging. What an effect this is having on my attitude regarding the message of religion! If the other clergy are having similar experiences, those who return home should be able to do much more effective and vital work."

The second report is from Lieutenant (jg) Gordon V. Tollefson, ChC, USN, who is regimental chaplain for a Marine unit. He writes: "I wouldn't trade my experience for anything. It will mean a definite enrichment of my ministry when I return."

Speaking to the churches at home Chaplain Tollefson said: "The Church at large cannot remain aloof nor apart from the experience which our young men are going through. We must talk the language of the men when they come back, and to do that we must suffer the same discomforts and dangers."

Chaplain Tollefson is 28 years old, the son of Rev. Sander Tollefson, pastor of the American Lutheran Church at Huron, North Dakota. He served a Lutheran church in Idaho for a year before becoming a Navy chaplain.

Describing his ministry to the Marines, the Chaplain admits the sermons he preaches now are different from those at home.

"I try to show the men that the word of God is practical, fitting into their every need," he wrote. "I tell them that Christianity is a he-man affair. It is staunch stuff all the way through. It has power and punch. It enables a man to carry on, it gives him new strength when his own is leaving him in a moment of crisis."

Chaplain Tollefson received a B. A. degree from St. Olaf College at Northfield, Minn. After graduation he enlisted in the Navy as a flying cadet and gained a total of 485 flying hours before he decided to become a clergyman. Receiving an honorable discharge he entered Lutheran Theological Seminary, St. Paul, Minn., and in June, 1941, was ordained.

This experience as a Navy flier has been valuable, because, as a Marine Combat Correspondent recently expressed it: "When the men go out on a 20-mile conditioning hike and bivouac overnight in the jungle, the chaplain marches right alongside, weighted down like the others with a heavy pack. When the men complain of blisters, the chaplain is there to prove he's no exception."

WAR AFFECTING CHURCH'S WORK IN MEXICO

New York, N. Y.—Speaking of the war's effect upon the Church's work in Mexico, Bishop Efrain Salinas y Velasco, says that foreign citizens of various allied countries and members of English-speaking congregations have left Mexico, offering their services to their respective nations. "Mexican Episcopalians from some of our rural areas have also left for the States to work on farms, etc. This migration has resulted in a notable decrease in attendance at our religious services, especially in many of our rural missions," the Bishop says.

"Black marketing and larger exportation of supplies has brought a continuous increase in the cost of living. These two facts have reflected in a larger extent on the giving capacity of our people, which is decreasing as salaries for the most part have not been raised proportionately. On the other side, the exodus of so many people has roused the devotional life of our Church people, especially the women, who now feel more deeply the need of God's help and the counsel and comfort of the Church's ministers, and the Church's religious services, to pray for God's protection on their dear ones, either fighting or working in distant lands."

"Many opportunities are open," Bishop Salinas declares. "Many applications come to the Bishop's office, asking for missionaries to start new work in various States. I have to say that much to my regret I am unable to meet many of these applications because of lack of workers."

DATE CHANGED FOR CONSECRATION OF NEW BISHOP IN JERUSALEM

New York, N. Y.—The National Council has been informed by radiogram from London, that a new date has been set for the consecration of the new Bishop in Jerusalem, the Ven. W. H. Stewart. The consecration date was originally fixed for Ascension Day, but was postponed because of Archdeacon Stewart's inability to get to England from Palestine in time.

Tre Archbishop of Canterbury has now designated September 21, the Feast of St. Matthew, for the consecration, which will be held, presumably, in St. Paul's Cathedral, with Archbishop Temple officiating.

CLERGY CONFERENCE HELD IN KNOXVILLE

A small exploratory Clergy Conference was held here under the leadership of Rev. Richard R. Beasley, Rector of St. John's, Knoxville, Tennessee, on the subject, "Growth in Our Church". It was motivated by three facts: (1) The Episcopal Church has something precious that will appeal to all classes of people and minister to their lives. (2) Its growth is slow in most places and almost negligible in the smaller towns. (3) Means of promoting the growth of the Episcopal Church is timely in view of the talk on all sides in regard to post-War planning. Some of the findings: Our Church continues principally a city Church, and in many places a class Church. It is not growing in missions, in rural areas and in towns under 15,000, but usually only holding its own. Its growth in static communities is impossible, therefore, there is wisdom in the Church's getting established early in defense areas and other localities where fresh communities are arising. Obviously, also, there is no growth where there is no Sunday School. It has been demonstrated that the Church can appeal to all groups, mountain and rural folk, as well as sophisticated city dwellers. We have a duty to use "sanctified imagination" to commend our Church to the people in any way possible. Explaining Morning Prayer or the dialogue Holy Communion or Evening Celebration of the Holy Communion would seem to be all to the good as teaching agencies and as ways to reach the people where they are.

We always over-estimate how much the laity, both in and outside, know about the Episcopal Church. Many people do not know how to belong to the Episcopal Church. Having the laity on the lookout in the congregation to get the names of visitors is a great aid in helping the Rector follow up prospects. Great value has been found in the zone system where it has been efficiently used.

The subjects discussed are as follows:

Subjects

1. The Dark Picture of Our Church.
2. Some Encouraging Signs.
3. Causes of Present Conditions.
4. Where We Are Strong—Where Weak.
5. How We Can Commend Our Church.

7. Our Practical Assets.
8. Some New Ventures and Techniques.
9. What We Have Found Successful.

Among those attending were: The Rev. Richard R. Beasley, Rector, St. John's Church; the Rev. Frank N. Butler, Assistant, St. John's Church; the Rev. Eugene N. Hopper, Rector, St. James' Church, Knoxville, Tennessee. The Rev. Joseph Lodge Kellermann, Rector, St. Paul's Church, Murfreesboro, Tennessee; the Rev. William S. ## UNITED CHURCH CANVASS TO BE TRIED IN DETROIT

Detroit, Michigan—The plan of a United Church Canvass for all churches and synagogues in Detroit is to be tried this fall, according to the announcement of the Detroit Council of Churches. The decision to hold the united canvass came as a result of the interest of the Ven. Leonard P. Hagger, Archdeacon of the Diocese of Michigan, one of the Vice-Presidents of the Council of Churches and Chairman of its Comity Department, with the support of the Rev. Charles Scheid, of the Grosse Pointe Congregational Church. The Detroit Council of Churches believes that this will be the first time a United Church Canvass will have been held in a large metropolitan center, although the plan has met with much success in more than 200 smaller communities.

The chairman of the United Church Canvass is Mr. Harold Thompson, a member of the Executive Council of the Diocese of Michigan, and a member of its Departments of Religious Education and Promotion. Vice-Chairmanship has been accepted by Mr. Samuel J. Lang, a member of the Methodist Communion and a lay leader of the Detroit annual conference of the Methodist Church, and the Treasurer is to be Mr. S. R. Kingston, of the Congregational Communion. These men were selected for service not because of their affiliation with any particular Communion, but because of their consecration and ability.

The general plan is for the laymen to publicize the United Church Canvass and to make all preparations for it, but to leave to the ordained leadership of every church the working out of the individual parish program and the administration of the campaign in that congregation.

The general committee, feeling that participation in a common cause will mean much to the churches even before the start of the campaign, has requested every congregation in Detroit to contribute some amount towards the necessary expenses of the United Church Canvass. This request is meeting with good response.

And one more recommendation, if I may make it please you, much more than us, on your Pacific front will have to be fellow-planners with China, I suggest that you read "Asia and Democracy" by Pearl Buck (Macmillan). It is slight and simple, but contains most necessary doctrines, which must be held and practiced if we really want, with God, that new and better world.

Perhaps, Sir, by the time you print these lines (and I hope and pray—yes, I do pray—that you will print them), you will have met our great, our utterly outstanding General Smuts. It is some 30 years since I first met him, and you can be always discovering fresh elements in his true greatness, for like our South African gold, which you store for stability, his richness for true stability is not in the least superficial. I often most gratefully thank God for three men, your Roosevelt, our Churchill, whose mother you claim, and our Smuts, a most splendid trio; when you have read the Dean's book I feel sure that you will make it a quartet and will cheer loudly as Stalin mounts the platform of world liberators, then Pearl Buck will say, "It is really a quintet, you know," and up will go Chiang Kai-shek so greatly assisted by his American-trained wife, and of course there are others of our leaders worthy to mount that platform, too. And as we follow these great leaders called at this time I believe by God Himself, and follow, above all, the one supreme leader, the way, the truth, whom General Smuts has proclaimed as "the Man of Nazareth, the one infallible Guide." then as we follow these God-given rulers, and above all, Him whose rule means universal righteousness, we shall be working for that day "the day that shall surely come, when the world shall be filled with the glory of God as the waters cover the sea"—God grant it.

DEATHS

Prof. A. M. Strange

Prof. A. M. Strange, former president of the Okolona Industrial School and a member of the faculty, died July 7, 1943, at the age of 59. Funeral services were held at the Tupelo Baptist Church with all the Negro ministers of the community officiating, assisted by Rev. Charles G. Hamilton, of Aberdeen, former chaplain of Okolona Industrial School.

Professor Strange was one of the great educational leaders of his people. A graduate of Alcorn State College, he began his work by starting, in Jefferson Davis County, the first Rosenwald school in Mississippi. Then at Kentwood, Louisiana, he established the first County Training School for Negroes. After building several other training schools in Louisiana, he came to Tupelo, Mississippi, where for fifteen years he labored in building up the Lee County Training School.

In 1933 he was named President of the Okolona Industrial School, a church institute school which he made into a junior college. Under his leadership a dozen buildings were added to the school and much scholastic as well as material progress made. He went from there to be President of the Ministerial Institute and College at West Point, Miss., where he again built up a dilapidated and dying school into a solid institution. He was called back to Okolona this year, and he had been only there a few weeks when he died.

Prof. Strange was the first Negro elected as delegate to the General Convention of the Episcopal Church. He was a speaker at the Cincinnati and Kansas City General Conventions, and a loyal member of the church. Under his leadership the chapel of St. Bernard's, at the Okolona School was constructed, and he made Christian Education a part of the curriculum. He was a constructive leader in promoting friendliness between the races, and his life was a credit to the South.

Rev. Hulbert A. Woolfall, D. D.

The Rev. Hulbert A. Woolfall, D. D., recently rector of St. Peter's Church, St. Louis, Mo., died in Rockville, Maryland, on Thursday, August 5, 1943. Dr. Woolfall had been confined to a sanatorium there for the past eighteen months.

Dr. Woolfall was well known and beloved in the Diocese of Washington, having been ordained to the diaconate in 1926 and to the priesthood in 1927 by the late Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop of Washington. His first rectorship was St. Philip's, Laurel, Maryland, but in 1928 he became rector of St. Mark's, in Washington, where he served until 1932. During this time he did outstanding work for the Parish. His former congregation and his many friends in Washington always welcomed him as he returned from year to year as one of the guest preachers at The Church of the Epiphany during the Lenten Services.

The funeral service was conducted at St. Mark's Church on Sunday, August 8, by the Rev. G. Freeland Peter, D. D., assisted by Rev. Clifford L. Stanley, rector of St. Peter's Church, St. Louis, Mo., and the Rev. Thomas L. Small, locum tenens at St. Mark's. Many of the clergy of the Diocese of Washington attended the funeral, and the entire vestry of St. Mark's Church and the Senior Warden of St. Peter's, St. Louis, were honorary pallbearers.

Interment was in Woodlawn Cemetery, New York.

Millions on the Move

LIKE shifting sands of the desert, our American population is on the move today. Millions have changed and are changing their places and conditions of living. Into military camps and war industry areas has flowed a steady stream of soldiers and artisans and their families and as a result many communities have been flooded with new people while others have been drained dry of manpower and womanpower.

These changes have created problems of housing and transportation but, even more important they have created social, moral, and religious problems of inconceivable magnitude.

The Church must go to these people and already is doing so in a goodly number of communities. Children must be baptized and instructed; young people counselled, advised, and confirmed; home life stabilized by religion. Already parishes, dioceses, and the national Church, independently and together, are at work. But much remains to be done. Countless opportunities are open if the Church provides funds and manpower.

New methods and techniques are being worked out, in many cases in co-operation with other Christian bodies. A limited amount of financial assistance has been granted by the national Church where local resources are inadequate and the program sound.

An example of how the Church has moved quickly to meet new conditions is at the huge Glenn Martin airplane plant near Baltimore where thousands of families suddenly moved in. The Episcopal Church, in co-operation with other Churches and after careful surveys, worked out a constructive program, with each Church assuming responsibility for a given area. An Episcopal church was erected and a priest placed in charge. Today the work is going forward. Other projects equally striking, in shipyard, power plant, and munitions areas are under way in the Dioceses of Connecticut, Michigan, California, East Carolina, Oregon, and Los Angeles.

The Presiding Bishop is prepared to recommend an enlargement of the present program in war industry areas to General Convention, believing firmly as he does that such work, though temporary, constitutes a part of the Christian Offensive during the next few years.

THE domestic scene looms large in this Christian Offensive not alone in war industry and camp areas. College and university campuses, many of them now populated with units of the military services but without the usual military chaplaincies, are calling for help. The Church, already doing an excellent job in college work, must do more, both now and after the war, in providing the religious training for these thousands of young people who will be our leaders tomorrow.

The rural field likewise is ripe to the harvest. A permanent strategy providing better training of rural clergy and lay workers has been worked out by the national Church. Standards of living and pay of our rural workers must be raised and an aggressive program of expansion fostered. This will require more missionary support from the Church as a whole.

The war, too, has brought the Church face to face with her responsibilities and opportunities among minority racial groups, many of them United States citizens though of Mexican, Chinese, Filipino, and Japanese ancestry. One new missionary in New Mexico, for example, could bring into the Church hundreds of Mexicans who are now without religious training.

THESE are but a few illustrations of the Christian Offensive here at home. Our nation is engaged in a global war for the preservation of the democratic way of life. Yet democracy of itself is not enough; it must be a Christian democracy and our Church's missionary program is a vital element in the future of the nation and the world. America must be made Christian if the world is to be won for Christ. The new missionary program which the Presiding Bishop will recommend to General Convention is designed to help attain this end.

THOUGHTS FOR THE THOUGHTFUL

Hope must come out of what we have, or it is not hope, but a dream.
—Pearl Buck.

"A hungry man in Cambodia is a threat to the well fed in every American city."

From the lowest depths there is a path to the loftiest height, and for the poor also a gospel has been published.
—Carlyle.

There is a Christian war going on. It needs an army, not a drift of stragglers.
—Bishop Barry.

O wash me, Thou, without, within,
Or purge with fire, if that must be:
No matter how, if only sin
Die out in me.

Christ suffices for every heart, whatever the degree of spiritual intelligence there may be, or whether the capacity to appreciate spiritual things be small or great.

Willingness to think in world terms is the distinctive moral mark of our times. —Bishop McConnell.

Henry Ward Beecher once said to a deacon of Brooklyn Tabernacle: "If you see anybody asleep, come and wake ME up!"

Dignity, and rank, and riches, are all corruptible; but moral character has an immortality that no sword-point can destroy; that ever walks the world.

It does not matter how great the pressure is, it matters only where the pressure lies; whether it comes between you and God, or whether it presses you closer to His heart —Hudson Taylor.

The Christian is committed to a belife which is foolishness by any ordinary rational standard; the belief that his ordinary human nature not only can be, but is being, changed. He has been made partaker of the divine nature. To the same participation all men are invited, and in it is humanity's only hope. —E. Percy.

No public duties or communal burdens, or prolonged strain absorbing all our energies can dismiss as irrelevant from our hearts and minds the love of those within the inner circle which God and ourselves have drawn round us. Therefore, the simple expressions of affection, words, letters, photographs, parcels, all the paraphernalia of the kind thought and warm heart, have significance and importance even in a world at war.
—Rev. Guy Rogers.

Our great danger is not one of infidelity. It is not a likelihood that men would deliberately deny and denounce God, but the great danger is that men would acknowledge the deity of God and not serve Him. The great danger is not that men will deny the inspiration of the Scriptures, but they will accept them as such and then not live by them. The great dange ris not that men will hate the church and seek to destroy it, but the danger lies rather in the fact that men will be sympathetic towards it but will leave it alone and allow it to die for neglect or support.

Great Christian Offensive Can Sieze War-Created Opportunities

Episcopal Church Head Points to Need in This Country and in Other Lands as Challenges to Church and Factors in New, Better World

Far-Reaching Results Will Be Felt Long After War Is Ended

New York, N. Y.—"The time has come when the Church must launch a Christian offensive designed to take advantage of some of the tremendous opportunities resulting from the war," declares the Rt. Rev. Henry St. George Tucker, Presiding Bishop of the Episcopal Church.

Bishop Tucker says that people are reading in their newspapers almost daily, stories about present and future military offensives, and he urges all Christian people to take advantage, in planning and action, of opportunities which, he says, "may be called wartime opportunities, but their results will be felt long after the war is concluded."

There are many of these opportunities, the Bishop believes, both in foreign lands and here in the United States. In distant lands he cited as an example, the missionary call from Free China, that vast section in west and southwest China into which millions have migrated under pressure of war. "A gallant group of Chinese and American missionaries has gone along with them and today is doing one of the finest pieces of missionary work in the history of the Church, in the face of terrific obstacles," Bishop Tucker said. He said, too, that even in occupied China Christian work is going on, and a great period of reconstruction will be necessary as soon as the war is over.

Other examples mentioned by the Bishop are in Latin America, "where younger Churches of growing strength will depend on us for aid in training native clergy, in developing educational projects, and in opening up new work," and India, from which comes "an urgent demand for advance. Thousands who seek entrance to the Church would not be turned away if we could play a more vigorous part."

On the home front, the Bishop declared that opportunities of equal magnitude are open. He mentioned the Negro race announcing that the Episcopal Church has inaugurated a new program among the Negroes, but that it needs much expansion. Another example, he said, lies in the war industry areas, "a great, if perhaps temporary field, involving the largest migration our country has ever known."

All of these needs, and many others, Bishop Tucker declares are clear calls from God. "Our response will require strenuous effort and real sacrifice. We do not grudge the effort and sacrifice necessary for victory in the war. Shall we not be equally ready to pay the price that will be needed to embrace the opportunities to bring into being that new and better world which we as Christians believe to be God's purpose for mankind?"

EARLY CHURCHES IN NORTHEAST OHIO

It was 1796 when Moses Cleaveland and a party of surveyors reached the site on the southern shore of Lake Erie which later was to be a great city known by his name. He had an assignment from the state of Connecticut to survey that state's Western Reserve. A second group of surveyors followed in one year. In this second group there was a clergyman of the Protestant Episcopal Church, the Rev. Seth Hart.

Mr. Hart had no church building, but he evidently found the people of the vicinity ready for religious services. According to his own report he conducted services and officiated at weddings, funerals and baptisms. One of the workmen was drowned in the Grand River. Mr. Hart officiated at the service. He reports that it was the first time that white people had formally attended a funeral service at Cleaveland. There were present 32 men, seven women and three children.

Mr. Hart did not continue long in the Reserve and the next name which appears in the religious history is a missionary, the Rev. Joseph Badger, who seems to have had a joint commission from the Presbyterian and Congregational churches. It was not until 1816 that Cleaveland saw the actual organization of an Episcopal Church.

Trinity Parish, which eventually evolved into Trinity Cathedral, was organized in the home of Phineas Shepherd in the village of Brooklyn, which lies west of the Cuyahoga River. This was the first religious organization in Cleveland. Evidently there was considerable rivalry between Brooklyn and Cleaveland for in 1820 the church was removed to the western village. "The word 'Cleaveland' will in the future be omitted in the records of the parish," said the report. But six or seven years later the church was moved back east of the river. Trinity Parish was incorporated in 1828 and its first building consecrated in 1829.

While there is no record of Episcopal churches in Cleaveland between the visit of the Rev. Seth Hart and the organizing of Trinity Parish, there was much activity in the surrounding country. Laymen were meeting in homes and many requests went back to the east asking for prayer books. Churches which were later to be organized had their informal creation in the homes of the pioneers. Official visitors who came later found much of their organizational work done for them.

St. James Church at Boardman was organized in 1809. It has just celebrated the 134th anniversary of its organization and the 114th anniversary of the erection of its church building which is still being used. This charming edifice is a definite landmark of the past with the present. Other early parishes were St. Peter's, Ashtabula (1816), Christ, Windsor (1817), St. Peter's, Medina (1817), St. Luke's, Ravenna (1817). The organization of the churches beginning in 1816 was stimulated by the oversight of two clergymen sent as missionaries to Ohio—Roger Searle and Philander Chase who was to become the first Bishop of the Diocese to be organized in 1818.

These historic incidents are of especial interest in view of the 54th Triennial Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the U. S. A., which will be held in Cleveland, October 2-11.

HAVEN . . .

By J. W. KENNEDY

The old familiar phrase, "that he who runs may read", was called to my attention last week as a misquote from the book of Habakkuk which had a different meaning in its original context. I turned to Habakkuk at this first oppjortunity and found the reading of this phrase went like this in the King James version: "I will stand upon my watch and set me upon the tower, and will watch to see what he will say unto me, and what I shall answer when I am reproved. And the Lord answered me, and said, write the vision and make it plain upon tables, that he may run that readeth it. For the vision is yet for an appointed time but at the end it shall speak, and not lie: though it tarry, wait for it; because it will surely come, it will not tarry." The reference is found in Chapter 2 verses 1, 2 and 3.

But in Goodspeed the vision is to be written "clearly upon the tablets, that one may read it on the run." Verse three also concludes a bit differently, "If it tarry, wait for it; for it will surely come without delay." Beginning with verse 4 we find the message or the vision and what the prophet is tarrying for. "Behold, his soul which is lifted up is not upright in him; but the just shall live by his faith." In other words, the point of this section is not contained in the familiar run and read passage but in the just and live passage. St. Paul quotes this very passage two times, in Romans 1:17 and in Galatians 3:11; giving it a fuller meaning than it has here, for the word that the Prophet uses signifies "faithfulness" rather than "faith". "The sense of the whole message would appear to be this: The soul of the evil man cannot stand upright. It collapses. The soul of the good man is steadfast and therefore survives. It is not might but right that, in the long run, survives all ordeals, as time will prove."

It is not so much then the running or the reading for they are both stymied because of the foreign army on the march against them. They are perplexed and troubled, not knowing what to do. The picture seems to be of the people poised for flight, but waiting for a word from God telling them what to do, and of the implication that the message will be so brief that they may literally read it and run or read it on the move. For every time of waiting upon God for knowing the right choice or decision to make is like this. Our admonition gained from this passage might well be "So let us take our stand with the Prophet on his watch-tower, and wait for the revealing word that none but God can give."

Several other lessons lie in wait for us between the lines.

We are never moving so fast that we cannot catch a bit of God's revelation if we remember to look for it.

We must be prepared to snatch every good thing we can and run with the good news to those who need it most, without delay—the need is so great and messengers so few.

But running or waiting we must still bear with faithfulness and patience whatever comes (invasion, plague, adversity, the temporary victories of the wicked, injustice and all other evil things) until God lightens the darkness of our incomplete knowledge.

But Habakkuk cautions us we must stand in a watch tower on the alert, ready for the message when it comes. He knew that one of these days the patient one who waited and received would be able to run unhindered by the enemy.

Stand daily, then, ready to receive what God would have us know and do between the dawns.

Broadcast August 9, 1943.

The Quickening Power

By THE REV. C. AVERY MASON, S. T. D.,

Administrative Secretary, Forward in Service

The General Convention of 1934, held in the midst of depression, was guided by the Holy Spirit to establish the Forward Movement so that by daily prayer and meditation the Church might recover spiritual vigor to more perfectly witness to the Truth. That Movement has maintained its high quality. One illustration of this fact is that 300,000 copies of each issue of Forward day by day are still used.

In 1940 General Convention, under guidance of the Holy Spirit, was led to establish Forward in Service, a ten-year program devised to quicken every organization, department and function of the Church so that the last half of this century may experience an outpouring of Christian life and witness in such quality and quantity as to affect vitally all of American life, and hence the life of the world.

In 1943 General Convention meets at Cleveland. Again the Holy Spirit will be present to guide the future efforts and actions of this upsurging life within Christ's Body—the Church.

What is the vision in specific terms? It is a vision of individual communicants reaffirming the vows of baptism and confirmation; parishes remembering they are corporate bodies whose function is to be outposts of God's Eternal Kingdom; dioceses planning and executing their work as closely integrated parts of Christ's Body; the National Church supplying yearly general objectives for the whole Church and suggesting, where needed, tried and proven methods of carrying out those objectives. We are to do the old things with renewed vision.

"We cannot tell how He will win the nations,
How He will claim His earthly heritage,
How satisfy the needs and aspirations,
Of East and West, of sinner and of sage.
But this we know, all flesh shall see His glory,
And He shall reap the harvest He has sown,
And some glad day His sun shall shine in splendor,
When He the Saviour, Saviour of the world, is known."

There is a sense of immediacy in the air today. The pattern for the future is being fixed now. A dozen authors have emphasized this in the past year. Dr. Lewis in the "Screwtape Letters" portrays "Screwtape" an expert devil as writing letters to his nephew "Wormwood", a devil of less experience. In effect, Screwtape says to Wormwood—"Never let Christians live in the present. Keep them remembering the past or dreaming of the future, for in the past they cannot touch God (The Enemy) nor can they be in intimate communion with God (The Enemy) in the future." It's the present that counts for here and now, in the present, Christians can be in touch with God. "Therefore," says Screwtape, "keep Christians from being and doing things now."

Perhaps it was a recognition of this fact which led Forward in Service in its Plan of Action for this year to emphasize CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY SERVICE. If American community life is to be developed we must do it now! If the Church as the Divine Society is to witness to the Christian corporate life within it, that witness must be made now! To say we haven't time to carry out in our parishes the following suggestions of Forward in Service is to invite the reply—"Each of us has all the time there is." If we cannot find God, and the corporate life of the Church is not real to us in the midst of wars and social upheaval, then we must admit that for us God is a creature of circumstance, and the Church a fair weather club.

Christian Community Service is making our cities, villages and rural areas realize that The Divine Society is in their midst. It is the Church challenging the world for its worldliness by living not talking the Gospel. Each parish is and must be a Holy City with gates through which the citizens come in and out—carrying out Christ's gifts of Light and Life and returning with the world's burden of Pain and Suffering and Sin to be placed at His feet. We are out to conquer the world, but to conquer the world, New York, St. Louis and Sussex County (wherever I live) must be conquered lest having preached to others my city, my community, my county may be cast away. Jargon and slipshod sentimentality must go. The fight we wage is to the bitter end for secularism must give place to Christ. Should we fail to render Christian Community Service we ought not to complain if totalitarian, communistic or Nazi community service is rendered.

The Plan of Action suggests four obvious ways of rendering Christian Community Service:

First—The social implications of our corporate worship are found in every page of the Prayer Book. Perhaps the greatest service we can render to our fellowmen is to lead them to see that Christian worship is concerned with their jobs, problems, joys and defeats. "We cannot sit down and be devotional while acquiescing in conditions which make it impossible for other souls even to obey the moral law." (Evelyn Underhill.) We reject totally the theory of Godlessness that the earning of one's daily bread is not related to his Sunday worship. The offering of "ourselves, our souls and bodies" as described in the Prayer Book are not idle words. We mean it: Corporate worship must be primary. We are not a society of worshippers but a worshipping society. The word liturgy means people-at-work, and whether it be Morning or Evening Prayer, The Litany or Holy Communion, we are corporately, people-at-work. Doing what? Summing up the week before. Every hour of labor or of pleasure, every thought and word and deed are presented to Him who died for us. Nor do we lose our identity in corporate worship. The laborers are to worship as laborers, doctors as doctors, mothers as mothers, clerks as clerks, and as such we contribute our lives and our all to the corporate worship of the Church. The Holy Spirit is not private property of any man or group. It is part of the Society of God and works in the society of man. We receive power as men and women who are laborers, doctors, mothers and clerks, and if corporate worship means anything at all we are to go out and use that power as laborers, doctors, mothers and clerks in the world. Work and worship must be related.

Why do men stay away from Christian worship? One answer is that they see no relationship between Sunday worship and the way they earn their living on Monday. They feel that the Church gives only half-hearted attention to the problems they face during the

Can Christianity Help? "Does God Speak?"

Second in a Series of Six Radio Addresses Station KMPC, Los Angeles March 24, 1943

Bishop of Los Angeles

We recall various ways in which we have been told that God speaks to us. He speaks in the lives of good men and women whose minds are unusually alert to the things of the spirit. Daniel Webster saw clear evidence of the divine in the life of his old aunt up in the New Hampshire hills. "When the Master of the universe has points to carry in His government," said Emerson, "He impresses His will in the structure of human minds."

God speaks in the world of nature, in the beauties of the seasons and living things, in the sun and rain and all that makes us glad to be alive. "Nature is a revelation of God; Art a revelation of man."

> "A voice is in the wind I do not know;
> A meaning of the face of the high hills
> Whose utterance I cannot comprehend,
> A something is behind that; that is God."
> —George MacDonald.

God speaks in the moral progress made by man and and institutions. "There is a divinity that shapes our ends." Even > "Though man sits still and takes his ease,

> God is at work on man;
> No means, no moment unemploy'd
> To bless him, if He can."
> —Young.

But our understanding of God in these revelations of Himself is made difficult by embarrassing facts that are hard to explain. For example, the best of men have their weaknesses and are not able to live up to their moments of inspiration or even their normal level of kindness and goodness. One suspects that even Daniel Webster's aunt was not always able to be true to her best self. Nature is sometimes a cruel mistress. "Red in tooth and claw," she seems to delight in torturing man with earthquakes, fires and floods. The moral progress of man is not always certain. It seems to be so and just when we feel it is reaching a new mark, something like the present war drives us back to the place where we started.

We seek, therefore, some declaration of God that is not confusing, some word that does not have perplexing associations. This was the hope of the Jewish people of old. They had a clear understanding of right and wrong and a keen thirst for righteousness. Our debt to them is a tremendous one. The Jews have been called the unquenchable optimists of history, hoping when hope seemed futile and believing when belief seemed vain. It was this hope of the ancient Jewish world for a perfect revelation of God that the Christian finds fulfilled in the Person of Christ who is the expression of God's mind and His plan for mankind. We find in Christ our answer to the query, "'Does God Speak?'" "God was in Christ reconciling the world to Himself" we say with conviction. "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son." The Episcopal Church with the whole Anglican Communion of which it is a part makes this its starting point in Christian thought and action.

We all seek to be better than we are. We are free men and women and have the power of choice which is "the strongest principle of human growth." Because we have the power of choice we make mistakes and the religious man is ever seeking to narrow the margin of wrong choices. In this search our plan and inspiration is the Person of the perfect Christ. God wants us to be better and in Jesus Christ He gives us the example and the means. Of all the religious leaders of history, only Jesus was able to face evil in thoroughgoing fashion and proclaim the truth that it can be conquered. He gave us a pattern of righteousness by showing us what real goodness is. Where we dimly apprehend, Christ discloses.

> "O Light that followest all my way,
> I yield my flickering torch to thee;
> My heart restores its borrowed ray,
> That in Thy sunshine's blaze its day
> May brighter, fairer be."
> —G. Matheson.

In His death upon the Cross, Jesus showed us how evil can be overcome by perfect unselfishness and self-sacrifice. In His parables, He told us much of the mercy of God and made it clear that no offense is a complete barrier to the divine love. The only condition to reconciliation is that something happen within the heart of man. We must want to be different. We must really crave a way of life that will be effective against our own special kind of weakness or meanness and that will be potent in every area of our activity.

> "Plenteous grace with Thee is found,
> Grace to cleanse from every sin;
> Let the healing streams abound,
> Make and keep me pure within."

All of this is involved in what we believe about Christ in the truth that we call the Incarnation. In Him we find something that can restore our lost sense of freedom, our hope for the future, and our joy in fellowship.

Christianity is not a code of ethics or a system of philosophy. It is a way of life. It is belief that Christ can and will help men, that He reveals to us God's will and our own possibilities. In Him we see the purpose for which we were created, the aim of human existence and the perfection which we must seek. In the death on Calvary we see the perfect obedience, humility and self-sacrifice which show how far righteousness can extend. This is so true and vivid to the earnest Christian that he must, of necessity, share it and he becomes a joyous crusader. That is the explanation of self-sacrificing service done in the name of Christ. It is the background of intrepid pioneers like James Chalmers who once said, "Recall the twenty-one years; give me its shipwrecks, give me its standings in the face of death, give me it surrounded with savages with spears and clubs, give me it back again with spears flying about me, with the clubs knocking me to the ground—give me it back and I will still be your missionary."

By entering into the perfect goodness of Christ and

Information Regarding Deferment of Pre.Theological Students and Recommendations Regarding Their Admisson to Seminaries

Many leaders in our churches and seminaries are troubled over the possible effect of the present Selective Service regulations upon the supply of students for the Protestant ministry, especially since the lowering of the draft age to 18. This concern has been expressed in a resolution adopted by the Executive Committee of the Federal Council of Churches and the Executive Committee of the American Association of Theological Schools:

> "In view of the urgent need of the churches for a continuing number of theological students to provide trained chaplains for the armed forces and adequate pastoral leadership for the civilian community; and also in view of the desirability of a clearly understood basis upon which such a dependable succession of candidates for this religious service may be assured; we earnestly request the Selective Service System to amend Occupational Bulletin No. 11 as issued March 1, 1943, so as to include the following provisions:
> "Any young man 18 years of age may, on filing his Selective Service questionnaire, or at any time prior to induction, request and receive favorable consideration for a 11-A deferred classification as a pre-theological student provided:
> (a) That he is properly credentialed by his church authorities as a candidate for th eministry:
> (b) That it is certified by a recognized college that he is accepted for admission and that within a period of thirty-four months or eight terms of sixteen weeks each after entrance he will be able to complete a pre-theological course of study acceptable to the seminary which he plans to enter; and
> (c) That a recognized theological seminary certifies that he is unqualifiedly accepted for admission upon completion of this pre-professional work."

On June 3rd, a committee representing the Federal Council and the American Association of Theological Schools and consisting of President John A. Mackay of Princeton Theological Seminary, President Arlo A. Brown of Drew Theological Seminary and Dr. Douglas Horton representing the Federal Council of Churches, and President Mackay, President Abdel R. Wentz of the Lutheran Theological Seminary, Gettysburg, Dr. Gould Wickey and Dr. Henry P. Van Dusen representing the American Association of Theological Schools, waited upon General Hershey, Director of the Selective Service System, to present this resolution.

The conference was long and thorough. General Hershey and his staff were cordial, sympathetic, and responsive to the problem laid before them.

Selective Service fully shares the concern of the churches and seminaries that a steady supply of men should be made available for the Christian ministry. This concern was in their thought in framing Occupational Bulletin 11, and it is their view that this Bulletin, as now revised, safeguards this objective.

Occupational Bulletin 11, as revised on July 1, 1943, provides that > "A student (pre-medical, pre-dental, pre-veterinarian, pre-osteopathic, pre-theological) should be considered for occupational classification if he is a full-time student in good standing in a recognized college or universiay and if

> "(a) It is certified by the institution in which he is pursuing the pre-professional course of study that if he continues his progress he will complete such pre-professional course of study within 24 months from the date of certification.
> "(b) it is certified by a recognized (medical, theological, etc.) college that he is accepted for admission and will be admitted to undertake professional study upon completion of his pre-professional work."

In issuing this bulletin, the Selective Service System assumed that the seminaries would follow the practice now generally being followed by the Medical schools of the country, and accept prospective seminary students upon their completion of two calendar years (through acceleration, three academic years) of college work. The Selective Service System does not see its way to grant pre-theological students a special status, neither asked for nor given to pre-professional students of medicine, dentistry, engineering, and other parallel professions.

It is clear that the basic question is whether the churches should seek to secure a unique classification for pre-theological students, or whether the latter should stand on the same basis as candidates of the other major professions for whom special classification is provided. In following the latter alternative, all the professions concerned recognize that their students will have less than the desired academic preparation, but that this qualification of standards, indefensible in normal times, is justified when millions of young men are sacrificing altogether the possibility of college education while others are seeking to make themselves available for the service of the national community at the earliest possible date.

After the most careful consideration and discussion of the problem thus presented to the churches and seminaries, it is our judgment that it would be unwise for the church to request a uniquely privileged exemp-

Laymen Speak

We have published both the majority report and the minority report of the Commission on Approaches to Unity. This is such a vital question, that we have the temerity to write again on this same subject.

There came to our desk the other day a letter signed by fifteen prominent laymen from every section of the country, endorsing the majority report. This list included such outstanding laymen, as ex-Senator George Wharton Pepper, Mr. Charles P. Taft, Mr. Samuel Thorne, Mr. Stoughton Bell, Mr. Augustus N. Hand, Mr. John B. Minor and others. No one can doubt for a moment the loyalty of these laymen to the doctrine, discipline and worship of the Protestant Episcopal Church. With their letter they enclosed five pamphlets all dealing with this vital question. It is encouraging to receive this information from laymen. As their letter states, "In our judgement a practical manifestation of Christian Fellowship at this particular time will have a stimulating effect upon the people of both Churches and will be a great encouragement to all who are laboring to prevent post war chaos." If we have an aroused laity, we are sure of making progress in the realm of Christian Unity.

We commend these laymen and hope that their good work will bear fruit, in General Convention.

Dealing With the War Bereaved

It is acknowledged in most quarters that the Church has made good progress in her ministry of healing. We wonder if our clergy are prepared to deal as effectively with the war bereaved? If we fail in this task, it is indeed going to be a grievous failure.

We like the prayer for the "War Bereaved" authorized by the Presiding Bishop. It will bring comfort to thousands. But our plea is that the parish clergy begin to train themselves now for the mounting casualties that are bound to come.

The tensions that war places upon all increase rapidly. The function of the Christian pastor is to ease those tensions. It will best be done through quiet prayer and meditation. The pastoral office of the ministry comes into its own during periods of stress. The clergy of the Church must be awake to the need for the due exercise of their pastoral office. The healing of the distraught and pain racked spirit, by the sudden loss of a loved one, is a chief responsibility of the minister in this period of emergency. Medals, brave words, will not do. There must be a faith in the One who said, "I am the Resurrection and the Life!"

God help His ministers to rise to the glory of their responsibility in these distressful days.

We Are So Sorry!

We received the following letter from the Bishop of Ohio.

"My dear Mr. Editor:

Iwas shocked beyond measure to see on page 13 of the Southern Churchman of August 14, 1943, the folowing headlines: "Rev. Fay Appointed Curate to Church of the Holy Cross.' We have been making a noble effort to overcome this type of terminology in the Diocese of Ohio, and it is just too bad that the Southern Churchman had to let us down. Please find enclosed for your information, and for that of your editorial staff, this little verse, which was published in our diocesan paper Church Life, and which I hope will set you straight for the future.

Yours faithfully,

Beverley D. Tucker."

Here is the poem!

"Reverend"

Call me "Brother" if you will.
Call me "Parson," better still.
Though plain "Mister" fills the bill,—
If that title lacketh thrill,
Even "Father" brings no chill
Of hurt or rancor or ill-will.
If "D. D." the name append,
Then Doctor doth some fitness lend.
"Preacher" (Ugh!), "Pastor," "Rector," "Friend,"—
Titles almost without end, —
Never grate and ne'er offend;
A loving ear to all I bend.
But how that man my heart doth rend
Who blithely calls me "Reverend."

—Author Unknown.

The point is that "Reverend" should be used only when the first name or initials are also used, or when title "Mister," or "Doctor," or "Canon," is also used. Here are examples of right usage: Rev. John Smith; Rev. J. B. Smith; Rev. Mr. Smith; Rev. Dr Smith; Rev. Chaplain Smith; Rev. Canon Smith. Here are examples of wrong usage: "Rev. Smith"; "Good morning, Reverend."

Knowing the Bishop of Ohio's loyalty to the Southern Churchman, and to things connected with Virginia, we are truly sorry for this gross error. We know there are thousands of other good churchmen, and sensitive grammarians, who likewise cringe when this mistake is made. We do ourselves. We trust that our proofreader will be more careful in the future. The editor is not the proofreader, but he will exercise more diligent care in the future. Please forgive us, Ohio!

THE QUICKENING POWER

week. They know no sense of corporateness as they try in daily life to practice the Christian life. They hunger for a sense of belonging to a Church that cares when they fight for a decent civil life or business ethic.

One might say that the whole Plan of Action revolves about this renewed emphasis upon the social implications of our corporate worship. If men are to worship corporately with a sense of social responsibility they must have sound organization in the parish Church, conviction about Christian Vocation and the Christian Doctrine of Man.

Second—Is it possible that parish churches have not evaluated their own parochial work in 20 years! Not only is this possible, it is a fact. We must recapture the vision of the Church as the Body of Christ. What earthly body could go along that length of time functioning with efficiency yet never checking its progress? The time is ripe for us all to check up on our parochial organizations, see if they are related to the total work of the Church and the needs of our communities, cut out the useless growths which cling to the average parish Church and "streamline" our parochial organizations for active service in the struggle against secularism. Forward in Service can assist any parish priest with materials based upon actual experience in living parishes and with inventory charts prepared after years of study and work. They are free to the clergy for the asking.

Third—Every Christian has a Vocation. Emphasis upon Christian vocation isn't an academic phrase to be tossed about exclusively in classrooms. Christian vocation, the fact that God calls each man and woman to use particular gifts as a member of Christ's Body, is the crying need of the modern world.

Fourth—The Christian Doctrine of Man is a challenge and an answer to every state, organization or social custom which would degrade man. It is an answer to modern anarchy.

These four constitute the Plan of Action for this year. A Plan of Action beaten out under the realistic scrutiny of parish priests and laymen in all eight provinces of our Church. Eight times the tentative Plan of Action was taken to the clergy of our Church in provincian conferences, every diocese has had the opportunity to send representatives to go over this Plan to make it the Plan of Action of the whole Church. Nor is the Plan a theoretical document. Each step in the Plan is backed up by tried and tested methods documents. The Plan of Action and methods documents are free in single copies to the clergy. Additional copies can be secured at a very nominal price by addressing Forward in Service, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, N. Y.

CAN CHRISTIANITY HELP?

by cooperating through our wills we are able to take to ourselves something of the courage and character of Christ Himself.

It is to u ndergird men for this life in Christ that we have the season of Lent.

"I know an ancient garden set within
An old gray wall besmirched with rusty mold;
Its medieval gate remains to hold
Remembrance and the name which long have been.
Who enter there forsake their worldly kin
And lesser aims awhile, to be enrolled
For training, and to learn what saints have told
Of earnest strife against besetting sin.

That garth is Lent, its walls six creeping weeks,
Its gate Ash Wednesday—all to bring us near
The pattern life of our redeeming Lord.
The Church, as He to His disciples, speaks:
"Come ye yourselves apart—strive—be severe—
To conquer self, amend, and be restored."

tion for its prospective ministers, even if it were probable that such a request would be granted.

Accordingly we recommend,

1. That the seminaries indicate their readiness to accept for admission properly qualified men who shall have completed three academic years of college work, and that they so inform the colleges in order that pretheological students may be properly certified to their draft boards for classification in II-A.

2. That in the case of pre-theological students who will not have completed the requirements for the A. B. degree or its equivalent within twenty-four months after reaching the age of eighteen, the seminaries shall require them to complete their work for the A. B. degree or its equivalent during their seminary course, especially by utilizing the summer terms.

It is our judgment that under no circumstances should the B. D. degree be granted without the completion of the work for the A. B. degree or its equivalent.

Furthermore it should be rceognized that these recommendations are designed only to meet a war-time emergency and would cease to be effective at the conclusion of the emergency.

A PRAYER FOR USE AT THIS TIME

O Almighty God, the Supreme Governor of all things Whose power no creature is able to resist; We ask Thy guidance for our Government and for our people in this time of trial. Save us from violence, discord and confusion; from pride and arrogancy, and from every evil way. Drive from among us all bitterness and racial prejudice, fill our hearts with the spirit of brotherhood, and make us a united people faithful to do Thy Will, through Christ Thy Son, our Lord.

Amen.

SPEAKING IN PARABLES. By Dom Bernard Clements. Morehouse-Gorham, New York. 127 pages. $1.50.

British radio preaching has always been of high order. These addresses, all of them prepared for broadcast use, are no exception. The first group are five-minute morning addresses, similar to our own "Haven." The last section of the book contains the "Malta Messages." In the midst of the Sunday evening entertainment broadcast for the garrison on Malta, the announcer would say, "Hold on, boys, here's the Padre. He'll be gonged after three minutes, but until then he has something to say." Many letters back home told that these three minutes did have a message for the men on Malta.

THE SEED

In the heart of a seed,
Buried deep, so deep,
A dear little plant
Lay fast asleep.

"Wake," said the sunshine,
"And creep to the light."
"Wake," said the voice
Of the raindrops bright.

The little plant heard,
And rose to see
What the wonderful
Outside world might be.

DOCTOR THEODORE

Mary Lou tried playing house alone in the playroom. It was not much fun.

"Oh, dear! Why did Ruthie and Jane have to move away?" Mary Lou sighed. Playing house with no neighbor ladies to call with their doll children seemed little fun. But there were no girls living next door now. There was only a boy called Teddy, who owned a horrid, barking little dog. Mary Lou had no use for either boys or dogs.

"I think I'd better put you outdoors for a nap, Goldilocks," Mary Lou told her biggest doll. "The fresh air will do you good."

The new boy next door was shoveling snow off the walk, as Mary Lou wheeled Goldilocks' carriage out on the front porch.

"Hello," he called. He looked lonely, too.

"Hello," Mary Lou called back.

Then Buddy, the little dog, came racing across the yard, barking. Mary Lou was almost afraid of Buddy.

"Call your old dog and don't let him wake my baby," Mary Lou told the boy. Teddy called and Buddy went home again.

An hour later, Mary Lou went to see if Goldilocks had waked from her nap. "Oh! Oh!" Mary Lou squealed. "Where's my doll?" Goldilocks was not there. The covers were pulled out on the porch.

Teddy looked over the fence. "What's that?" he called. He stopped shoveling snow. Then he understood and looked around.

He spied Goldilocks half buried in a snowdrift near the fence, and he guessed how the doll had got there. It must have been Buddy. That pup was always burying things!

Just then Mary Lou saw Goldilocks, too. "Oh! Oh! my Goldilocks will die of the cold!" she squealed.

"No, she won't. Not if we get her to bed with a hot water bottle right away and you have the doctor to see her." Teddy really felt sorry about Buddy's naughtiness. He must do something to keep Mary Lou from feeling too bad and blaming Buddy.

"Here!" Teddy handed Mary Lou the big doll. "You go in and get her to bed, and I'll go for the doctor."

"What doctor?" Mary Lou asked, but Teddy had disappeared into his own house.

Mary Lou hurried to put Goldilocks to bed. She had hardly finished when the doorbell rang. Why, who was this in a long coat and with that funny thing in his ears? It was Teddy, of course, but he did look very like a doctor.

"I'm Dr. Theodore," Teddy explained in a funny, deep voice. "And I've come to take your child's pulse and listen to her lungs and write you a prescription so she'll get well."

Mary Lou giggled. She led Dr. Theodore to Goldilocks' bed. He listened to Goldilocks' heart with the funny instrument and looked very grave. But he was encouraging.

"I think we'd better fix a hospital for Goldilocks," Dr. Theodore said. "You can be the nurse, and wear a cap, and if you have some other dolls we can have them for patients in the hospital, too. That Teddy bear would be a good patient."

The rest of the afternoon flew by. Mary Lou never had heard of so many interesting diseases as the dolls suddenly had. Dr. Theodore was really wonderful, the way he prescribed for them and made them all well by supper time.

Mary Lou was so excited that she could hardly eat her supper.

"Teddy's uncle is a doctor, that's why he knows so much," Mary Lou told her parents. "And he gave Teddy that old steth—stetho—something that he uses to listen to the dolls'—I mean patients' —hearts and lungs with. And Teddy says any time the dolls are sick I can telephone for him. He's going to make a special phone with two tin cans and a string between his playroom and mine."

"Pretty fine having a doctor in the house next door, when you have a family of dolls likely to get chicken pox or measles any minute," Daddy laughed.

Mary Lou thought so, too. Why, playing hospital with Teddy was really more fun than playing house with Ruthie and Jane!—Story World.

AVIATORS LEARN FROM GEESE

Have you noticed that groups of airplanes usually fly in V-wedges, like flocks of wild geese winging northward in the spring or southward in the fall?

At first thought, this has no particular meaning; but those of us who are interested in aviation find that there are two good reasons for such a flight formation.

First, geese, like airplane pilots, follow a leader or flight commander. The commander of the flight flies at the nose of the V, and because of the V-formation, all those behind him can see his signals.

Second, an airplane flies because its propeller "digs into" the air or wind, pulling the plane along like a boy climbing a rope hand-over-hand. Wild geese must also have air resistance or wind resistance against which to beat their wings.

Now, the rush of a plane or a goose through space leaves a partial vacuum directly behind it, a space where the air is thin. This space does not offer the proper resistance to whirling propellers or beating wings; hence, wild geese and airplanes fly in V-formation instead of single file, one, behind the other. The position of each, slightly back and to the left or right of the one ahead, keeps him out of the vacuum and gives him ample air resistance for flying besides permitting him to watch the signals of the flight commander.

THE DOWNY WOODPECKER

Today, a little fellow came
And went to work for me,
He didn't stop to give his name
Nor ask about a fee;

But eagerly and earnestly
Began a keen inspection
Of branches on my apple tree,
For worm or bug infection.

The noisy sparrows, quarrelsome
For bread crumbs in the yard,
Ignored the toiler who had come
To labor there so hard;

And scolding blue jays made demands
For peanuts; but the worker
Asked not a thing from human hands.
To show he was no shirker

He ate his dinner as he toiled,
And so precise was he
His snow-white shirt was never soiled
The while he worked for me.

UNIQUE FEATURE OF AN ARMY CAMP

I am truly convinced that Chaplains are busy people. They are doing all in their power to encourage those within their reach to put on the "whole armor of God" to girt loins with truth; to aid in fastening on the "breastplate of righteousness"; to shod feet with the preparation of the gospel of peace; to urge that man takes the "shield of faith, the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the spirit."

Because of such motives, the Chaplains at Fort Knox, Kentucky, instituted a Daily Vacation Bible School. For a period of six weeks, three weeks at the Post Chapel, and three at the Goldville area, the children of officers, noncoms, and civilians, ranging in ages from 4 to 14, enjoyed a real experience. Such a school administered to the spiritual needs of 1,000 families, located on a post which has grown to ten times its normal size since our peace has vanished. 750 families reside in the Goldville area, and 350 others are located over the post at large.

The Goldville school was in session from June 14-July 2, with an enrollment of 99, thirty of whom were recognized for perfect attendance.

Captain Claude E. Ireland, Wendell, Minnesota, Assistant Post Chaplain, was in charge. He served in World War I, and was ordained in July, 1918, under the open sky, near Noyers, France. Before Bible School was over, he left to fill a new assignment.

Corporal Violet Clark, a WAC and Chaplain's assistant from Farmersville, Texas, directed the school in a most efficient and inspirational manner.

Superintendent of the beginners was Mrs. Bernard Hall. Working with her was Miss Jean Miles, who was also one of the secretaries, the other two being Miss Juanita Morgan and Miss Rosalie Schendlicker.

The largest group in the Goldville school was the Primary Department. It was interesting to note that nearly every one of them had perfect attendance. Mrs. J. P. O'Mera was the Superintendent assisting her with the teaching was Mrs. R. L. Brooks.

Corporal Violet Clark and Mrs. James Gamel worked the Junior-Intermediate group. The latter was also the school song leader.

Mr. Roberts and Mrs. Sexton, the latter replacing Mrs. Kimball, who left for California, directed the recreation.

Mrs. Warner, Texas, needed to be replaced as a pianist. This was done by an efficient and outstanding student, Bobby King, aged 12 years.

The Post Chapel Schools—one for Protestants, and one for Catholics—were in session from July 12 to July 29. The Protestant enrollment numbered 115, with 36 having perfect attendance.

Chaplain F. C. F. Randolph is the Post Chaplain. He was born in New York City. Prior to his military service, he ministered to churches in New York, Ohio, and Pennsylvania. If you can fathom the huge task of being a Post Chaplain, at a camp with the magnitude of Fort Knox, then I know that you on the home front will be proud to have released from your services this Christian personality. In addition to his many tasks, he was never too busy to work with us, suggest to us, or pray for us in D. V. B. S.

The Superintendent who endeared herself to the pupils was Mrs. Charles Pitts, of Texas. It was gratifying to find a Chaplain's wife equally eager for service. Her husband, Chaplain Pitts, serves with the Army Air Corps, Godman Field, Fort Knox.

Mrs. Ted Rice served as Secretary. Bobby King, who served for three weeks at the Goldville school, also attended the Post school and served as their youthful pianist.

Miss Christine Cole, one of the school teachers, was Superintendent of the beginners. They met at the Fort Knox Nursery School.

"God in Creation" was the basis of study for the Primary Department. Mrs. Mary Jones, Mrs. Sue Leslie Kimball, Miss Beverley Thompson and Miss Mary Thompson were the efficient leaders of this group.

The Junior-Intermediate group used for its theme, "Discovering God".

Mrs. Anna Marie Mathes, of Texas, was the Superintendent and one of the teachers. Mrs. Mabel J. Boyer also served as instructor. Mrs. Ernest B. Leathers, Cygnet, Ohio, led the entire group of Juniors and Intermediates in a devotional hour each morning.

It would be difficult to summarize accomplishments. The students worked from the Scriptures and work books, memorized Bible verses, sang, played and did creative work. Both schools edited a newspaper, including numerous pictures of themselves, which each student received as a souvenir.

Each day a flag ceremony and processional took place, with the youngsters marching from school to Chapel for closing exercises. Each day allegiance was pledged to the American Flag, the Christian Flag, and the Bible. One of the greatest student honors achieved was to carry one of these in the procession.

Visiting Chaplains assisted each day. In addition to those named were Chaplains Charles Pitts, Ivan F. Beck, William J. H. McKnight, John G. Gieck, Allen T. Bennett, Ira S. Fritz and Robert S. Skelton.

At a closing consecration service, Juniors and Intermediates pledged themselves to noble services, one for the ministry—one for missionary labor, many for Sunday School teachers and better Christians.

Graduation exercises were held with qualifying students and the faculty receiving certificates. The Post Commander, Colonel N. B. Briscoe, addressed the groups, before presenting the diplomas.

And so they gathered from many states—but with one purpose, Christian education. There were workers from many walks of life—Chaplains, a Chaplain's wife, school teachers, Sunday School teachers, housewives, officers' wives, non-coms' wives, a WAC, mothers and colonels' daughters. Whether they were visitors or if they resided on the Post, they bent every effort to instill the values and beauties of Christian living.

In the words of one of the teachers—"If we have encouraged but one child to a true consecration of service; if we have caused but one to have a closer and sweeter walk with the Saviour; if we have helped but one to be more lovely in the name of Him who is most lovely, ours has been a most happy and blessed privilege."

GROUPS TO PRAY CONCERNING UNITY

The Rev. Whitney Hale, of Boston, has reported that in the Diocese of Massachusetts there are plans to get together small groups for prayer concerning unity, and especially for our negotiations with the Presbyterians. These groups are to include men of all types of churchmanship, and Presbyterians as well as Episcopalians may be included.

This proposal did not reach the Commission on Approaches to Unity in time to be included in their report, which has already gone to press. But it is so eminently wise and Christian that it deserves wide consideration, and, I trust, will lead to action in other dioceses similar to that undertaken in Massachusetts. It is from the prayer of our Lord (St. John 17:21) that the movement toward church unity takes its origin; it is by the prayers of His followers even more than by debate and argument that it may best be promoted.

Sincerely yours,

Howard Chandler Robbins.

RHODE ISLAND

Through the Rhode Island correspondent of the Southern Churchman comes the yearly report of the work of the Service Committee of the United Thank Offering. The General Chairman is Miss Harriet Neal, of Coronado, California; the Vice-Chairman is Mrs. Roswell H. Blair, of Annapolis, Maryland, for the Navy; the Army Chairman is Mrs. C. D. Roberts, of Chevy Chase, Maryland, and the Newport, R. I., Chairman is Mrs. John Sylvester, of Greenough Place, Newport.

These Army and Navy Service women are offering for the year a United Thank Offering of $1,254, which makes, for the Triennial Offering, the round sum of $3,000.00. This is a good improvement over the last time, and is most creditable to the eighteen women mostly responsible for the work.

In her annual report, Miss Neal writes: "Gratitude changes in war because the type of things prompting it changes. Occasionally some blessing comes which so overwhelms us that the gratitude it brings forth is deeper than that which comes from a hundred ordinary causes—the gratitude which lifts the heart in wordless, joyful prayer, which seeks some expression in a gift deliberately, thoughtfully, given; and, that expression being inadequate, the natural culmination of the prayer and gift is a rededication of our lives, for joyful service for the extension of Christ's Kingdom."

In the South the chairmen are Mrs.

Ann Arbor, Michigan—A new joint program for the work of St. Andrew's Parish, Ann Arbor, and the work among the Episcopal students at the University of Michigan has been agreed upon by the Vestry of St. Andrew's in cooperation with the Harris Memorial Trust and the Church Society for College Work. This program involves a greater concentration of the activities of the parish and student work on the church site, due to the closing of Harris Hall, former student center.

Since 1885 the work of the parish and the work among Episcopal students at the University of Michigan has been a joint enterprise. At the time of the erection of Harris Hall a trust fund was formed under the leadership of Bishop Harris, second Bishop of Michigan, to receive and administer the funds for the upkeep of the building and the promotion of student work. Later on, under the leadership of Bishop Page, fifth Bishop of Michigan, the Centennial Fund of the Diocese was raised. The income from 10% of the capital of this Fund has been paid since that time to the Harris Memorial Trust. Also, the women's organizations of the parish have contributed yearly to the funds of this Trust and from time to time special gifts and contributions have been received from individuals.

Fifteen years ago the income from the Harris Memorial Trust was approximately $8,000 per year. In the years of the depression, this dropped to $4,800 per year and remained fairly constant at that amount until 18 months ago, when a further decline in the income occurred, due to default in a number of securities and to lower rates of interest. It became obvious that the parish must choose between keeping Harris Hall open with practically no staff for the student work, or closing the Hall and having an adequate staff. Furthermore, it was conservatively estimated that it would cost $15,000 to renovate the building.

In view of this situation, the Vestry of St. Andrew's Church requested the Church Society for College Work to review the situation and to offer suggestions. The Society recommended closing Harris Hall and moving the student work to the parish buildings at St. Andrew's Church, and offered an amount of money annually for three years, to be used with income available from the Harris Memorial Trust, for a thorough-going student program. This offer was accepted by the Harris Memorial Trust and the Vestry. The work will be carried on by a Student Chaplain and a full-time Woman Counsellor, and funds will be available for entertainment, an adequate program and administrational expenses.

Present facilities of the parish will be adapted also to the use of both parish organizations and college work, and the midweek communions and special services formerly held in the Chapel at Harris Hall will now be held in St. Andrew's Church. Much of the Harris Hall furniture will be moved to the parish hall to equip the building for both parochial and student activities.

In the statement issued by the Vestry of St. Andrew's to the people of the parish, is the comment:

"Undoubtedly one of the challenges of this new venture will be the building of more adequate facilities to house the parochial and student activities on the church grounds. The plan of the Harris Memorial Trust is to devote the monies obtained from the sale of Harris Hall toward such facilities. The hope of the Vestry is that the members of the parish will share in the responsibility and privilege of providing, in connection with St. Andrew's Church, the best possible equipment for both parochial and college work."

RADIO MESSAGE FROM MAURICE VOTAW AT CHUNGKING, CHINA

New York, N. Y.—Radio message from Maurice Votaw, at Chungking, China, which reached the National Council August 17, states that on May 12, Miss Anne Lamberton wrote her sister, "We are all well and getting along without any difficulty. Plenty of hot water for showers and laundry. We have received two lots of packages and bought two lots of things from the canteen."

Mr. Votaw supplies the information also that Miss Laura P. Clark, Dr. Harry Taylor "and the others are now living where Bishop Gilman stayed last spring. This is believed to be the Columbia Country Club. "I think we can write to all groups," he concludes.

CONFIRMATION OF LEPERS

Ancon, P. C. Z.—Bishop Harry Beal, of the Canal Zone, has just had his first confirmation of lepers, six men and two women, in the leper colony at Palo Seco. They were prepared by the Ven. Arthur F. Nightengale, now in his twenty-first year as rector of St. Paul's, Panama City, with its 1,300 communicants. Besides attending to a number of other duties, Archdeacon Nightengale manages to provide an early celebration at the leper colony every Monday morning.

Shaded by palms and breadfruit trees, the neat two-story, government-built houses of the colony form a cheerful community on a headland at the Pacific end of the Zone, selected for the colony by General William Gorgas in 1907. Fewer than 500 patients have been admitted in thirty years, and of these, more than one-tenth have been sufficiently cured to be paroled; 85 women and 34 men are now patients. They work little farms and sell their produce to the colony kitchen at current prices. A woodwork shop is kept busy. Patients made all the furniture in the Chapel of the Holy Comforter.

AMERICANS IN CHINA: HARRY R. CALDWELL

In China today, still carrying on their work in the face of bombings, privation and daily risks of death, are many veteran missionaries who have spent their adult life in that country. United China Relief supports much of their work.

Undoubtedly one of the most picturesque of these is Harry R. Caldwell, a Methodist missionary now 67 years old, who has spent most of his life in the backwoods of Fukien Province in China's southeast. He is still at his post not far from Foochow.

Dr. Caldwell's relation to the people living around him has always had the same all-inclusive character of that of a country doctor to his patients. His services long ago left the purely evangelical field and have touched upon the scientific, the agricultural and the educational.

A recent anecdote is typical of Dr. Caldwell's energy, audacity and practical outlook. About a year ago he ran the Japanese blockade to return to his post in unoccupied China, close to the enemy lines. He arrived safely, and triumphantly, with a glass tube containing several Carolian queen bees in his vest pocket, where his body warmth kept the bees alive. These bees are now improving the local honey industry—and there the sugar shortage is not felt.

In 1904 the Rev. Caldwell, then a mild-eyed, gentle-mannered young missionary, started a remote mission station in a semi-jungle region of China whose inhabitants were illiterate and hostile. The bare hills of Fukien Province were criss-crossed by ravines checkered with tall sword grass, and they were filled with man-eating tigers.

Dr. Caldwell established himself forever in the hearts of these people when he took a gun and went out one day in search of a tiger which had just carted off a 16-year-old boy in a nearby village. He staked a goat for bait outside the village, and waited all one night. At dawn the tiger appeared, and jumped for the goat. The tiger didn't get the goat, but young Caldwell got the tiger—and started his own fame as a "tiger-hunting parson."

With a gun in one hand and a Bible in the other, Dr. Caldwell has since built 61 mission stations in China. In his area eight out of ten people were illiterate. He made teaching one of his biggest jobs, and pioneered in adult education in that region. He has established scores of schools, and helped launch a university.

Dr. Caldwell felt a special responsibility for the half million farmers and fishermen in his end of China, and he has during his years there undertaken many agricultural projects on their behalf. He introduced improved grains, vegetables and fruits, and once when he returned to China from a furlough, he took with him a crate of full-blooded American roosters, whose descendants today help feed the hungry Chinese in his district.

With all this activity, Dr. Caldwell has found time for a large amount of first-class scientific work in natural history. He has hunted butterflies, bats and birds; is a recognized authority in the latter field. And in the Museum of Natural History in New York are scores of handsome specimens and skins —the gift of the tiger-hunting parson.

Roy Chapman Andrews once called the Rev. Harry Caldwell "one of the most unusual men I have ever met", and the hundreds of Chinese whose lives he has bettered would agree.

Dr. Caldwell was born in Cleveland, Ohio, and spent much of his youth in the Tennessee mountains, where his father was a Methodist minister.

DIOCESE OF GEORGIA

"The Rev. Harry Speake Cobey, for the last 17 years rector of St. Paul's Church, Albany, Georgia, has accepted the call to Christ Church and Christ Church Neighborhood House, Augusta, Ga., effective Sept. 1, 1943.

"Deaconess Ruth E. Byllesby, Founder of Christ Church Neighborhood House, lover of all mankind, beloved of children, builder of one of our Church's largest Church Schools, indefatigable worker, competent, efficient, faithful Churchwoman, in the seventy-eighth year of her age, resigns her work to younger hands. The Congregation of Christ Church last Sunday evening unanimously asked her, if she were herself willing to withdraw her determination to retire. To hear the many expressions of love and gratitude for the many years of work was a testimonial of the affection of an entire congregation for one who has served them so well.

"Mr. Cobey comes to his new work with a host of qualifications. Born in Grayton, Maryland, June 21, 1890, he received his B. S. degree from the University of Maryland, and did graduate work at Emerson Institute and Wesleyan University. He was graduated from Berkeley Divinity School, and ordained by Bishop Harding, of Washington in 1918. In that same year he married Josephine M. Gray. They have four children.

"Mr. Cobey has served Rock Creek Parish, Washington, D. C., Christ Church, Gainesville, Georgia, and St. Paul's, Albany. He has been in the Diocesan Department of Christian Social Relations since 1829, and has been its Vice-Chairman since 1936. He is President of the Board of Examining Chaplains. He is Chairman of the Dougherty County Welfare Board. He was Deputy to the last General Convention."—St. Paul's Episcopal Church Bulletin, Augusta, Ga.

Savannah, Ga.—St. Augustine's Church (Colored) recently held a flag dedication service and program on a Sunday evening. The flag is in honor of the nineteen members of the church, including a young woman, who are enlisted in the armed forces of our country. Father Elliott Guy, priest in charge of St. Stephen's Church (Colored), dedicated the flag. The principal address was delivered by Lieutenant-Colonel De Maurice Moses, commander of the 207th Coast Artillery, A. A., Camp Stewart. The chorus of the 921st A. B. Rhodesia—Writing to the Presiding Bishop to acknowledge the "most generous sympathy and support" given by American aid to British missions in 1943, Edward Paget, bishop of southern Rhodesia, outlines the scope of that diocese. The war hit them rather hard financially, and while they might make up the money loss by using local gifts, it would seriously hinder expanding work.

In his 200,000 square miles, including all Southern Rhodesia and a large section of Portuguese East Africa, Bishop Paget has but forty-three priests, of whom fifteen are African. Three more Africans have recently been ordained deacons, but the whole staff is depleted by the war. The population includes 1,500,000 Africans, 65,000 Europeans, and a small number of Greeks, Jews, and people from India.

The only secondary school in the country, for Africans, is a part of the mission's educational system, which includes a teacher-training school and a college for ordination candidates. Men of the Community of the Resurrection, from Mirfield, England, and a Sisterhood direct most of the educational work, including religious instruction in some of the government schools.

LETTER FROM A GROUP OF LAYMEN RE UNITY

Dear Deputy:

The undersigned are an unofficial group of Episcopal laymen who earnestly hope for favorable action by General Convention upon the pending proposals for a reunion of the Episcopal and Presbyterian Churches.

As an aid to the study of the issues involved, five pamphlets are enclosed, each of which approaches the subject from a different angle. These we commend to your thoughtful consideration.

In our judgment a practical manifestation of Christian Fellowship at this particular time will have a stimulating effect upon the people of both Churches and will be a great encouragement to all who are laboring to prevent a post-war chaos. Moreover, we laymen are convinced that no more hopeful approach to the reunion of Christendom can be made than through the union of the two American branches of the Anglican and Presbyterian traditions.

If you are unable to attend the Convention, will you be so kind as to pass this material on to your alternate.

Sincerely yours,
Albert C. Agnew, San Francisco, California
Stoughton Bell, Cambridge, Massachusetts
Fyke Farmer, Nashville, Tennessee
Milton P. Fuller, Topeka, Kansas
Augustus N. Hand, New York City
John B. Minor, Richmond, Virginia
John Lord O'Brian, Buffalo, New York
George Wharton Pepper, Philadelphia, Pa.
Owen J. Roberts, Washington, D. C.
Dr. Paul Rutledge, Kirkwood, Missouri
Edward L. Ryerson, Chicago, Illinois.
Charles P. Taft, Cincinnati, Ohio
Samuel Thorne, New York City
William C. Turpin, Macon, Georgia
Dean Vincent, Portland, Oregon

The following pamphlets were enclosed:

(1) Episcopal and Presbyterian Official Formularies of Doctrine Compared.

(2) By What Authority—George Wharton Pepper.

(3) Why Unite with the Presbyterians—Gardiner M. Day.

(4) Analysis of the Minority Report —John C. Spaulding.

RESIGNATION OF REV. ARTLEY B. PARSON

New York, N. Y.—The resignation of the Rev. Artley B. Parson as associate secretary in the National Council's overseas department is announced by the Presiding Bishop, effective November 1. Mr. Parson's future plans are not yet announced. He has been associate secretary in the overseas or foreign missions department since 1920. After graduation from Harvard and the Episcopal Theological Seminary, Cambridge, Mass., he spent his diaconate and two years more on the staff of St. Paul's Cathedral, Boston, and then went to the Philippines in 1916 as rector of Holy Trnity Church, Zamboanga. Later he was rector and dean of the Cathedral of St. Mary and St. John, Manila, from 1918 until called to headquarters for service in the national department.

Besides having first-hand knowledge of work in the Philippines, he and Mrs. Parson are among the few who have made a thorough visit covering the Church's work in Liberia. In 1938-39 they went around the world to attend the International Missionary Council in Madras and visited missions in the Orient. They attended the consecration of Epiphany Cathedral in Dornakal, south India. In spite of the war they succeeded in visiting a number of inland stations in China, and in Tokyo Mr. Parson was one of the last foreign visitors to address the students of St. Paul's University. Probably no other Churchman has so wide a personal acquaintance with the missionaries abroad while contacts and relationships of many kinds have made him widely known in the United States.

CONFIRMATION IN EGYPT

Cairo, Egypt.—Llewellyn Gwynne, bishop of Egypt and the Sudan, recently confirmed nearly 300 service men and women in All Saints Cathedral, Cairo. As a center for religious work among troops in the Middle East, the Cathedral has a chaplains' department which is of great help in many ways. Through this department nearly 600 candidates looking toward ordination after the war have been found among men serving in this area.

General Montgomery has been reading the Lessons at the Cathedral, for Morning or Evening Prayer. In conversation and in public speeches he has paid high tribute to the work of chaplains.

Old St. Paul's Church, Charleston, South Carolina, the Rev. Lawton Riley, rector, for the first time since the War Between the States, will have services every Sunday this summer. For many years it has been the custom to close the Church entirely in August. The cornerstone of the church was laid in 1811 and it was consecrated in 1816. The National anthem is sung at the close of the 11:15 o'clock service every Sunday morning.

For nearly two years Christ Church, Point Pleasant, West Virginia, has closed the morning service by singing the national anthem.

In August, 1941, the rector, the Rev. Mr. Cady, spent the month at Chautauqua, New York, where each daily concert was ended with the singing of the national anthem. When he returned he inaugurated this custom at the morning service. Just before the recessional hymn the choir and the congregation stand and sing the two verses of "Star Spangled Banner" and during the two years the congregation has really learned to sing it. This is probably the first church that begun the singing of the national anthem at the regular services.

This is also being done in St. Margaret's Church in Washington.

DR. PORKESS HONORED

The Rev. Dr. William Porkess, rector of St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, Wilkinsburg, Pa., has been honored by being chosen as one among the 960 notable personages, whose 150 word biographical sketches comprise the 1943 800 page International Blue Book (Who's Who in the World). These sketches appear in the same volume in three languages—English, French and Spanish. It would be no exaggeration to state that, in its cosmopolitan scope, the International Blue Book has no equal. A few instances are illustrative, such as: The President of the United States, King George VI of England, His Holiness, Pope Pius XII, the Most Rev. William Temple, D. D., Archbishop of Canterbury and Primate of All England, Winston Spencer Churchill, George Bernard Shaw and Madame Chiang Kai-shek. The plan of the compiler of this volume is to place a copy in all the principal libraries of the largest cities throughout the world.

I would like for the Rector to bring me the Holy Communion, but I do not believe I could stand the strain of the long service. I have been bedridden for years, and any unusual event makes me extremely nervous.

The Prayer Book provides for a shortened Holy Communion service for the sick (see pages 321-23).

Also, in some parishes, especially the larger urban parishes where there are many sick, and the clergy staff is limited, the priest takes the consecrated elements from the Altar to the sick after the service. This eliminates the necessity for consecrating the elements, in the sickroom, and shortens the service considerably.

Consult your Rector, and be frank with him. He is anxious to se that you receive the Holy Communion.

I don't think my son realizes the sacredness of the Holy Communion. He and his friends talk too glibly about attending the early service each Sunday. Wouldn't it be best for him only to attend at the late service each month?

Whatever the motive for your son's frequent attendance at the Holy Communion, whether to worship God or to associate with his friends, don't you think God will take this opportunity and that your son will grow in grace as he attends this most sacred service?

Perhaps your boy is mainly interested in being with his friends at this service. But that is a part of the meaning of Holy Communion.

Before the altar we renew our communion with God, and with our fellow men.

No, your son cannot attend the service too frequently. And, remember, the Holy Eucharist, while certainly an awe-inspiring service, as we realize the Presence of Christ, also is a joyous service of thanksgiving at His Presence.

He wants us to approach Him with reverence, yes, and also with happiness in our hearts.

Why should the altar ever have been called a table?

The altar is an altar in that we remember here the perpetual memorial of Christ's sacrifical death, and in that here "we offer ourselves, our souls, and bodies".

The altar is a table in that here we receive from God the sacred gift of Christ's Presence in the Holy Communion.

THE HUMBLE MAN

A hundred years ago, Oberlin, the German philanthropist, was journeying through a snowstorm near Strasbourg and lost his way. He was rescued from death by a wagoner, who came by after he had sunk in the drifts. The man refused any reward.

"Tell me your name, at least," said Oberlin.

"Tell me," was the reply, "the name of the Good Samaritan."

"His name is not recorded," said Oberlin wondering.

"Then let me withhold mine," said the wagoner.

Oberlin never forgot the incident. He had known so many givers who paraded their gifts, that the Christian humility of this man impressed him gave without desire for recognition.—deeply. Here was a true giver, who Watchman.

COURAGE

The lines which follow were written by a man of 97 years, blind, deaf, crippled and ill.

'Twas the last half-mile of the journey,
The journey we all have to tread.
'Twas the last half-mile of the journey
That foolishly filled me with dread.
I was old and hoping for rest
And the road looked so rocky and steep
That I longed to lie down on mother earth's breast.

And have a long dreamless sleep.
Then I heard the voice of my Master:
He simply said "On," with a smile,
So with shame I buckled my knapsack on
And started that last half-mile.

It all came out at a party given to Bishop Strider of West Virginia by the people of Christ Church, Williamstown, W. Va., when the Bishop visited there recently.

Among those present was Miss Georgiana Beeson, who observed her ninetieth birthday last February. The fact came out that she was baptized in nearby Trinity Church, Parkersburg, W. Va., seventy-five years ago by the late Rev. Dr. W. L. Hyland, at which time she made her first communion. Following preparation, she was confirmed the following year, 1869, by the late Rt. Rev. John Johns, D. D., Bishop of Virginia, of which West Virginia was then a part.

REV. JOHN S. WELLFORD RESIGNS AS RECTOR OF ASCENSION CHURCH

At a special meeting of the Vestry of Ascension Church on Monday, July 19, 1943, the following resolution was offered by Wm. Kinckle Allen, and seconded by Dr. Wm. E. Walker:

Resolved,

That at the request of Rev. John S. Wellford we accept his resignation as rector of Ascension Church, Lexington Parish, Amherst County.

That in doing so we place on record this minute:

That we regret we have to accept the resignation of our said rector, who has endeared himself to the communicants of Ascension Church as well as to the members of the other churches forming Lexington Parish, and is beloved not only by the members of our churches but by our entire community of Amherst.

We bear witness to his faithfulness, sincerity, spirituality, and devotion to duty during the period of over six years he has been our rector, and feel that with these virtues as his foundation stones he will continue to go forward and onward and upward to greater heights in the service of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

We pray that the Holy Spirit will ever keep at his side, at all times, and in all places, to direct, guide, and lead him, to defend and comfort him, in all the dangers and adversities with which the ordeals of this present life may confront him.

That a copy of this record be mailed to the Rev. John S. Wellford and to the Senior Warden of the Vestry of Emmanuel Episcopal Church, Covington, Virginia.

Test:—

W. E. Walker,
Registrar of the Vestry.

Cairo, Egypt—Llewellyn Gwynne, bishop of Egypt and the Sudan, recently confirmed nearly 300 service men and women in All Saints' Cathedral, Cairo. As a center for religious work among troops in the Middle East, the Cathedral has a chaplains' department which is of great help in many ways. Through this department nearly 600 candidates looking toward ordination after the war have been found among men serving in this area.

General Montgomery has been reading the Lessons at the Cathedral, for Morning or Evening Prayer. In conversation and in public speeches he has paid high tribute to the work of chaplains.

THOUGHTS FOR THE THOUGHTFUL

"Freedom must be limited to be possessed," so said the eminent English statesman Burke.

Cast all your care on God: that anchor holds. —Tennyson.

"Write it over all your difficulties, pen it across all your disappointments, inscribe it on all your fears, post it over all your troubles—God is able."

Although the world is full of suffering, it is full of overcoming it.
—Helen Keller.

"Courage for the great sorrows of life, and patience for the small ones; and then when you have accomplished your daily task, go to sleep in peace. God is awake."

"Let us be thankful that sorrow lives in us as an indestructible force, only changing its form and passing from pain into sympathy—the one world which includes all our best insight and our best love."

"Even to the death of the Cross He came; to the Cross, upon which no Roman citizen might ever, by law, be hanged; to the Cross, between two thieves; to the Cross, below which yawning soldiers played at dice. Would one know God? He is God."
—B. I. Bell.

"What makes you so joyful in the midst of your pain, here in this cold and leaky barn they asked of the dying Francis of Assisi. "I wish what God desires," he replied.

Until humanity comes to believe in the principles of Christ and to build upon them, no possible economic programs or social reforms of political arrangements or international conventions, no amount of goodwill or peaceful desire or progress of the arts and sciences, ever can build a civilization which will satisfy the insistent needs of humanity. First things must come first.

There is nothing for the Christian to fear from the operations of the intellect—nothing whatever; and least of all is there anything to fear at this time, when the contradictions, strifes, and convulsions in which a secularized, godless civilization has involved itself are manifest for all to see. All is exactly as you would expect it to be, if the Holy Scriptures are indeed the word of truth. And he is on firm intellectual ground, as well as on the rock of faith, who can say, with that saint and scholar Charles Gore—"The conviction deepens and strengthens that Jesus Christ is the Light of the World."
—Rev. F. D. Frith.

The sun sets beyond the western hills, but the trail of light he leaves behind him guides the pilgrim to his distant home. The tree falls in the forest; but in the lapse of ages it is turned into coal, and our fires burn now the brighter because it grew and fell.
—Selected.

HOW?

By LEE SPENCER

How do they live who never see the sky
Save some gray patch by noon,
All smeared with dirty smoke?
Housed in foul tenements, reared in vile stench,
Broken by drudgery, hopeless through life,
How do they live?

How do they live who never turn their hands
To any useful work,
Yet know their ease is fed
By ceaseless toil and misery?
That other human beings die too soon
That they may live in luxury?
How do they live?

The Question Box

Do you believe we will know our loved ones in the next world?

Yes. Christ emphasizes this.

We do not lose our personal identity after death and fade into a great Nothingness.

Our souls are reunited with God and our loved ones, as we push aside the curtain of Death, and enter into His Presence.

How can the pelican be considered a Christian symbol?

The pelican, according to ancient legend, nourished her young with her own blood. So it became a symbol of our Lord, particularly symbolizing His love for His Church.

What are the emblems of the Four Evangelists?

The Man(, the Lion, the Ox, and the Eagle.

The Man is the symbol for St. Matthew, because this Gospel stresses the humanity of Christ.

The Lion is the symbol for St. Mark, because this Gospel stresses the royal dignity of Christ, who is spoken of as "the Lion of the Tribe of Judah."

The Ox is the symbol for St. Luke, because he emphasizes the priesthood of Christ, and the ox in ancient times was the symbol of priestly sacrifice.

The Eagle, the symbol of St. John, stands for lofty inspiration.

What is the Unction of the Sick?

This is a Prayer Book service (page 320) for "any sick person (who) shall in humble faith desire the ministry of healing through Anointing or Laying on of Hands."

Unction, usually administered by a priest with oil blessed by a bishop, has as Scriptural authority St. James 5: 13-16, and St. Mark 6:13.

Should confirmation be at any specified age?

No. The Church does not set any specified age. However, She does insist (Prayer Book, page 295) "so soon as Children are come to a competent age, and can say the Creed, the Lord's Prayer, and the Ten Commandments, and are sufficiently instructed in the matter contained in these Offices, they shall be brought to the Bishop to be confirmed by him."

Incidentally, adults need feel no hesitation about being confirmed with a large class. In every class usually there are many adults, persons who for various reasons have delayed being confirmed, and persons who have been received into the membership of our Church from other religious bodies.

Are there any organizations in the Episcopal Church stressing the Ministry of Spiritual Healing?

Yes. The American Guild of Health, the Fellowship of St. Luke, and the Life Abundant Center.

The American Guild of Health has as its objects: 1, The study of the influence of spiritual upon physical wellbeing. 2, The exercise of healing by spiritual means, in complete loyalty to scientific principles and methods. 3, United prayer for the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, in all efforts to heal the sick. 4. The cultivation, through spiritual beans, of both individual and corporate health. For other information, write Mrs. Franklyn Cole Sherman, 3229 Berkshire Rd., Cleveland Heights, Ohio.

The Fellowship of St. Luke has as its objects: 1. The quickening of the spiritual life; the study of its influence on mental and physical wellbeing. 2. The restoration of the Apostolic Practice of Healing in the Name of Jesus Christ by Prayer, Anointing, and Laying on of Hands. 3. To pray and work for understanding and unity of purpose between those engaged in medical practice and those who employ purely spiritual methods. 4. To interpret the spirit of Luke the Physician for the needs of this age. This will be done by a careful study of his writings in the New Testament and the daily use of the Collect for St. Luke's Day. 5. To encourage and promote united prayer under the guidance of the Holy Spirit for all those who are "anyways afflicted or distressed in mind, body, or estate." 6. To cultivate through spiritual means both individual and corporate health.

The magazine of this Fellowship is "Sharing." Address all inquiries to the Warden, the Rev. John Gaynor Banks, 2243 Front Street, San Diego, Calif.

The Life Abundant Center, under the direction of the Life Abundant Movement, has as its objects: 1. To demonstrate the Life Abundant by obedience to LAW and service to mankind by following Jesus Christ. 2. To heal the sick in mind, body, and spirit, and to work for the prevention of disease, crime, and poverty by education and breaking down of superstition, ignorance, and prejudice. 3. To work for peace among individuals and nations of the world and the unity of Christendom. A school is carried on during the summer for guests who care to attend. Write the Life Abundant Center, Black Mountain, N. C.

LETTERS

Editor Southern Churchman:

My very dear friend, Doctor Kenneth MacKenzie, died in July. I feel as if I had talked to him face to face. When he reviewed books for your paper ten years ago I wrote him. I wrote to tell him of my joy that a minister of my Church (Episcopal) wrote favorably of a book which accepted Healing.

I wrote to him that everyone of my friends in my home town, whenever I used the word "Healing," exclaimed, "Oh, you are a Christian Scientist." He sent me his book.

For ten years we have been friends. Rev. A. M. Fraser to whom I lent my book wrote me, "I have read it with pleasure and with profit." And Dr. Fraser was orthodox to the last hair of his head.

Why, oh, why, was such a Christian as the Rev. Kenneth MacKenzie, often criticized by his fellow Churchman?

In the 16th chapter of the gospel according to St. Mark I read:

"They shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover."

Also gifts of healing are mentioned in the Epistle of St. Paul.

Nevertheless to this day, whenever I mention Healing, all my friends in Staunton remark, Oh, you are a Christian Scienitst.

I never read the book written by Mrs. Eddy. But in St. Mark's gospel I find that our Saviour Jesus Christ just before He arose and was received up into heaven declared "they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover."

Dear Kenneth MacKenzie!

He was a blessed saint. How many times he has cheered me in my years of invalidism. With deep gratitude I remember that I had his prayers and his letters for ten years.

Grace W. Harrison, age 83.

HAVEN . . .

By J. W. KENNEDY

One of the most familiar passages in the New Testament is instantly on the tongue the moment the reference is given. When I give the reference, note how the phrase fills your ears without a sound from me as to the actual words. John 3:16. I want to read John 3:16 and a few verses following from Goodspeed's translation. Watch for the words, phrases, thoughts, flashes of insight that fill the inner parts with light.

"For God loved the world so much that He gave his only Son, so that no one who believes in Him should be lost, but that they should all have eternal life. For God did not send His Son into the world to pass judgment upon the world, but that through Him, the world might be saved. No one who believes in Him has to come up for judgment. Anyone who does not believe stands condemned already, for not believing in God's only Son. And the basis of the judgment is this, that the light has come into the world, and yet because their actions were wicked, men have loved the darkness more than the light and will not come to it for fear his actions will be exposed. But everyone who is living the truth will come to the light, to show that his actions have been performed in dependence upon God."

Listen to this imaginary conversation with one who has just listened to the reading of this section from John:

"God doesn't love the world. Look at it. If He loved the world so much it wouldn't be in such a mess, would it? God hates the world and the darkness of this hour is His wrathful judgment. God's love and the rest of that pious stuff you have just read simply doesn't gee with the truth, which is so obvious it makes you bug-eyed with amazement."

"I can understand partly how you feel for the temptation has often hit me to yield to the almost overwhelming evidence of sight and feeling without giving my mind a chance to dig under the debris and find if there is a bit of life left or a foundation. Examine this passage a bit more closely. God loved the world so much he sent His Son to wake it up from its drugged state of insensitiveness beyond self-consciousness. God created men who could use their lives for what they willed although God made them so that they could not stand the brightness of His light which of direction. That is why God sent a portion of Himself to save those who would be saved. His coming made men feel the full force of their wrongs and they sensed the consequences, so they killed him because sensed the consequences, so they killed His light which showed them up. The choice between light and dark is still going on. Those who have believed in Jesus Christ have found the way to islands of light in the seas of darkness and have known God's love in the atmosphere of the world's hate. These possess that which is not afraid of the light or the dark for they depend upon God. Those who disbelieve, and therefore do not even desire Him, suffer the consequences of a world such as this, with no hope beyond an army of superior might, which wins battles of war but never the battles of peace."

"You may be right, but if you are, why do so many choose darkness and not light?"

"God Himself must be asking the same question and finding no adequate answers save that men are not willing for the light brought by His Son to reveal them for what they are—head-hunting pygmies, bereft of sight and sense, who must die to the old life and be resurrected to the new. But God loves the world so much He keeps the Spirit of His love at work, knowing it will win at last a dawn."

Prominent Americans Give Endorsement of Religious Education Week

COMBATING CRIME THROUGH RELIGION

By JOHN EDGAR HOOVER,
United States Department of Justice
Director Federal Bureau of Investigation

(Note: The following articles were written at the request of the International Council of Religious Education, Chicago, endorsing the thirteenth annual continent-wide observance of Religious Education Week, September 26-October 3, in the United States and Canada. The Episcopal Church and forty-two other Protestant denominations as well as one hundred and seventeen state, city and provincial interdenominational councils of churches and religious education are cooperating in this observance.)

This period marks the thirteenth anniversary of the nationwide observance of Religious Education Week. It is encouraging to know that throughout the United States, in communities large and small, concerted attention is being given to this important subject and definite plans are being made for its further application to the problems of the home, the church, and the nation.

Religious education has an important part to play in the teaching of our youth. Its value in that respect cannot be overestimated. If more American homes were cognizant of the leading role which the Sunday School, Young People's Meetings, and similar groups have to our youth we would not now be confronted with the rising tide of juvenile crime Too many Americans have ignored the all too apparent facts. During the first year of war juvenile crime increased to astounding proportions. The statistical records compiled by the Federal Bureau of Investigation from thousands of fingerprint cards submitted by police departments in the United States show that in 1942 the greatest number of criminal arrests were made in the eighteen year age group for boys and twenty-one year age group for girls. Young people under twenty-one years of age accounted for 15 per cent of all arrests for murder, 34 per cent of all arrests for robbery and larceny, and 50 per cent of all arrests for burglary. This trend continues for 1943 with many classes of crime still in the ascendancy. Homes where the parents are working in partnership with God and where the children are given the benefit of proper religious education can do much to combat this trend before it becomes an insurmountable obstacle.

A truly religious community is a law-abiding community; the law enforcement bodies of the nation could direct more of their time and energy to combating the spies and saboteurs if the war on crime were not an ever-present engagement. The church which is the center of religious thought and education of its community occupies more of an important position than ever before in maintaining the essential balance between our moral and spiritual lives. Wartime communities have grown up near centers of production. Religious education must be extended to them and the proper facilities provided to care for this added need.

Many adults consider religious education as a subject worthy of attention only in their youth. The teachings of Christ have been misinterpreted, for some adults are still adolescents so far as their religious knowledge is concerned. There is much to be learned if only we avail ourselves of the opportunities. Teachers are needed with the increased loads placed upon the teaching staffs to replace those who have left to serve in the uniform of their nation. The war has added many responsibilities to each of us but in addition we must all give more of our time and energy to this need which is so ever present.

America was founded upon religious principles by God-fearing, hard-working, clear-thinking men. Religious education has always played an important part in maintaining the structure of the American family life. There is that bond which cements our homes to the solid foundation of a religious America. In many homes during the early days of America the Bible was often the only book available. No nation can survive the test of centuries which does not maintain its structure upon its religion and its humbleness in the sight of God.

Every church organization should take an active interest in the problems of the young people and see that their idle hours after school, week ends, and holidays are filled with wholesome recreation, teaching and understanding guidance.

If the proper application of the aims of Religious Education Weew is made, I am certain that the work of the future months will be reflected in the results of the nationwide fight against child delinquency.

WIDE SPREAD CHRISTIAN TEACHING AND PRACTICE WILL BENEFIT WHOLE WORLD

By WILLIAM GREEN, President
American Federation of Labor

The spiritual impoverishment of the world is very largely reflected in the world war which is being waged in such a destructive manner. This fact ought to serve to arouse within every thinking person a new sense of the need for Christian teaching and the practice of religion. Perhaps one could justly charge that the sufferings which have been imposed upon the people in all nations throughout the world is very largely due to our failure to accept and apply the principles of religion and to give wider, broader and more comprehensive support to Christian teaching.

We make comparison between the Pagan era in the world's history and our modern achievement of civilization and civilized principles—yet we find in this war that notwithstanding two thousand years of Christian teaching, cruelties and inhuman practices are being practiced which were never resorted to when cruel wars raged even during the Pagan era. Why is this and what is the answer to it? It must be observed that all of it is directly traceable to the fact that the people of the world generally have failed to apply the principles of religion in human relationships, as well as in international relationships.

The crying need of the moment is to discover anew the principles of religion and to apply them in our individual and collective life relationships. That objective can be reached more quickly through the development and application of wide-spread Christian teaching. It is a simple process. It is not difficult to understand the Ten Commandments, the Sermon on the Mount or the Golden Rule. What is needed are these simple religious principles to be recognized and applied in all human relationships, both individual and collective.

Any movement launched for the purpose of promoting the principles of religion and for the development of a broader, wider Christian teaching deserves the support of all right-minded people. For this special reason I extend my personal and official endorsement to the Thirteenth Annual Observance of Religious Education Week, September 26 to October 3, 1943.

BELIEF IN A LIVING GOD NECESSARY FOR VICTORY

By PAUL V. McNUTT
Chairman of the War Manpower Commission

In the midst of the material havoc of total war, mankind, without religious faith, would have little to sustain him.

Total war means the destruction of everything material. It means ruined cities, factories in ashes, millions and millions of homes, great and small, reduced to rubble. Faith, religious faith, alone is beyond its reach.

Some men call that faith hope but by whatever name it is known, its inspiration is the same, man's unshaken belief in God. It is only when he loses that belief that faith forsakes him and then only can he be totally destroyed.

In their worship of the material our enemies forgot, or rather scorned, that intangible they could not understand. It was coldly logical to them . . . as logical as two and two making four . . . that the better equipped, the better trained army should win. It was completely inconceivable to Hitler, to Mussolini, that the puny democracies could stand up to that army. It was entirely a matter of so many planes against so few, so many guns, so many tanks, so many ships and submarines. They had calculated, in material values, every advantage on their side down to the last round of ammunition. Victory seemed inescapable.

Long before, of course, they had cut God out of their calculations. He wasn't included among the planes, the tanks, the submarines.

Some place, perhaps, the one-time Italian dictator, Benito Mussolini, is going over those sums in his head . . . trying to figure out to his own satisfaction why his calculations were wrong . . . why so many planes, tanks, guns, etc., failed to spell victory. His co-partner in iniquity, Hitler, may not, as yet have put the question in words even to himself. His time for puzzled calculating, however, is coming. The "beginning of the end" is in sight.

It is timely, now, with the certainty of victory growing clearer with each passing day, to remember in all humility, the faith and hope that sustained us in those dark early days. In the past eighteen months we have accomplished the impossible. Our faith and hope, based on our unshakable belief in a living God, have worked the miracle, the miracle those nations who left Him out of their calculations will never understand.

HUMAN PROGRESS DEPENDS ON RELIGION

By ROBERT A. MILLIKAN, Chairman
Executive Council
California Institute of Technology

Two reasons why I wish to endorse the Program of The International Council of Religious Education for Religious Education Week.

First, according to the official U. S. census of 1940 fifty-five million people, a large majority of the adult population of the United States, list themselves as adherents of one or another of the country's churches. This means that quite irrespective of any one's religious views, organized religion is in fact today the greatest social institution in this country. If this is true, then the person who has no knowledge of, or contact with, the life and work of the religious organizations of of the country is by that very ignorance completely unfitted to assume a position of influence or leadership in American life. The chief function of the Council for the Promotion of Religious Education is to assist in dispelling that ignorance. Under the leadership of men like its President, former Governor Stassen of Minnesota, it can be trusted, in my judgment, to go at that job both sanely and effectively.

Second, I know of no better way of going about the task of finding what is the essence of religion than by trying to discover what is the element that is common to all Christian churches and denominations, for their name is almost legion. That common element certainly has nothing to do with theology, for theologies are as wide apart as the poles, and if any one of them is right then all the differing ones are in this respect necessarily wrong. Nevertheless there is a common element in all Christian churches. It is the attitude or ideal of "othermindedness," commonly called unselfishness, technically known as extrovertness. This Christ-like or altruistic ideal means specifically concern for the common good and the effort to promote it. Nor is this just my individual statement. The man who is commonly regarded as the foremost of living philosophers, A. N. Whitehead, states the essence of religion in these three words: "Religion is world-loyalty." The spread of this attitude, coupled with the spread of the spirit of science, constitute the two essential conditions of human well-being and human progress. Either one of these two without the other is relatively impotent. Putting the two together into one sentence: human progress depends upon the spread of the spirit or attitude of religion, implemented by knowledge.

These, then, are my reasons for believing in the religious education movement. I hope the net long-time result will consist in furnishing here in the United States an example to the world of how the religious life of a nation can evolve intelligently, wholesomely, inspiringly, reverently, completely divorced from all unreason, all superstition, and all unwholesome emotionalism.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

By ERIC A. JOHNSTON, President
Chamber of Commerce of the United States

In these times that give supreme test to America's faith in the inevitability of Divine dispensation, it is well to redirect attention to the place that religion always has occupied in the conduct of our nation's affairs.

Therefore, I am glad that the International Council

Does God Speak? "What Is Spirituality?"

Third in a Series of Six Radio Addresses

By THE RIGHT REVEREND WILLIAM BERTRAND STEVENS

Bishop of Los Angeles

To many an unthinking man or woman spirituality is the absence of common practical sense. Is it true that the spiritual person is one who is not very good at housekeeping or bookkeeping? Nothing is farther from the truth. The spiritual person is the most practical person in the world because he believes in a universe that makes sense.

There are three common theories of spiritual and moral progress. The first is that there is really no such thing; that "mankind is ever advancing but man himself remains the same" (Goethe). There is only accumulation—not true transformation. Men seem to be better and wiser than their ancestors but it is only that they have more experience and what seems to be progress is only an illusion. The second theory is that which was dear to many during the era of financial prosperity—that progress is automatic, that the world has been wound up to produce a civilization that will be increasingly better as the centuries go on, that mankind is like wine and the older it is and the longer its history, the better it is bound to be. This position is happily one that has been largely discredited. The third approach is the Christian one—that somehow the purposes and aspirations of man may reach and touch the higher purposes of God, or to put it in another way, that man's life and work may be motivated and sanctified by the power of God by the Holy Spirit, the third person of the Holy Trinity. "It is the Spirit that quickeneth." Man, in his periods of spiritual discernment, is able to overcome great handicaps and demonstrate progress and enlargement. On the other hand it is obvious that man has been able to thwart and quench the Spirit. There is nothing necessarily inevitable about the saving power of God unless man does his part.

God puts us in a world of vast spiritual horizons and resources. There are visions, measuring lines, precepts, common experiences, gracious personalities, inward spiritual urges that can make us better than we are. And the basic problem of Christian nurture is to teach ourselves and our children to use all these.

First of all we must develop the use of that spiritual power that is within—that kind of guidance that as far as we can tell operates more or less independently of experience and reasoning processes—Conscience, intuition, the "kindly light." It may be generally identified with spiritual leading. The older we become the more we value these faculties, largely perhaps because of bitter experience in disregarding their warning. Each one of us has the recollection of being tempted to do something the value of which is uncertain. A voice within us urges us not to yield, but we do it against that warning. So true is this that most of us will admit that the stupid, unkind things we do are seldom the result of ignorance, but of wilfulness. Man of all the animal world is the most persistent violator of his instincts and, should he use his God-given instincts, he would find life much less complex and infinitely happier.

One hesitates to say what is spiritual and what is not but we know that these inward voices are not necessarily the Holy Spirit. We cannot depend on them entirely. Too much dependence means morbidness. We become perplexed and confused. The inward light fails us as it has many a man who has depended too largely on himself. The modern cut of self-confidence and self-mastery is fraught with danger. Men become smug or caught up by the dictatorial mind.

We need to supplement our own experience therefore, with the experience of others, to see that God the Holy Spirit speaks through the cumulative knowledge and experience of mankind. The recognition of this truth is at the heart of every religious and truly educational process. It is what the philosopher meant when he said that the study of the book of God's work as well as the book of His word is necessary. The Christian conception of life and religion is that which sees God's arm reaching over the whole area of the world, but also hears His voice speaking age after age through human personality. Christian fellowship implies geographical unity, but also unity in time. Education is the quest of truth. In a sense religion is a quest for truth but it is a quest for moral truth. From the book of experience there come to us clear cut precepts which —if followed—could bring us close to the Kingdom of God. And yet how we deny them each day that we live. As we do not listen to conscience, so we refuse to heed the warnings of experience. Again and again we do things that we know we should not. We go ahead and do them in spite of certain knowledge of the consequences that will ensue. This is a fact to which each of us in our honest moments would attest. Knowledge is not virtue unless will can be made to keep pace with it. Socrates identified the two because he had, so it is said, so perfect a will power that for him to know a truth or duty was to act upon it. Most men find themselves torn like St. Paul between knowledge of duty and wilfulness of spirit, and religious education is to teach a way of life, a method of doing the things we would do and avoiding the things we would not do.

World tragedies are not the consequence of ignorance of the horror, the cost and the folly of war. Selfish nations like Germany and Japan know all that and yet will consent to the conditions that make war inevitable and the whole dreadful business is repeated again and again.

The Christian must believe that there is a Holy Spirit, whom we personalize and refer to as "He" or "Him", who is guiding men into all truth. Beyond intuition and conscience, beyond the values of human experience, God is directing and leading us amid the changes and uncertainties of life. And how greatly we need new hope and courage!

When the apostles overcame fear, it was the result of a manifestation of divine power which strengthened and supported their sense of fellowship. When the Holy Spirit came, He came as a gift to the group. That bestowal of power sent them out as Christian heroes.

Keep Something for the Church

The season is rapidly approaching when in communities all over the country, drives of many descriptions will be under way. There will be War Bond drives, and War and Community Fund drives. The goals of both will be largely increased this Fall.

Sometime late in November or early December, your Parish Church will conduct its every member canvass. In responding to these other calls, which will come first, remember to keep something for the Church. You believe it is important, you believe it has value. You know that these other drives receive moral support from the Church. Be fair and give to God His share, in the abundance with which He has blessed you. Save something for the Church.

We Shudder

It has been stated frequently in these columns that as Christians we bear a tremendous responsibility in these turbulent days. One of our responsibilities as Christians is to use all our influence to blunt the sharp edges of the swords of hate. These swords of hate have been sharpened in the cauldron of atrocities that men of evil genius have perpetrated in our generation. This is a commonplace fact.

We have been agreeably surprised by the few diatribes in the way of editorials, speeches, radio scripts, etc., that have appeared to date! We were shocked by the reprint in our local press of an editorial appearing in the Jackson, Mississippi, Daily News. The gist of this explosion was the suggestion that Hitler, Mussolini and Hirohito, be tortured by slow hanging. This, or better these hangings to take place in the Capital of every conquered country and in every state capital in this country, with a final coup de grace, given on the Capital grounds in Washington! There is revenge with a vengeance. With grim humour this editor admits that the necks of the victims might not last for the duration of such punishment; but he adds a new collar could be found to fit the stretching they would receive.

We shudder, if this editorial be symptomatic. In the first place, though the Germans, Italians and Japanese, have done many cruel things to us—we cannot stand beside the Poles, the Jews, the Chinese, in our understanding that a spirit of vindictiveness is largely missing among these victims of ruthless oppression. We doubt if there is so bloodthirsty an attitude to be found among many of the veterans of Guadalcanal, and Sicily.

We do not know the editor of the Jackson Daily News. We trust that he has had time to cool off. We pray that his readers will not be impressed by his vindictive outburst.

As Christians we face the grim necessity of keeping our courage, on the home front, and transmitting some of it to our men on the battlefronts. But may we train ourselves to pray at the same time, that the vindictive spirit of brutal punishment to be served out to our enemies, may not become a part of our planning for the post-war world. Punishment—yes! But no revenge!

Together—for a Happier Time for All

The American worker, whether skilled or unskilled, for generations now, has lived on a plane far above that of his contemporaries in other countries. This condition is in large measure due to the strength of the labor union movement in this country. On this Sunday which comes before the Monday known as Labor Day, the Church has its opportunity to pay tribute to the leaders of American Labor.

There are selfish labor leaders. It does not take a newspaper columnist to tell us that evil practices are followed in certain union circles. There are men in every walk of life, and in every profession who seek only their own selfish ends. We still have faith in the American working man, and his innate sense of fair-play. We could not have accomplished the miracle of production in the past year and a half, had it not been for labor's partnerships.

We know that there are careless employers, who seek only their own profit. Against such men, labor has a right to organize, and yes, to strike. But we also have faith in the fairness of the vast majority of employers in this country. Our big business has been built up on the faith of men in men. The church must be ready and willing to say to both groups, "when yau are right we (the church) stand with you. When you are wrong we cannot stand with you!" But we also are always ready to act as the neutral arbiter in disputes between capital and labor.

To the American working man on this Labor Day, 1943, we express our confidence in his sense of fair play. We know that he is doing his part to hasten military victory. We know that he longs to live in a world at peace wherein he may enjoy the fruits of his labor.

If we can but remember that it is mutual respect for one another, that will bring happy relations between man and man. The Great Lover of men admonishes us to love our neighbor as we do ourselves. That is as true today as when first spoken. Surely its simple meaning is that if we work together a happier time will be enjoyed by all.

Literacy: A Post-War Must

By FRANK C. LAUBACH

"Apostle of Literacy"
Author of "The Silent Billion Speak"

Literacy is one of the four or five musts, if we are to have a safe world.

Outside of Europe and North America, the great majority of the human race cannot read nor write their own names. In Asia close to ninety percent are illiterate; among the colored people of Africa over ninety-eight percent; and in Latin America seven out of every ten cannot read nor write.

What are we going to do about that? We cannot leave those illiterate millions alone. If we leave the world alone when this war is finished, we shall lose all that our boys are dying for.

Educators are excited about literacy, because we have found that the easiest and most promising people to educate are the illiterates. They are incredibly easy to reach and easy to teach. It is true that teaching people to read English is hard, but that is because we have such a chaotic way to spell—eight sounds for "a", and even more for "o"! But, fortunately, in ninety percent of the world's languages they spell phonetically—one sound for a letter. Where this is done, they can be taught to read by modern methods in a couple of weeks—not very well, but slowly and aloud. All they need after that is something interesting and easy to read, and they improve by practice.

Why this excitement about literacy? Because it is now seen to be the spearhead for the social and moral and spiritual uplift of the illiterate three-fifths of the human race. As soon as they learn to read their phonetics, we place in their hands papers and tracts with short sentences, easy words they always have spoken, large print, telling them the answers to their deepest needs—about saving the lives of their babies, about malaria, blindness, intestinal diseases, sanitation, about cooking and selecting foods for health, about selecting seeds, destroying enemies to their animals and vegetables, about getting out of debt and keeping the laws; and about the principles of Christ.

Our new knowledge of geography opens up a shocking picture of these illiterates, the most oppressed and wretched people in the world. Too ignorant to depend upon themselves, they are victims of educated or half-educated scoundrels, who enslave them, rob them, and lie to them. Ninety percent of the illiterates are in debt, and since they cannot compute their debt, they do not know how much they owe; they only know that the debt was inherited from their ancestors, and that the money lender takes all they can give him without actually starving to death. Millions of them belong to the land on which they were born, are tortured or killed without the government's ever hearing of it. Countless millions of them are deliberately fed opium or cocaine or liquor to keep them drugged and therefore unresisting to their exploiters. Five out of six of their children die before they reach their first birthday.

Think what it will mean to these people and to their descendants if the Christians of America have enough human pity to help them out of their black sorrow!

They are the easiest people on earth to win for Christ, if we prove our sincerity. They are amazed when educated people pay any attention to them. When they find our interest is unselfish, their amazement turns into a tremendous gratitude. By the time we teach them to read in a dozen easy delightful lessons, they are ready to die for us. When we tell them we learned this from Christ, they love Him at once because they have seen Him in our actions. And when they become Christians they prove wonderfully loyal, and work with prodigious zeal to know their Bibles and to win others. We can have as many of these illiterate billion for Christ as we go after.

They are bright people. They are not our inferiors, but they have never had our chance. They have never had Christ. They are where our ancestors were in Europe before Christ came to them.

The Greek Catholic Church, before the First World War, failed to do anything to help the literacy or the social conditions of Russia. Atheistic communism undertook it, and taught one hundred millions in twenty years. Now those one hundred millions are away from Christ and are reading countless tons of atheistic literature.

Today one hundred millions in Latin America, one billion on this planet are waiting to be taught. Will the Christian church grasp this opportunity, lead these people to Christ and set the standard for the matter they shall read? The future of the world hinges just as much upon that question as the future of Russia hinged upon the question whether the Greek Church would or would not serve the illiterate people.

The illiterate is so poor that he will not be able to buy expensive literature for a long while, not until his economic condition is better. During that period, when he is reading easy literature and improving his status, we shall need much money to subsidize the material we print. When he first starts to read he believes everything he reads and he memorizes practically all of it. Illiterates have wonderful memories and instinctively commit everything to memory. This is the time to plant ideas, which will grow a lifetime.

We shall need trained organizers, multitudes of writers and tremendous resources to subsidize this needed literature. A billion dollars could be used with immense benefit. But now every dollar counts while this newest, indeed infant enterprise of the Christian America gathers momentum.

PROMINENT AMERICANS

of Religious Education is seeking wide observance of Religious Education Week.

Determined foes deny, defy and would defile the very conceptions and aspirations which to us, nurtured in liberty, make life precious and sacred. The way to victory may be long and difficult, and a rebirth of religious consciousness will give to us as a nation a firmer confidence in the righteousness of our cause.

There are no atheists in the foxholes that screen our troops from an enemy determinedly bent on snuffing out their existence, nor among our parachuters who drift down behind the enemy's defenses to chance their lives as they disrupt his communications. There is no religious scoffing among those who make up the hardy advance guard that lands on the enemy's beaches and fans out under a rain of deadly missiles to protect the lives of those that follow them. These men are so close to the realities of life and death that when they whisper a prayer it cannot but build up their confidence and courage.

America has been built on faith—faith in God and faith in our fellowmen. From this we have derived a faith in the righteousness of our American constitutional civil, political, and religious freedoms. It is for these that our sons, brothers, and fellow citizens are now fighting at sea, on land, and in the air around the globe.

A large portion of the world is today under the bloody heels of men who have made a religion of devious thinking and brutal actions.

The two decades between the two World Wars have been a period of cynicism and little faith. In the enslaved and dictated countries cynicism has found its fullest and ugliest expression.

During these decades it became "smart" to question moral values, to "debunk" everything, to rationalize brutality, to make excuses for horrors at home and abroad. We have heard men sneer at freedom and make light of democracy. Many forget that our code of morals, our respect for truth and fair dealing, are not arbitrary laws imposed from the outside. They are the products of thousands of years of human experience—the quintessence of the wisdom of the ages, of Christianity.

America needs dedication to higher standards in public life and of conduct in business. We need each individual to rededicate himself to religious study, that he may fulfill his birthright as a child of the one God. Only in humility engendered through religious education may those individuals who compose society attain the highest concept of service to themselves, their fellowmen, their America, and world peace, prosperity, and happiness.

FAITH IN GOD NEEDED

By ARTHUR B. LANGLIE
Governor, State of Washington

There is no possible substitute for true and sincere religious faith. Faith in God is the strength of our fighting men in the jungles of the South Pacific, on the approaches to Europe, and on the seven seas. We have the word of our military leaders that religious belief transcends mere physical courage.

Likewise the strength of everyone of our American communities is the character of its citizens. This strength is in proportion to the prevalence of honesty, kindliness, social responsibility and a spirit of mutual helpfulness. This spirit has its basis in Christian teaching.

Today, the citizens of America, must have something fine and sound and indestructible to which they may cling as a deep set anchor. We are meeting heartbreaking grief in the loss of our husbands and sons in battle. We face the approaching need of creating a new world from chaos, once Victory is won, and such a world cannot be rebuilt unless it be on the rock of truth, justice and Godliness.

Let us forget those lush days of the twenties when our attention was centered on a scramble for material gain. Let us forget the confusion and disturbance of the troubled thirties. We are united as one people in fighting to destroy those tyrants who have misled other nations with their doctrines of hate, force, greed and reckless ambition. With Divine help we shall triumph, and I hope it will be speedily.

Let us see to it that we create, by our example, a rebirth of strong and vital Faith, which will bring conviction that right will prevail always in dealings between man and man, whatever his color, race or creed. A renewed recognition of spiritual values will build a new and better world. Peoples everywhere are groping for such an anchor, and if given the opportunity will join in that true Faith.

To the end that we may set aside a period for reverent consideration of spiritual values in our lives, I commend the observance of Religious Education Week.

CITIZENS AND WORKERS OF TOMORROW

By ANDREW H. PHELPS, Vice President
Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company

I believe Christian illiteracy is one of the greatest causes for war. I am glad the International Council of Religious Education is enlisting by the thousands the interest and leadership of our forward-thinking Christian statesmen who, when inspired on this subject, will work diligently to make attractive and available Religious Education to our young people—the leaders of tomorrow. The power behind Christian Education is sufficient to transform lives, communities, states, and nations.

It is later than we think. Many of us remember the aftermath of the first World War with crime of all sorts — robbery — murder — and the natural consequence of teaching men and nations to be brutal. It is feared that we may expect the same sort of thing to happen in the next ten years. The only way to mitigate the unspeakably sad situation is t h r o u g h a thorough training of the young people, the boys and girls, who within ten years will become the citizens and workers of tomorrow.

When we contemplate what a type of education has done in Japan, Italy, and Germany and the tremendous task of bringing a different type of training to these countries in order to save the world, we see an almost impossible task to be accomplished through Religious Education.

It is the sincere hope of your good friends that you will not want for money or workers to do a very complete and much needed Christian job. It is also hoped that Religious Education will emphasize anew the vital active transforming force of the life of Jesus Christ and the way He taught His followers to live. All people must feel a transforming power through Christ which, supplemented by the teaching of Christian ethics, should be a vital force to guide people in the way they should live their lives.

REVEILLE

What's the use of winding clocks
This time o' year,
When before the sun is up
Every day we hear:
"Cheer up! Dear up! We're up, too!"
How could any one feel blue?
"Cheer up! Dear up! We're up, too!"

Waking is a cheerful thing
When the birds begin it;
Makes up want to hurry out
And welcome every minute.
"Cheer up! Dear up! We're up, too!"
Bugler Robin, thanks to you.
"Cheer up! Dear up! We're up, too!"

THE KNIGHT IN THE KITCHEN

Tennyson in The Idylls of the King tells us how very, very many years ago Britain was a lawless land where kings ruled and fought one another for leadership. Barons held their castles against one another, riding out to settle quarrels by the sword, or to fight for new lands. There was no justice to be won by law; might overruled right. Just when wrong seemed to have completely conquered right, a king named Arthur came to the throne of one of the kingdoms. He determined to make good laws and to froce even the lords of the castle to obey them. He was strong and determined that justice should be done to everybody.

Gareth was the youngest son of one of the kings of Britain in King Arthur's time. His brothers had all become knights of the Round Table, and Gareth longed to join them, but his mother loved him dearly and wanted his companionship at home.

Time passed, Gareth grew a man and was uneasy with the idle life in his father's castle. At length he went to his mother and pleaded with her:

—O Mother,
How can ye keep me tethered to you? Shame!
Man am I grown, a man's work must I do.
Follow the deer? Follow the Christ, the King,
Live pure, speak true, right wrong, follow the King—
Else, wherefore born?

The Queen could not refuse her strong, brave son his longing to prove his manhood by knightly deeds to help the poor and oppressed. But she would test him. Did he only want fame and glory, or was he willing to endure pain and hardship? "You shall go to King Arthur's Court," she said, "on one condition—that you will work in his kitchen as a serving-man for one year, without telling anyone who are you."

So Gareth promised and, dressed as a serving-man went away to King Arthur's Court and begged to be allowed to serve in the kitchen. This was granted, and he was placed under the seneschal, Sir Kay, a hard and sour knight who had charge of the King's household.

Then began a time of difficult work. Sir Kay disliked Gareth and gave him the hardest pieces of work to do, but the young prince performed all his duties well and with a good will. He thrilled when he heard his fellow-servants tell of the brave deeds of King Arthur and his knights, but when the stories were low and coarse, he whistled to himself so that he should not listen, and after a while his comrades, who learned to respect him, ceased to tell this kind of tale. Still—

Kay the seneschal, who loved him not,
Would bustle and harry him and labour him
Beyond his comrades of the hearth, and set
To turn the broach, draw water or hew wood,
Or grosser tasks; and Gareth bowed himself,
With all obedience to the king, and wrought
All kinds of service with a noble ease,
That graced the lowliest act in doing it.

After two months the Queen was satisfied that Gareth had the right motive for wishing to become a knight. She sent a messenger to the court with a suit of armour, and set Gareth free from his vow. He eagerly sought King Arthur and begged to be made Knight of the Round Table. King Arthur, who had known him from the first who he was answered:

Son, the good mother let me know thee here,
And sent her wish that I would yield thee thine,
Make thee my knight? My knights are sworn to vows
Of utter hardihood, utter gentleness,
And loving, utter faithfulness in love,
And utter most obedience to the king.

Gareth readily took the vows, was made a knight, and was soon given the opportunity of proving himself a good one. The spirit of hardihood and willing service which he had learned in the kitchen stood him in good stead in all his later adventures.

—Canadian Churchman.

BEHIND ALL—GOD!

Behind the furrowed soil, the changing weather,
The April showers, midsummer's heat,
The Master Gardener watches, while together
Men toil—plod on with weary feet.
Before the loaf of bread—the work of sowing
The grains of wheat; sunshine and rain
Sent by our God to speed the lusty growing;
'Tis He who gives for bread, the grain.
Behind all—God!

Midst all our joy, His great heart, throbbing, loving;
Through all our pain, His sympathy;
Success or loss, dark night or morning's glowing,
Blend into one great symphony.
Oh, tender care, oh, love, past all believing!
Abundance for our every need;
The Heavenly Father giving—we receiving
Till time and earthly things recede.
Behind all—God!

—N. M. Leonard in S. S. Times.

Out of the snare the fowler laid,
Flutters the sparrow, unafraid;
Spreads her small wings
To fly,
And sings:
"This liberty, is this to die?"
Then speeds her blithely to His breast,
Who loosed the snare, and gave her rest.

IF I COULD BE AN ANIMAL

If I could be an animal
I'd be a kangaroo!
They never leave their children home
As other mothers do.
They wear a pocket, lined with fur,
All nice and warm inside,
In which they tuck their tiny tots
And take them for a ride!

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF THE NEWS

TRINITY CATHEDRAL HOST TO NATION—

When the 54th Triennial Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church meets in Cleveland October 2-11, two of the outstanding churches of the city will be used to house the gatherings. All of the legislative sessions and committee meetings will be held in Euclid Avenue Baptist Church, Euclid at 18th Street. All of the religious services will be held at Trinity Cathedral, Euclid at 22nd Street, a few minutes' walk from the Euclid Avenue Baptist Church.

Trinity Cathedral, the "Bishop's Church" of the Diocese of Ohio, is an outgrowth of Trinity Parish the first church to be organized in Cleaveland and the first church to erect a building in the village which afterward was to to become the city of Cleveland. Because of the traditions and influence of the parish it was but natural that it should offer to provide the Cathedral, and it may have been in the mind of the parish when the real estate at the southeast corner of Euclid Avenue and 22nd Street was purchased in 1884. In 1890 Trinity Church was definitely offered to the Rt. Rev. William Andrew Leonard, then Bishop of the Diocese, as his Cathedral, an offer which was readily accepted.

Mr. William G. Mather was appointed chairman of a committee to study plans for the new Cathedral and to secure a suitable architect. Under the direction of a Cleveland architect, Charles F. Schweinfurth, the actual work of construction was started in 1901 and completed in 1907. The architect and committee resisted the tendency of the period to use the Romanesque style and the Cathedral was constructed with Indiana limesone is a splendid example of the perpendicular Gothic style.

There are three aspects of any Cathedral which will help one to interpret it. First of all, it is the head church of a diocese. It is the "Bishop's Church." The Bishop directs the work of the diocese from his chair which is placed near the altar in the Cathedral. In this sense it is his place of authority, or his church.

The second aspect, is architecture both external and internal, with the equipment and fittings. Trinity Cathedral not alone represents an historic style of architecture but its windows, chapel, altar, baptistry, candelabra, altar cloths, choir and clergy stalls, and other fittings, are rich in tradition and represent the noblest human devotion. It is through items such as these that a Cathedral grows to be more than a church.

Finally, the Cathedral has its own parish life. The Dean, selected by the worshippers at the recommendation of the Bishop, is the rector of the Cathedral parish. All of the pastoral functions are observed at the Cathedral. It is usually considered as a church for a much wider constituency than a parish church. In a sense it belongs to the entire community and there are no bars at the doors. Regardless of personal faith, all are invited to its friendly worship. The present Dean of Trinity Cathedral is the Very Rev. Chester Burge Emerson who was installed Canon Residentiary on January 1, 1933, and as Dean on November 22nd of the same year.

REVISED HYMNAL OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH

New York, N. Y.—The Revised Hymnal of the Protestant Episcopal Church, as authorized and approved by the General Convention of 1940, is out. It is being published by The Church Hymnal Corporation, a wholly-owned subsidiary of The Church Pension Fund. In letters being sent to all of the clergy by The Church Hymnal Corporation, it is stated that although the Full Musical Edition, of which there are two editions, namely a Standard Edition and a heavily reinforced Choir Edition, is now ready for shipment, the two Melody Editions, which will take the place of the former World-Only Edition, will not be ready until later in the Fall. The Melody Editions, which will be available in two sizes, will contain the tune of each hymn but not the harmony. This, in the opinion of the Joint Commission on the Revision of the Hymnal, is an important forward step which has been taken in the interest of encouraging congregational singing. Despite the fact that the small pew edition will contain the air of the music as well as the words, it is being offered at no increase in cost over the price at which the Words-Only Edition formerly sold.

The Revised Hymnal of 1940 is the result of the work of the Joint Commission on the Revision of the Hymnal, appointed by the General Convention of 1937. This Commission, formerly under the chairmanship of the late Bishop Mikell of Atlanta, and now under the chairmanship of Bishop Washburn of Newark, has been steadily at work during the last six years, and has had numerous meetings during which, it is stated; every detail of the revised Hymnal has been passed upon by the Commission as a whole, although a considerable amount of the preliminary work has been handled through Sub-Committees. In addition to securing advice from prominent organists and musicians in each Diocese, the Commission on the Revision of the Hymnal has worked in close cooperation with the Commission on Church Music.

The Hymnal of 1940 contains approximately 600 hymns and it is stated that more than half of these are familiar and generally well-known hymns. There are 316 hymns having the same tunes as in the previous Hymnal, which was prepared in 1916, although in some cases new hymns have also been added as alternative choices. The words of 64 hymns from the previous Hymnal are used, but have been set to new or different tunes. Seven hymns have been restored from the Hymnal of 1892, with the same tunes. There are 201 new hymns of which a good many are reported to be generally well-known.

The arrangement of the Hymnal of 1940 has been changed, from the previous Hymnal and is in the following general sequence:

The Christian Year
Saints' Days and Holy Days
Thanksgiving and National Days
Morning and Evening
Sacraments and other Rites of the Church
Litanies
Hymns for Children Missions
General Hymns

The Indices have also been improved. The classification of General Hymns is as follows:

The Blessed Trinity
The Praise of God
Jesus Christ our Lord
The Holy Spirit
The Church as God's Gift
Holy Scripture, the Church's Gift
Personal Religion
Social Religion
The Church Militant
The Church Triumphant

The Church Hymnal Corporation announces the prices of the Hymnal of 1940 as follows:

Standard Musical Edition $1.20 per copy
Special Choir Edition—heavily reinforced $1.50 per copy
Large size Melody Edition 70c per copy
Small size Melody Edition 40c per copy

It is also announced that the Commission is planning the publication later of a Handbook containing brief biographical sketches of the authors and composers whose hymns appear in the Hymnal of 1940, together with a discussion of the history and usage of its contents. It is stated, however, that although this book is in preparation, its publication will have to be delayed until later in the year or the early part of next year.

The Joint Commission on the Revision of the Hymnal consists of Bishops James Craik Morris, Robert N. Spencer, Vedder Van Dyck, and Benjamin M. Washburn; Canon Winfred Douglas, the Rev. Drs. ## DISPATCHES FROM LONDON HEADQUARTERS OF ASSOCIATED PRESS

London headquarters of the Associated Press August 21 sent the following dispatch to American newspapers:

"Dr. William Barrow Pugh, chairman of the General Protestant Commission on United States Army and Navy Chaplains, arrived in London by plane from the north today on a tour of Allied fighting theaters.

"The plane carrying Dr. Pugh, who is completing at the request of President Roosevelt a mission begun by the late Bishop Adna Wright Leonard, also brought a number of Axis prisoners. Bishop Leonard was killed in an airplane crash in Iceland May 3.

"Wearing a trench coat and felt hat, the rugged Dr. Pugh began making enthusiastic remarks about the work of chaplains almost before he had stepped out of the plane.

"He came from Iceland and Greenland, where he said the chaplains are carrying on cheerfully despite difficult conditions. One in Iceland holds fourteen services each Sunday, he said, and another in Greeland has an 800-mile circuit.

"He expects to go from England to North Africa, the Middle East, India, China and Central Africa and thence to headquarters of the South Atlantic Fleet.

" 'What I've already seen convinces me we will hardly know this world when the war is over,' he said. 'It's all going to be just about like one big country. In religion every one is working together. Barriers of creed are falling everywhere.' "

He has been assigned to duty at a mid-western Naval air station.

Chaplain Bentley attended Yale University, where he was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Arts in 1933. His theological studies were made at Virginia Theological Seminary.

R., former rector of the Church of the Holy Apostles (Episcopal), 1244 North Union, St. Louis, Mo., successfully completed a two month's period of indoctrination at the Naval Training School (Chaplains), College of William and Mary, here, and was graduated August 15.

THE SUPPLY LINE OF FAITH

Although more Scriptures were issued to the personnel of the United States Armed Forces and Merchant Marine last year by the American Bible Society, in concluding the third year of its War Emergency program than the total of the previous two years, the volume of requests received from Chaplains and others shot up so fast that manufacturing could not keep pace.

The Society distributed 35,114 Bibles; 1,135,655 New Testaments; and 379,998 portions of the Bible, a total of 1,550,767 volumes, as compared with the total 1,125,129 for the first two years of its work for the armed forces.

In addition there have been sold to churches and other organizations 912,361 Service Testaments. The Testament series includes book specially stamped for Army Air Force, Navy Air Force, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, WACS, WAVES, and Merchant Marine.

There is abundant testimony to the interest of service men and women in the Scriptures and to the importance of the Society's efforts to supply them.

Scriptures for Prisoners of war and Refugees

The Bible Society has continued this service steadily from Geneva, Switzerland and New York with most grateful letters from many prisoners. The principal changes during the year have been due to the increased number of prisoners of war in the United States and the restriction on transportation facilities which caused the shipping of Scriptures by freight through the War Work of the Y. M. C. A. to Geneva, rather than the mailing of them direct from New York to Geneva. Under this head are also included supplies of Japanese Scriptures for Japanese in relocation centers. Gratitude for these has been most warmly expressed. "I have been instructed to extend, in behalf of our members, our sincere appreciation to the American Bible Society for their generosity, expressed in a manner as no other organization could render. We shall long remember your kindness, and try to do our best for the cause of our Master," wrote a Japanese pastor from the Heart Mountain relocation center in Wyoming.

Thirty-four languages were required last year to fill the needs for prisoners of war and refugees with the distribution of Russian Scriptures heading the list. French prisoners received the second largest number, with English third. The expenditures for Scriptures to prisoners of war and refugees in 1942-1943 was $24,309.

Scriptures for Civilians in Distressed Areas

With the entry of the United States into the war, it became no longer possible to assist in Scripture publication within Axis dominated areas by remittance, but it is possible to print Bibles and Testaments in Switzerland and send them into other countries. As a complete lack of Italian Bibles existed, these, with Testaments and French Bibles and Testaments, were being printed in June. Other editions anticipated because of shortages are Polish and Czech Bibles and Testaments, Hungarian Bibles, French Testaments, and Serbo Croatian Bibles and Testaments.

To Madagascar, $3,000 was forwarded for printing Testaments locally by the agent of the British and Foreign Bible Society to meet a complete lack of supply. There was also sent to the British Society in London a $5,000 folding machine and feeder to replace the one destroyed when their bindery was bombed. The Kijita New Testament for use in Tanganyika, Africa, was published for the British Society; this is the first Testament in that language.

STONES FROM RUINS OF ANCIENT CHURCH OF LONDON ARRIVE AT WASHINGTON CATHEDRAL

Stones from the ruins of All Hallows Barkingside-by-the-Tower—an ancient church of London—which withstood the great fire of 1666, but could not stand up to the Nazi bombs of 1940, arrived at Washington Cathedral recently.

Mr. Walter B. Clarkson, Business Manager of the Cathedral, accepted them and stated that they would be kept and placed in the building fabric or a wall when any major additions were made in the future.

All Hallows Church became famous in literature when Samuel Pepys made the following entry in his diary on September 5, 1666, at the time of the great London fire. "About 2 in the morning," he wrote, "my wife calls me up, and tells me of new cryes of fire, it being come to Barking Church, which is at the bottom of our lane (Sethinge Lane)."

Later he tells of the fire's effect on the church and of climbing up its tower after making sure that his own home nearby had miraculously been saved: " . . . it having only burned the dyall of Barking Church, and part of the porch and there quenched. I up to the top of Barking steeple, and there saw the saddest sight of desolation that I ever saw; everywhere great fires, oylecellars, and brimstone, and other things burning."

This was not the original church tower ,or steeple, but one that had been built in 1659 to replace the original.

The church got its name from the ancient convent of Barking in Essex, to which it once belonged. Its nearness to the Tower of London gave it importance as the scene of many important civic ceremonies and accounts for part of the name.

William Penn was baptized there in 1644 and much later a memorial tablet was erected in the church by American friends.

Richard III added a college of priests and fairly early in its history it became associated with All Hallows' Church which Richard I had founded.

Parts of it were rebuilt in the 12th century after the Conquest, and additions were made in the 15th century after the War of the Roses. The pulpit was erected in 1638. More recently All Hallows was the Guild Church of Toc H.

The church was blitzed in 1940. Last year when P. B. "Tubby" Clayton, its Vicar and now chaplain on a British oil tanker, was at Washington Cathedral to preach, a plan was instigated to have some of the historic stones included in Washington Cathedral fabric. The arrival of the stones today is the fulfillment of Chaplain Clayton's plan, and they become a part of England that will forever be American.

LETTER FROM BISHOP GELSTHORPE IN JUBA TO THE PRESIDING BISHOP— 6 6 6

From Juba, on the far upper reaches of the Nile, near the southern border of the Sudan, Rt. Rev. A. M. Gelsthorpe, assistant bishop of Egypt and the Sudan, has written to the Presiding Bishop a letter in appreciation of aid given by American Churchmen to British Missions.

Effects of the war are felt throughout the 2,000-mile length of the diocese of Cairo and Khartoum to the borders of Uganda, in the presence of thousands of men and women in uniform in the north, in the development of air traffic and, most searching of all as far as the Church's mission is concerned, the enlistment of colored troops thus taken out of their old environment into a wholly new existence.

The first two Sudenese, whose ordination to the diaconate more than a year ago was noted in the American Church press, have been advanced to the priesthood, after forty years of small and slow beginnings. They are from different tribes. Other candidates are in preparation. Even in the midst of the war, Bishop Gelsthorpe is trying to establish a divinity school this year and lists the provision of a permanent staff and buildings as the first need of the diocese.

"Our next urgent need," Bishop Gelsthorpe continues, "is for the development of medical work at medical centers already existing. Again it is staff and buildings which are needed. As soon as the war finishes there is reason to believe that we shall be able to provide the personnel."

Work among lepers Bishop Gelsthorpe hopes may soon be expanded from the experimental scale of past years into something more nearly commensurate with the need.

"Our main purposes have been to segregate infectious lepers in their own tribal areas, persuade the chiefs to realize their responsibility for the care of these lepers, provide treatment for non-infectious lepers, and to develop research into the whole problem of treatment of the disease. The experiment has been so successful that we feel we are bound now to launch out on a bigger scheme over a wider area. I believe the Sudan Government will help with finance but it is important to be able to fulfil our side of the responsibilities.

"Another development which is of great importance for which we ought to make provision as soon as possible, is the development of literature. As soon as the war ends we ought to be able to buy up some of the printing machines which are being used in the campaign at present in progress in this part of Africa. We have at present missionaries devoting much of their time to the translation of the Scriptures in the various languages. The development of our schools is making an increasing demand for suitable text books in the various vernaculars.

"The native church itself is beginning to undertake a certain amount of responsibility for finance, but at the present time little more can rightly be expected than for the provision of salaries for all native workers."

The Rev. William D. Pollock, since 1941 rector of St. John's Church, Glasgow, Christ Church, Buena Vista, and Grace Church near Buchanan, and previously in Nelson Parish, who volunteered in June as a Naval Chaplain, has been assigned to transport duty in the Pacific Area. His present address is: U. S. A. T. "Pennant," care Postmaster, Ft. Mason, California. Mrs. Pollock, with the children, is residing at Greeley, Colorado.

Miss Mansfield to Live at Amherst

Her many friends in Southwestern Virginia will be glad to learn that Miss Mabel R. Mansfield, who has been one of the most beloved missionaries in the diocese and who retired on May 1, 1943, after a service of eighteen years among us, is making her home at Amherst, Virginia.

Miss Mansfield, who came to us from the North, was first in charge of Grace House-on-the-Mountain, near St. Paul in Wise County. Since December, 1930, she has been director of the industrial work in the diocese ("the Handicraft Guild") and her activities in that connection have been notably successful and helpful to a number of missions. It is most gratifying that we will continue to have her in the diocesan family.

The Bishop Has a Grandson

Perhaps the outstanding event in the diocese in the month of August was the birth of a grandson to the Bishop and Mrs. Phillips—or maybe it should be noted as the birth of a son to Major and Mrs. G. Simms McDowell, II. The newcomer, G. Simms McDowell, III, was born in Roanoke on Saturday, August 14, and is the first gentleman in the Phillips family in two generations. He has not yet decided whether he will enter the ministry or the army His father, the Major, is at present stationed in the Hawaiian Islands.

NEWS FROM DIOCESE OF SPRINGFIELD

Trinity Parish in Lincoln will sponsor a Community Flower Show in Trinity House (the parish house) on Thursday, September 9. This will be the second annual show under auspices of the church. Last year there were more than 200 entries.

Bishop White who is much interested in the growing of flowers and who is himself an experienced gardener has been named honorary chairman of the show. The Rev. Arthur L. Bice is rector of Trinity. On the last three Sundays in August Father Bice is celebrant and preacher at the High Mass at the Pro-Cathedral in Springfield.

The Rev. Carroll E. Simcox at the University Chapel, Champaign, reports increased activities at the chapel during the summer. Although many of the regular students are on vacation, there are hundreds of service men studying on the campus. Father Simcox reports that the Sunday Masses are well attended and that there is a "generous sprinkling" of soldiers and sailors in the congregations.

PROMINENT AMERICANS

out regular religious instruction. Christian character is absolutely indispensable to a free democratic society. We are winning this war, but in winning it we can easily lose our freedom if our children and youth continue to live in a nation where the very basic truths of morality and religion are no longer taught to all, but to only one-half. In my judgment, it is most important that all children and young people, as well as adults, add to the traditional public school three R's a fourth "R," namely, Religion.

As in the days of the founding of these two great countries, the home must again become the spiritual cradle of the nation. In these homes God and Christ must be living realities; family worship must be practised daily; sons and daughters must be taught out of the Bible; prayer must become a powerful force in developing Christian personality; and regular attendance at church and Sunday school on the part of all must be the program of every American family.

A nation cannot be half slave and half free, neither can a nation be half religious and half irreligious and continue as a great nation. If these United States and our sister nation Canada are to have leading parts in the post-war world, all citizens, young as well as old, must themselves be living examples of the Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of Man.

In the absence of our President, Lt. Comdr. Harold E. Stassen, and as Acting President of The International Council of Religious Education, an interdenominational organization working in the field of Christian education, I call upon all Americans to observe fittingly September 26 to October 3 as Religious Education Week. I urge that throughout the United States and Canada all ministers preach appropriate sermons; churches in thousands of our communities plan programs and activities of a community-wide nature around the general theme, "Community Foundations"; and citizens everywhere give serious thought to immediate ways of bringing Christian teaching to the millions of children and youth now without it through no fault of their own.

DOES GOD SPEAK

St. John became for all time the symbol of Christian love. St. Peter, in spite of repeated failures, received strength and courage that enabled him to go into the streets of Jerusalem where death awaited him on every corner, to tell the Jews that they had crucified Him whom "God hath made both Lord and Christ." It is in friendship and fellowship that great plans and high and holy purposes are born. It is true that great religious leaders have often been lonely figures, finding their source of strength in solitude, but it is equally true that their vision has not become effective until it has been caught by a group. It is because of this that we have a Church, in which God the Holy Spirit dwells.

Thou whose sound apostles heard,
Thou whose power their spirit stirred
Giving them Thy living Word;
Hear us, Holy Spirit.

Thou Whose grace the Church doth fill,
Showing her God's perfect will,
Making Jesus present still;
Hear us, Holy Spirit.

The Question Box

How do you explain the spiritual presence of Our Lord in the Holy Eucharist?

We do not explain it. We accept His Presence without trying to explain how. The Roman Church goes further in that it not only accepts His Presence, but attempts to explain it by the teaching of Transubstantiation.

My Rector brought the Holy Communion to me during my recent illness, and to my surprise he brought only the consecrated Bread. Why?

He probably brought only the consecrated Bread because of the danger of spilling the consecrated Wine.

After all, Christ is present in the consecrated Bread.

Is our Church service that of Early Church, or is there a variation?

A main source of the Episcopal Church service is the Liturgy of St. John, known as the Ephesine Liturgy. The Early Gallican and British Liturgies were derived from this source, because the Church was founded in Gaul and Britain by missionaries of the Apostolic age sent from Ephesus to Gaul (France), Spain, and Britain.

The Primitive Liturgies of the Church, in addition to the Liturgy of St. John of Ephesus, were:

The Liturgy of St. Mark, of Alexandria, from which the present Liturgy of the Egyptian Church is derived. The Liturgy of St. Peter which was the origin of the Roman Liturgy.

The Liturgy of St. James, which was used at Jerusalem, and from which the present Liturgy of the Greek Orthodox Church was derived.

The Church at Work in War Industry Communities, is the title of a handbook drawn up by the National Council Committee on Work in War Industry Areas, in cooperation with the other Church bodies composing the Christian Commission for Camp and Defense Communities.

Among the points emphasized are: inter-church cooperation; maintaining a spirit of friendliness; adapting Church programs to the needs of the war industry community; emphasizing family life and children's activities; cooperating with community and government agencies; and developing a "master plan."

What became of the Twelve Apostles?

Simon Peter, or Cephas, and Andrew, his brother, were sons of Jonah, and spent the early part of their lives in Bethsaida, afterwards at Capernaum. They were fishermen. According to tradition, Peter was missionary to the Jews, as far as Rome, where he was crucified head downward.

Andrew, according to tradition, preached in Scythia, Greece, and Asia Minor, and was crucified.

James, the Elder, and John the Beloved Disciple, were the Sons of Thunder, sons of Zebedee and Salome. Their home was in Bethsaida, and afterward Jerusalem. They also were fishermen. James preached in Jerusalem and Judea, and was beheaded by Herod A. D. 44 in Jerusalem.

John served the churches of Asia Minor, particularly the Church in Ephesus. He was banished to Patmos A. D. 95. According to tradition, he is the only Apostle to die a natural death.

James the Less, and Jude (or Thaddeus or Lebbaeus) were the sons of Alphaeus (Cleophas) and Mary. Their home was Galilee. James, Bishop of Jerusalem, was a missionary in Palestine and Egypt. Tradition is that he was crucified in Egypt, or thrown from a pinnacle in Jerusalem.

Jude, according to tradition, was a missionary to Assyria and Persia, being martyred in Persia.

Philip, of Bethsaida, missionary in Phrygia, is said to have died at Hierapolis.

Bartholomew, Nathaniel, of Cana of Galilee, according to tradition was flayed to death.

Matthew, Levi, of Capernaum, tax collector, or publican, is said to have died a martyr in Ethiopia.

Thomas, Didymus, of Galilee, is claimed by the Syrian Christians as the Apostle of Syria, and also in Persia and India. Tradition is that he was martyred by being shot by arrows while at prayer.

Simon the Canaanite, or the Zealot, was said to have been crucified.

Judas Iscariot, of Kerioth of Judea, was a suicide.

> Some people are troubled by the things in the Bible they can't understand. The things that trouble me are the things I can understand.—Mark Twain

What are the sources of the two conticles "Benedictus Es" ("Blessed art Thou, O Lord God of our Fathers") and the "Benedictite" ("O, All ye Works of the Lord")?

Both are from the Apocryha. They are found in The Song of the Three Holy Children, a supplemental book to the book of Daniel. This book deals with the experience of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego.

What are the names of the Books of the Apocryha?

There are 14 books. They are I Esdras, II Esdras, Tobit, Judith, The Rest of Esther, Wisdom, Ecclesiasticus, Baruch with the Epistle of Jeremiah, Song of the Three Holy Children, The Story of Susanna, The Idol Bel and the Dragon, The Prayer of Manasses, I Maccabees, and II Maccabees.

I see the letters I.H.S. frequently in Church. What do they mean?

They are the first letters of the Greek word for Jesus. Another explanation of them is that they are the initial letters of three Latin words: Iesus Hominum Salvator (Jesus, the Saviour of Mankind).

What is the Episcopal Church's stand on the method of baptism?

The Episcopal Church provides for baptism either by immersion or by pouring of water. Usually, baptism is by pouring, but if a candidate insisted on total immersion, baptism would be administered in that way.

After all, it is not the quantity of water that counts. The water is only the outward and visible sign, and a pledge of what takes place within.

I would like to subscribe to a weekly Church News Magazine. Please tell me whether any are available.

Yes, there are three weekly Church News Magazines, The Living Church, The Witness, and The Southern Churchman. And one semi-monthly News Magazine, The Churchman.

Consult your Rector as to details, and his recommendation.

Do you believe that persons who have never heard of Christ will be eternally damned?

No, but someone is responsible for their failure to hear of Christ.

Perhaps you, and I, by failing to give all we should toward the missionary work of the Church, are the ones responsible for their failure to hear of Christ.

How does the Episcopal Church handle the problem of financial support? Are the members assessed?

The Church is supported by purely voluntary offerings of the people.

HAVEN . . .

By J. W. KENNEDY

Physical healing was a very real part of Jesus' ministry, although according to Him it was not the most important part. The Gospels are full of stories about these healings. They were spectacular. As the stories were told 'round and about, the people crowded in upon Jesus to be healed—the blind, the halt, and the lame. All manner of physical distress was brought to Him for cure, and He did cure such ailments, all the way from a withered hand to raising from the dead. The disciples had this power also. When Jesus sent them forth He did so with the means for physical healing at their command. But Jesus could not give much of His short ministry to physical healing. He said He had not come for this but rather to seek and to save the lost, those who were in far worse condition because of some uncured spiritual affliction. Ever since then, however, the Christian religion has had a share in all kinds of healings. The miracles recorded as "restored by faith" at famous Lourdes or in some quiet obscure spot have always seemed possible when the right combination has been found. Many groups have banded together to practice the art of faith healing and they have worked many miracles. Faith is certainly the key to it all. Jesus demanded this in almost every instance. But strangely enough also in almost every instance the physical healing was all tied up with the forgiveness of sins. Apparently the sin blocked the cure and so long as the sin remained, the disease remained. Perhaps that is one reason why our prayers often avail us nothing. Some hate or resentment or selfishness or wrong harbored within adds more poison to the very system that is struggling so hard to throw off the already abnormal amount of existent physical poison. There is a curious interrelationship between physical, mental and spiritual conditions, and the one quite seriously affects the other. God is life and is always at work creating and growing, combating whatever attempts are made to destroy His life or slow it down below normal; and when life is being lived on a maximum basis of faith that God will care for His life in us as we obey His laws of bodily health, as well as mental and spiritual health, all will usually be well. But too many of those who would ask God for a miracle of healing have neglected certain areas of opportunity, and this neglect has aggravated the physical condition. When one is unrepentant, unforgiven, fearful, prideful, it is hard by one cry of "Lord, help me else I perish," or by one moment of real humility, to cast off the accumulated poison that interferes with God's life flow. His will for us is complete physical health and when His laws are obeyed that healthy condition will almost inevitably exist. But when emergency conditions of infection (inner and outer) or of accident occur we must marshall all of our life-sustaining forces against them. That is why we have hospitals, doctors, nurses, druggists, and a host of others giving their utmost to make the conditions for God's healing powers just right. The greatest asset we as the victims can have under the circumstances is faith that God is working through men as instruments to minister His mercies unto us. Therefore, when we pray to be well our prayer should be:

O God, Thou art my life and Thou dost care for every cell of me; use my life in whatever condition at whatever moment it may count for the greatest service in Thy kingdom; forgive me whatever is amiss and no matter what comes beyond my power to understand keep my faith strong, my patience undiminished, and my courage unfailing; to do Thy will is my chief desire; to obey Thy Laws is my one unalterable concern; O Father, keep thou near unto me and hold me in Thy loving arms through the difficulties of this hour and through all the hours of all the days to come; into Thy hands I give my life—Thy life—and wait upon Thee. Amen.

Almighty and everlasting God, who art always more ready to hear than we to pray, and art wont to give more than either we desire or deserve; Pour down upon us the abundance of thy mercy; forgiving us those things whereof our conscience is afraid, and giving us those good things which we are not worthy to ask, but through the merits and mediation of Jesus Christ, thy Son, our Lord. # A Wordless Book

By FREDERICK W. NEVE

YEARS AGO, in England, I came across a small booklet, entitled A Wordless Book, which I have revived, and have written my own interpretation of it. True to its name it has not a single word in it. It consists of only four pages and yet the whole of the Christian Gospel is contained in it.

The first page is black all over and symbolizes sin, for we are told in the Bible that God is Light, and in Him is no darkness at all, which shows that sin and God are exactly opposite because you cannot have Light and Darkness in the same place at the same time; when Light enters, darkness disappears. It is only light that can drive away darkness, and it is only God who can do away with sin. But how does God do away with sin? Well, we know that God so loved the world that He sent His Son into it to teach us about Himself, and to die upon the Cross that our sins might be forgiven.

And to see how sin is done away we turn over to the second page which is all red. What does this stand for? It stands for the Blood of Christ, and St. John says in his first Epistle, the Blood of Christ cleanseth us from all sin. This is one of the great truths of the Gospel, and it reminds us of the words of St. John the Baptist when he pointed his disciples to Jesus at the very beginning of our Lord's ministry, and said: "Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world." St. John was one of those who heard these words which led him to follow Jesus, and it was he who long after, in his first Epistle, wrote:—"The Blood of Jesus Christ, His Son, cleanseth us from all sin." There is no one else who has ever been able to save men from their sins, and it was by Christ shedding His precious Blood upon the Cross that He was able to do this. And when we take of the wine in the Holy Communion this great truth is brought home to us, for the minister says:—"The Blood of our Lord Jesus Christ, which was shed for thee, preserve thy body and soul unto everlasting life. Drink this in remembrance that Christ's Blood was shed for thee, and be thankful." Perhaps the most striking incident in connection with the Crucifixion was the faith of the Penitent Thief, who, in spite of the denial of Christ's claim to be the Messiah on the part of the Chief Priests and Rulers of the Jews, had the sublime faith to believe that He was indeed the true King. For amidst the taunts and insults of His enemies were heard the words of the Penitent Thief:—"Lord, remember me when Thou comest into Thy Kingdom," and the answer of Christ:—"Verily, I say unto thee, Today shalt thou be with me in Paradise." This man freely confessed that he was guilty of a crime or crimes, which made him deserve the punishment he was undergoing, which showed that he was repentant, and his faith in Christ and His power to save him, together with Christ's answer to his prayer, is the most outstanding proof we have that the Blood of Christ does indeed cleanse from all sin.

Then the third page of the booklet is all white, which signifies the cleansing effect of the Blood of Christ. David, in the 51st Psalm, said:—"Cleanse me with hyssop and I shall be clean, wash me and I shall be whiter than snow." But David did not know that the Son of God would have to come down to this earth and die upon the Cross before the Great Atonement could be made which would afford the full and complete cleansing from all sin and thus make the souls of men as white as snow.

THE FOURTH PAGE of the little Booklet is all gold. And this signifies that all those who have been cleansed from their sins by the Blood of Christ must shine for Him. For Christ not only said of Himself:—"I am the Light of the world," but He also said to His followers:—"Ye are the light of the world. * * * Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in Heaven." Since Christ has done so much for us, and His Atonement for our sins cost Him such terrible suffering and humiliation, we certainly ought to be willing to shine for Him. But we must remember that in order to do this we must seek to follow Him and imitate Him by setting a good example and going about doing good as He did. The nearer we keep to Him the more brightly we shall shine, for we shall be walking in the Light of His Presence, and His Light will not only shine upon us, but we shall reflect that light and men will see something in us which reminds them of Christ, and thus God will be glorified.

St. Paul, in his Epistle to the Romans, 1:16, says:—"I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ for it is the Power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth; to the Jew first and also to the Greek." St. Paul felt that the Gospel was for all men throughout time and space and that in it there was contained the Divine Power which could lift men from the lowest depths to the sublimest heights of experience. This little Book, therefore, by its different colors, suggests to the mind what the Gospel is intended to do, that is to lead men from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God. Its extreme simplicity and the use of attractive symbols commend it to the attention of everyone to whom it is presented, and the impression which it makes upon the mind is likely to last long in the memory, for the truths which it conveys have the power of God working with them. Christ Himself made use of symbols to make His Gospel known unto men, as in the parables of the Prodigal Son and the Good Samaritan. There is no telling how much good anyone might accomplish by the use of A Wordless Book in drawing the attention of others to its simple message.

Note: A Wordless Book with simple notes of interpretation can be obtained from Jarman's, Inc., Charlottesville, Va., for 5 cents.

The Day

O keep Thy promise, Lord,
According to Thy Word,
That they who will believe Shall mighty grace receive
To do what Thou didst do,
And greater wonders, too;
Then through Thy mighty power,
Shall come the noontide hour,
When shadows pass away,
And men shall see Thy day.

Rehabilitation of Disabled Soldiers and Sailors

From the Office of War Information

The readjustment and happiness of wounded soldiers and sailors with conspicuous physical disfigurements or disabilities or nervous manifestations will depend in large measure on the way their families and friends and the public at large behave toward them. This was stated today by the Office of War Information in a release which also summarized the rehabilitation and employment facilities provided for servicemen disabled in combat.

Thanks to modern therapy, many of the men suffering from even the severest wounds will be rehabilitated and enabled to lead lives of normal activity, engaging in industry, business or professions. But the most modern medical and psychiatric care, the finest surgery and appliances, expert rehabilitation, vocational training and employment opportunities are far from being all that is needed by the men who have suffered disfigurements and disabilities. Much of the work can be undone or will remain incomplete if the men's families and friends and the public at large fail to behave with restraint, intelligence and consideration. The OWI passes along a number of suggestions, made by the Surgeon General of the Army, concerning everyday behavior on the part of friends, family and acquaintance most calculated to lessen the inevitable difficulties of adjustment of disfigured and disabled veterans.

If a formerly able-bodied young man returns from combat with a disfigurement or other serious disability —whether deafness, blindness, a shattered jaw, an amputation or burns—he is almost certain to be emotionally disturbed. In other cases the wound he brings back may be mental.

In his disturbed state the man has his own idea of what a cripple is — an idea which all too often approaches a popular conception arising from ignorance.

A soldier who finds himself without legs, for example, may well think of himself in the situation of the legless beggar he used to see pushing himself along on a little cart on the crowded sidewalks downtown—and he may think that is how others think of him, too. He does not yet know of the vital and interesting work being done—and done perfectly—by men with amputations in industry and in offices. A greater proportion of employed handicapped persons are in professional and managerial jobs in this country than in any other kind of employment.

A man who is newly blinded may associate blindness with a limited, futile, kind of existence—selling shoelaces or chewing gum in a subway station. He has never had occasion to know about the hundreds of blind persons who are doing invaluable work in many kinds of war industries—sorting delicate precision instruments, inspecting parts by touch, etc.

It is only natural that maimed young men should think bitter thoughts, lose their self-confidence. It is the exceptional man who does not.

And yet, in case after case, maimed young men have been freed from their black thoughts and bitterness, and have had their self-confidence restored, by the professional, expert—and difficult — rehabilitation treatment they have received, as soon as possible after injury, in Army and Navy hospitals and in the hospitals of the Veterans' Administration. Disabled merchant seamen are cared for in U. S. Public Health Service Marine Hospitals.

In all these institutions, the restoration of self-confidence, as an aid in the restoration of physical health, is the immediate aim of doctors, nurses, and other personnel.

Men with amputations are entertained by professional solo dancers — who after going through their strenuous routine display their artificial limbs. Newly blinded men, under the charge of blind members of the hospital staff, are given messages to deliver in various parts of the building and encouraged to find their way around unaided. Men made totally deaf (who often suffer as great an emotional shock as those who are blinded) are introduced to vivacious and charming young women members of the staff. They converse—the young women writing their questions or remarks on slips of paper and the men talking. After they have had a good time playing cards or other games, the young women—who have followed the men's conversation with complete normality — casually reveal the fact that they, too, are totally deaf.

These are only a few examples of the great amount of confidence-restoring work being done in hospitals.

Details of accomplishments in the field of physical rehabilitation—the next step—are becoming increasingly familiar to American readers of newspapers and magazines. Injured muscles are brought back into play, new or unused muscles are trained. When necessary, efficient surgical appliances are carefully fitted to replace amputated hands, feet or limbs. A typical case is that of a 22-year-old Second Lieutenant, in a mood of cynical despair following the loss of a hand in African fighting. Today, fitted with an artificial hand and wearing the Distinguished Service Cross, he has been promoted to Captain and is Assistant to the Commanding Officer in Charge of Plans and Training at a camp in a southern state.

Nervous disabilities resulting from combat experience are treated with equal care. In some cases prolonged pyschiatric treatment is necessary; occupational therapy cures others rapidly. One infantryman, for example, was brought to an evacuation hospital in the Solomons suffering from fear, trembling and palpitations as a result of seeing the man next to him blown to pieces during an advance. The wise medical officer in charge asked him experimentally whether he would be willing to help out the hospital in an emergency by acting as litter-bearer. He said he would—and in caring for others soon lost his own symptons and was able to return to duty. In that hospital, at least, a large proportion of those men with nervous disabilities suffered in combat who have been able to assume responsible duties have needed little if any other rehabilitation. Men who develop nervous disabilities before combat experience are usually either transferred to another branch of the service or honorably discharged.

When he has recovered his physical or psychic health and is discharged from the Army or Navy hospital, the serviceman in need of vocational training is eligible to receive it from the Veterans' Administration if he has suffered a ten percent or greater disability, resulting in a vocational handicap, while in service. If not, the same training is open to him through the Vocational Rehabilitation Division of the United States Office of Education, where, also at government expense, he will be taught the skills of a job. In every case, representatives of the Red Cross and other agencies are on hand in the hospitals to advise the men concerning their rights to pensions, training and employment and to give them any further guidance they may want.

Vocational training in the Veterans' Administration and other institutions is directed toward preparing the wounded man not only to fill a job in which his wound will not be a handicap, but to do important work which he will enjoy and for which he is temperamentally suited. In all cases, even those capable only of self-employment at home, the goal is useful, functional, independent living—not dependent, permanent residence in hospitals.

After vocational training comes employment, and here many agencies are working for the wounded serviceman.

The Veterans' Administration secures jobs for many of the men it has trained. Industry, which has gained considerable experience in the employment of handicapped workers during the current manpower shortage, is eager to hire returned servicemen because of their morale-raising effect on their fellow-workers.

The Selective Service law contains provisions regarding the return of a discharged serviceman to his old job, and the Re-employment Division of Selective Service writes each discharged serviceman a letter explaining his rights and advising him on procedure. Few employers have thus far refused to take men back. Most of them are cooperative. In a case reported in a recent issue of Yank, the Army weekly, a private who had been an operator in a motion-picture theater before his induction was given a Certificate of Disability discharge. When his former employer was unwilling to take him back on the ground that his new operator was satisfactory and he didn't want to make a change, the ex-soldier reported the matter to the re-employment representative on his Draft Board, who in turn reported to Selective Service National Headquarters. The employer soon received a letter calling attention to the soldier's re-employment rights and asking if he was aware of his obligation under the law and the machinery that could and would be invoked to enforce it. The ex-private was back on his job within a week.

The Army, the Navy, the Civil Service Commission, the United States Employment Service (USES), the Office of Education, and the Red Cross have all laid plans well in advance for insuring the employment of discharged servicemen, including the disabled. Many men want not their old jobs but better jobs, and often they are trained so that they get them.

Great care is taken to see that men are properly placed. One sailor, blown off the deck of a battleship and badly burned, was left with a nervous disability after his wounds had healed. He was unable to control the shaking of his hands. When he returned home the USES office got him several jobs in succession, but he couldn't overcome his nervousness. The Veterans' Employment Representative, determined to find the right job for him, took him to a small machine shop, where he was given a job operating a punch and shear machine located in a secluded corner. Here he was able to adjust himself more readily to work and his nervousness diminished; today he is a valued employee, and the twitching of his hands is scarcely perceptible.

In an increasing number of cases the Army and the Navy do not discharge disabled men, but employ them in limited service after their physical rehabilitation, training them if necessary. A disabled Air Forces pilot, for example, disqualified as a result of wounds, often gets a great psychological lift if he finds himself able to fill another kind of job in the Air Forces. Often, too, technical skills acquired in the Army or Navy have fitted disabled servicemen to take jobs after discharge. Many of the ex-servicemen who have been taken out of the "big game" before it is finished want to stay as close to the war as possible, and increasingly they are being given the opportunity to do so.

In summary, Americans can rest assured that their wounded soldiers and sailors are being given the most modern medical and psychiatric care, the finest surgery and appliances, expert rehabilitation, vocational training and finally employment opportunities that confirm their hard-won feelings of independence. All these things are being provided, and provided by persons and organizations expert in their field, professionally equipped to further the welfare of wounded ex-servicemen.

But the American people—the families, friends and acquaintances of the disabled and disfigured men, and the public at large—have a responsibility in the matter too. It is up to them to further the men's progress during rehabilitation by considerate and cooperative behavior. Men who are working hard to acquire new self-confidence, or who have acquired it, must not be jolted out of it by thoughtless, uncontrolled manifestations of pity or horror or distaste or false cheeriness or too-eager curiosity or other emotionalism.

For the purpose of increasing public awareness of some of the problems faced by disabled and disfigured men in their search for rehabilitation and normal living, and for the purpose of indicating to what extent public cooperation can be of benefit, the Surgeon General of the Army has set forth a series of guide-posts not only for the families and friends of such men, but for all who may come in contact with them. The suggestions are intended especially for the period of rehabilitation in hospitals or vocational training centers, but they also hold good for later, after the wounded men's return to civilian life.

It is emphasized that they apply to all types of disability cases where the patient is emotionally disturbed: cases of disfigurement, such as burns or amputations; cases of blindness or deafness; and psychiatric cases, where the patient suffers from mental shock.

Already some of the men in Army and Navy hospitals, especially those suffering from psychic disturbances—are expressing unwillingness to return to their homes because they dread the well-meant but emotionally trying welcome they know they would receive.

Self-discipline and restraint will have to be practiced by many persons who have never before been in the presence of disfigured or crippled men—especially by members of a disfigured man's family, and by his friends, when seeing him for the first time since his injury. This effort must be made if the men are not to receive set-backs in their progress.

1. TREAT THE MAIMED PERSON AS THE NORMAL PERSON HE ALWAYS HAS BEEN AND CONTINUES TO BE.

The loss of an arm or a jaw or an ear or a leg may change the appearance of a man. But personality and character are not necessarily changed. It is true that they are almost certain to be affected superficially and temporarily, until self-confidence is restored; but after that point a disabled man's personality may even grow, as the result of his own knowledge of the handicap which he has overcome and the respect of others. John, who has lost his jaw, is still everything his friends

Christian Education

School days are here. The great trek "back to school" is in progress. We are interested in this movement. Some unusual things are happening to our educational system, both public and private. While perhaps these things have not been so radical as some of the changes that have taken place in Great Britain, nevertheless they are important enough to note.

In the first place the Army and Navy are for all practical purposes operating a great many of our higher institutions of learning. Due to the emergency the courses they offer are severely streamlined. The theme that Bishop Longworth suggested for a real Christian program of education, should have as its goal,—"to equip them to be evangelists to their contemporaries." He cited the difficulties facing the Church today due to war conditions, in holding the attention of youth. Some of these were the extra curricular activities associated with the war, in which youth is engaged today. But he warns, to quote, "It is quite futile and rather unfair for us simply to put the blame on the young people themselves, and call them a "pleasure loving generation". We were all pleasure lovers at that age (unless we were prigs!) and we would have given a lot to have the opportunities that they have now. Nor does it help merely to complain of the difficulties created by modern conditions, and do little or nothing to counteract them. Difficulties constitute a challenge, in this as in other things, a challenge to adapt our methods and increase our efforts, to teach our young people to know and love and serve God through Jesus Christ." He goes on to suggest that we have more services in which the theme of worship is built around the spirit of youth. Another suggestion he offers is that we examine our teaching methods. Young people have inquiring and sometimes intolerant minds. We must not balk at their questions nor be afraid to answer them boldly, however foolish we may feel them to be. All of which is sound advice for Rectors and Directors of Religious Education.

As so often in the secular world we in this country have placed the emphasis upon mass education, so too it has happened in the Church school. What we need is a quality of religious instruction that will bear fruit in such a way true evangelists may be developed. This is all important if the Church is to make any impression in the Post-War World.

J. B. Priestly in an article in the New York Times Magazine for this week-end writes:

"I have just written a play for our Army which the Army Bureau of Current Affairs will present to our troops at home. It is called 'Desert Highway' and the first and third acts show six soldiers stranded in the Syrian desert, where we must assume a campaign is being fought. The second act shows six similar men in the same place about the year 703 B. C., the time of the Assyrian Empire and of Isaiah and Micah. The same theme runs through both times, the idea of the one indivisible God of Righteousness who alone must be worshipped. It is His Kingdom we must establish here on earth (an awkward fact our churches have tended to ignore, to their undoing), and it is this idea that the power systems want to root out of the world, which probably explains their deliberate persecution and extermination of the Jews.

"And it is for this idea which is at the root of democracy giving our free personal relations a religious basis—that we are fighting. No wonder, then, that we have strengthened and purified ourselves even in the act of making war, for we have a great common purpose. That purpose is not simply the successful prosecution of this war, but the creation on earth of the Kingdom of God."

May such a spirit as that manifested by Mr. Priestly be made evident in all our Church School programs during this coming year. For Christian education is as necessary as secular education if we are going to learn the art of living together!

Well Informed

The Bishop of New York has expressed the fear that the deputies to General Convention, (clerical and lay) will not be well informed on the questions raised by the Commission on Approaches to Unity.

It has been our observation that the Church Press in its entirety has given a prominent place to both the minority and majority reports of the Commission. In addition the deputies are being circularized by both groups. We called attention last week to the statement sent out over the signature of several prominent laymen from all parts of the country, advocating the adoption of the majoritities report. Last week we received a similar letter signed by a group of equally prominent laymen, and enclosing a part of the Bishop of New York's Convention address, pleading for a rejection of the Commission's report. We cannot see how one can feel that the deputies will not be well informed on both sides of the question by the time Convention convenes in Cleveland. We feel that the General Convention may be trusted to act wisely as a well informed body.

Practicing Fellowship

A few weeks ago we wrote a brief editorial endorsing the suggestion made by our contemporary "The Chronicle," that on Sunday the 19th of September, on Sunday the 26th, an exchange of pulpits be made by Presbyterians and Episcopalians. We are very much in sympathy with this movement. In the South it may be difficult to find enough churches of the Presbyterian Church (North) to work this scheme with,

REHABILITATION OF DISABLED SOLDIERS

have always known him to be. His disfigurement does not make him into a different person, though it may well result in his growing to be a bigger one.

If you are disturbed by the disfigurement, discipline yourself so that your disturbance is not apparent. Do not let horror or sorrow appear on your face or in your voice or manner. This may not be easy, and you may not succeed entirely. But you will come closer to succeeding if you think of the feelings of the man you are visiting instead of your own. It is up to you to make him realize—without talking about it—that you feel about him exactly as always, and that his disfigurement is unimportant compared with your affection or friendship. The only difference could be an even increased respect for him.

There is much to be gained from contact with a person who has suffered a handicap and overcome it. Such a person often gains extraordinary largeness of character from his fight and his success; and those around him, in turn, gain from his example.

Treating disabled men as normal people is particularly important in cases of mental disability. Often, in cases of this kind, the average person retains ancient prejudices, and approaches a patient either with distaste or as though he were a child or a fool. It should be kept in mind that vast strides have been made in recent years in the treatment and rehabilitation of the mentally and nervously afflicted. They are simply ill —and their illnesses are usually curable.

It should be emphasized also that excessive praise of a disabled man because of his disability is not helpful. A blinded hero is certainly entitled to much praise for his devotion and sacrifice; but sentimental lionizing is far from having the permanent value of rehabilitation, training in Braille, a job, and independence.

2. DON'T ASK QUESTIONS OR GIVE ADVICE.

The man who has been disabled or disfigured may want to talk about himself or he may not. Respect his wishes. Do not mention the disfigurement unless he does.

If he does not want to talk about himself, talk about things he is interested in, or about objects in the room, or hobbies, or details of common interest. Don't talk about the war or about subjects related to his injury. Don't pry or hint.

If he is eager to talk about himself, listen and try to understand what he wants to express. If he asks you questions about himself — if he asks for your opinions concerning the adequacy of the treatment he is receiving, or his chances for recovery, or his prospects of getting a job—answer them as best you can, but don't become involved. Remember that your opinions on such matters are probably worth nothing. It is not your opinions, but those of the experts who are caring for him, that count. Your responsibility is to listen without doing harm. The proffering of opinions and advice without any knowledge to back them up CAN do harm.

The best answer to give a wounded man who asks you "Am I going to be good for anything?" is "If you WANT to be good for something, determination helps." If you are related to a wounded or disfigured man, make it your business to know about the rehabilitation and accomplishments of persons as badly handicapped as he is, or more so, and be able to tell him about them —not in a preachy way, but factually. Let him see that you know about them and that you assume he will take full advantage of his opportunities.

In the special cases of disabled men who cannot talk, whether because of mental injury or because of physical injury of jaw or throat, it is up to you to talk to them—naturally, and phrasing your conversation so that it is clear you do not expect a reply. Try to be guided by the patient's reactions. If, due to shock or physical immobility, he shows no reaction, be casual and undisturbed. Unknown to you, he may be encouraged and reassured by your words.

3. BE CASUAL AND REALISTIC—NOT OVER-CHEERY.

The man you are visiting may feel depressed. It is his right to feel so. It is an offense to his dignity and his common sense to go into a routine of transparent "cheeriness." The express intent of cheering up is seldom convincing or effective.

Nor is it usually convincing or beneficial to try to minimize the crippling effect of maiming. By facing the reality of a man's disability yourself, you can help him face it.

Personal anxieties and problems of all kinds lose their capacity to frighten if they are brought out into the open, squarely faced and talked about. A disfigured man who finds his friends acting naturally and casually about his disfigurement will more easily avoid being the kind of person who goes through life shrinking if a child asks, "what's the matter with that man?"

If a person has one leg, it is better to admit that fact and not try to conceal it. If one is deaf, the hearing aid should be worn openly, not treated as an embarrassing detail. A hearing aid or an artificial leg is just that and nothing more. The only difference it makes is that one hears or walks better with it than without it.

4. DON'T WAIT ON THE INJURED MAN TOO MUCH.

Even though a disabled soldier or sailor be surrounded with sympathy, waited on hand and foot by nurses and given countless attentions, he may still despair. He may still view himself as a martyr—an attitude which brings little happiness to him and no benefit to anybody else. If his faith in his ability to do things is restored the rest of the treatment is easy.

One way to help him toward this is to repress your natural desire to help him at every turn. Don't keep offering to do things. The blind men who are given jobs carrying messages in Army and Navy hospitals are constantly being stopped by well-meaning visitors who want to help them get about. Such interference, of course, destroys some of the effectiveness of the treatment, as the men are learning to walk and find their way without assistance, and are overcoming their fear and helplessness. Even if a man eats clumsily, or holds a telephone with difficulty, or has to make an effort to get something for himself in another part of the room, let him do these things. Within reason, of course.

If there is something the patient can do for you, let him do it. Helping others is an important part of rehabilitation. In the hospitals blind men who have already learned to get about out of doors alone teach others to do the same. The families of men who have returned to their homes can greatly help them by letting it be seen that they expect self-reliance and co-operation, and by not being pessimistic or over-solicitous.

"Why a Church?"

By THE RIGHT REVEREND WILLIAM BERTRAND STEVENS

Bishop of Los Angeles

That Jesus founded a Church is enough of an answer for some of us to the question of why a Church. But there are some other helpful approaches to the Church idea, suggested by the life of St. John Baptist who promised the coming of one greater than he and yet was given the great privilege of baptizing that Greater One when He came. "And John preached saying: there cometh one mightier than I after me the latchet of whose shoes I am not worthy to unloose." "And it came to pass in those days that Jesus came from Nazareth of Galilee and was baptized of John in Jordan."

Why did John Baptist seem to belittle his own mission? He was a strong preacher on his own account. He was popular and although he did not perform miracles his sermons made a profound impression on the nation. A king consulted him and feared him. When the Pharisees were opposing Jesus, they were afraid they would be stoned if they said that John's baptism was only a human invention to fool the people.

But in the face of all this popularity John forgot himself completely and announced the coming of a greater one. And this was at a time when men were wondering if he were not the Messiah. He silenced their musings and effaced himself.

It is never the strong man who cannot give up being the center of things. It is the man eaten up with self-love, blinded by egotism, oblivious to the ability and rights of his fellowmen. John knew himself and his own ability but in the presence of the might of Jesus he felt himself unworthy to bend to the dust and unbind the laces of His shoes. John was an ascetic. He knew that to attain the holiness he desired it was necessary for him to withdraw to the desert. It was his way of escape, the cutting off of the hand or foot, the plucking out of the eye. Our Lord recommends such mutilation, figuratively, of course, on those whom life's gifts betray. Some men are so conscious of traitors within their breast that they must revolt if the enemy becomes too powerful. But John, although he seems to have found it necessary, sees that it is not the highest way. This rugged saint had need to be baptized of Him who came to found a fellowship. He taught that his work was only superficial, a baptism of water to touch the surface of men's lives, but the greater One would baptize with the Holy Ghost, piercing the very depths of human nature. That is why and how he so completely humbled himself.

We cannot achieve our best possibilities by ourselves. We need fellowship and companionship. It is possible to worship God on a mountain top but the final testimony of those who seek salvation in solitude is that it fails. Whatever they call it they find they must have a church which, like friends, becomes for them "a sheltering tree."

Why did Jesus accept baptism from an inferior? The answer is simple. He humbled Himself even to the death on the cross. It was not simply as an example. It was part of the whole scheme of human life, and that He should have thus been baptized is not comparable to the great facts that He should have taken human form at all, that He should have suffered ignominious death at the hands of sinful men. It was a part of His plan of life—human form, human temptation, human suffering, human worship in the temple, and here conformity to the human symbol of regeneration.

This suggests the important truth that we must not reject the Church because we feel that we do not need it. That kind of priggishness is rare but when it happens it is a complete denial of the spirit of Jesus. We cannot neglect the Church of God because, for example, there is someone in it we do not like or someone who seems to be hypocritical or someone whose expression of religion differs from ours. The day has passed when people can dare to be snobbish about the fellowship of religion and there is need of a re-emphasis of the truth that God hath made of one blood all nations of men to dwell on the face of the whole earth.

One Holy Church, one army strong
One steadfast high intent,
One working band, one harvest song
One King omnipotent.
(S. Johnson)

Why, if Jesus was sinless, should He wish to be baptized? As our Lord adapted Himself to all His human surroundings and limitations, so did He consistently refuse freedom from the consequences of sin. He was present at feasts in which national confessions led up to sacrifice and the sacrificial blood was sprinkled to make atonement for the Children of Israel because of their sins. When He tasted death itself He carried out the same stern rule to which at His baptism He consciously submitted. He bowed His head to the humiliating consequences of sin. When all others were making confession of sin He felt only the propriety, the fitness of fulfilling all righteousness. It was an instinct to Him just as the expression of beauty is an instinct to the artist.

Occasionally someone says "I do not need the Church. I am not a miserable sinner." Two things should be said. First, no one, if he is honest with himself, can say that he does not need the strengthening power of the Christian Church. Even when he can say that he is free from the grosser forms of sin he cannot say that he is free from the sins of gossip, slander, criticism for example, nor can he say he is guiltless of the sins of omission. Second, no man liveth to himelf. What we are trying to do in the fellowship of the Church is not primarily to save our own souls but to lift the whole level of life. We cannot escape some measure of responsibility for the sins of the nations. Just as Our Lord was willing to accept the consequences of sin, so must we, and we use the Church as the ark of safety for the future of mankind.

Does anyone wish to live in a community without churches? Does anyone doubt that the future, in large measure, depends upon the things for which the Church stands? It is a fellowship more powerful than gold, kings or armies. Word has seeped through from Germany that the persecuted Christians in concentration camps and elsewhere are receiving encouragement and help from an unseen Christian fellowship. Something is going out from the company of believers in Christ that the Gestapo cannot trace or eradicate. That is a suggestion of the power that is ours in this blessed company of faithful people, not an organization, but an organism pledged to fulfillment of God's plan and purpose.

but why not in the same fine spirit ask a brother of the Methodist or Baptist Church to unite with us in such a plan?

We talk so much about a spirit of fellowship and cooperation, but how often do we really put it into practice? "The approaches to unity" will remain only "approaches" for many years to come, unless we become realistic enough to give the hard core of reality to our words. Practicing fellowship will do a lot more to bring about Christian unity than the words of a thousand commissions. Let's learn to worship together!

WHY A CHURCH?

"O where are kings and empires now
Of old, that went and came?
But Lord Thy Church is praying yet
A thousand years the same.

Unshaken as eternal hills
Immovable she stands,
A mountain that should fill the earth,
A house not made by hands."

Cleveland Awaits The Convention

War Conditions Present Unusual Problems

The entertainment of the General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church under war conditions has presented unusual problems to both the National Council and the Cleveland Committee on Arrangements. The difficulty of the Civil War days was a serious one. Then the matter was decided by holding conventions both in the north and the south. But the situation hardly parallels the present situation.

A meeting of the General Convention is legally and constitutionally necessary to preserve the administrative program of the Church, yet there is every desire to comply with the request of the Federal Government which requests that travel be kept at a minimum. As a result the convention will be held at the announced dates, October 2-11. The two houses will each have their full quota. There will be a convention of accredited representatives to the Woman's Auxiliary. But the attendance of visitors whose presence would involve travel has been and is being discouraged. There will be, of course, many interested spectators from greater Cleveland. But very few non-official guests will be present.

Cleveland regrets this situation. For the Sixth City is a hospitable community and likes to entertain her guests. Episcopalians, in particular, regret the necessity. For, while the Diocese of Ohio is the first to be organized west of the Alleghenies, it has never had the privilege of entertaining a General Convention. The Diocese of Southern Ohio, which was included in the original Diocese of Ohio has, on the other hand, entertained the Convention twice. The last meeting there was as recent as 1937.

Cleveland has a reputation as a convention city. It is well equipped to take care of great meetings. It has a great municipal stadium which will seat 80,000 people; a convention hall which will house 14,000 and an underground exhibition hall of large size for displays and exhibits. The 54th Triennial Convention will meet in a smaller convention hall admirably adapted for a meeting of its size. The place of meeting is the Euclid Avenue Baptist Church on Euclid Avenue at 18th Street. It is but a few minutes' walk from Trinity Cathedral where the religious services will be held.

Euclid Avenue Baptist Church, Cleveland, where the Convention will transact its business

The Euclid Avenue Baptist Church has a large auditorium which will seat more than 2,500 people. For seats it has the leather-upholstered theatre chairs. It is air-conditioned. Around the auditorium are spacious lobbies where delegates may gather to visit. There are comfortable and well-equipped committee rooms. A smaller auditorium offers a splendid meeting place for the House of Bishops. It is within easy reach of the hotels.

Cleveland has a three-cent street car zone. When one travels on the Euclid Avenue lines from Public Square to East 22nd Street, the fare is but three cents per ride. Both Trinity Cathedral and the convention hall are in this area. The hotels are, also. So if one does not wish to walk, transportation costs are reduced to a minimum.

If one has the opportunity to look at more of the city than is offered in the meetings he will see a great city at work in war industries. It is a crowded city. As is the case with most industrial cities thousands of migrant workers have crowded her houses and trailers. The restaurants will be crowded, and very often service delayed. Taxicabs will be scarce. There is a war tenseness about the city which will be felt. But the visitors will find her a friendly city and the delegates will be welcomed.

Trinity Cathedral was the gift of Trinity Parish, the first church society to be organized in Cleveland. Trinity Parish dates back to 1816. In 1890 the parish offered the Rt. Rev. William Andrew Leonard its church for his Cathedral. The offer was gladly accepted and the parish immediately began its plans for a building suitable for its purpose.

Mr. William G. Mather, honorary chairman of the local committee on arrangements, was appointed chairman of a committee to study plans, and to secure a suitable architect. A Cleveland architect, Charles F. Schweinfurth, received the appointment. The construction started in 1901 and was completed in 1907. The committee resisted the tendency of the time to use the Romanesque style and the cathedral is a splendid example of the perpendicular Gothic.

It is not old as cathedrals go, but the visitor will find in it the evidence of a devoted people. Its windows, chapel, altar, altar cloths, candelabra and other fittings, reveal the loyalty of its people. One interesting story comes from the period of its construction. Bishop Leonard conducted prayers each day for the safety of the workmen. At the completion of the building a special service was held for these men. It was revealed that the cathedral had been constructed without a single casualty.

The dean of the Cathedral, since 1933, has been the Very Rev. Chester Burge Emerson. Dean Emerson has given the cathedral a strong pulpit ministry which has influenced the entire city. In the sense that a cathedral should belong to the entire community. Trinity Cathedral has matured.

The Rt. Rev. Beverley Dandridge Tucker, Bishop of the Diocese of Ohio, also is claimed by the entire community. Forthright, positive and brotherly, he is appreciated by all denominations. Several of the other denominations outnumber the Episcopalians, but wise leadership has given the church an influence in the community which is appreciated by all.

SEMINARIANS SERVE LAUDABLY IN SUMMER

Albany—Bishop Oldham and Archdeacon Hastings are enthusiastic over the work carried on by several seminarians at places without resident rectors.

Eric Greenwood, of Sewanee, had charge of Grace Church, Stamford, under the direction of the Rev. Jackson A. Martin, and Dudley J. Stroup, of General Theological Seminary, served at Holy Cross Church, Fort Plain, under the Rev. H. S. Kennedy, the two priests being rectors at near-by Churches. The work flourished at both places. Mr. Stroup conducted a teaching mission in midsummer, with special instruction at a service on five successive nights by rectors from surrounding Churches. He closed with a visitation of the bishop, presenting a class of five persons for Confirmation. Painting the exterior of the church was not the least appreciated of Mr. Stroup's labors. The efforts of both young men were marked by earnest response on the part of the parishioners.

AN APPEAL FOR WORLD-WIDE CONFERENCE OF CHRISTIAN YOUTH

New York, N. Y.—An appeal for a world-wide conference of Christian youth to be held "at the earliest possible moment after hostilities cease" was cabled to the Archbishop of Canterbury and wired to the president of the Federal Council of Churches by the National Youth Commission which met at Orleton Farms, London, Ohio, August 23-27, where the group were the guests of Miss Mary Johnston. The message was sent to Archbishop Temple as chairman of the Provisional Committee of the World Council of Churches. It said: "The National Youth Commission of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America, representing half a million young people, urges your every effort to initiate plans now for a world-wide conference for Christian Youth, similar in character and purpose to the Amsterdam Conference of 1939, to be held at the earliest possible moment after hostilities cease. We pledge our support in the furtherance of such a significant and timely undertaking."

For the first time, the Youth Commission elected a chairman and a secretary, from its own youth membership. Miss Helene Schnurbush, of Wakefield, Mass., is chairman, and Miss Nancy Lee Noble, Elmo, Texas, is secretary. Both have been on the Commission for the past two years.

Announcing as a corporate aim, "To Know Christ and to Make Him Known", the Commission affirmed that the Youth of the Church will stand squarely with the Presiding Bishop in the objectives of what he has called a Christian Offensive. "We pledge our loyalty to the Presiding Bishop and to this purpose, and offer ourselves in whatever capacity we may command in the carrying out of his program," the Commission said.

Visiting the Commission meeting was Gordon Elliott, president of the Anglican Young People's Association of Canada, also Miss Frances Young, of the National Council's Division of Christian Education.

The meeting was the fourth annual one, called for the purpose of "planning strategy and program for Church work with youth", according to the Rev. Frederick H. Arterton, executive secretary of the Division of Youth.

The Commission commended the formation of cells consisting of small groups of young people, youth leaders, clergy, to work together on projects of common interest, including acceptance of the Rule of Life, war-time intercessions, defense work, social or political action, and recreational projects. "Every young Churchman needs to know that wherever he or she may go, field, factory, or front, there is a living cell of the Body of Christ." Parish youth councils are recommended also, personal evangelism, especially in securing new signers to the Rule of Life, and a parish program which gives full opportunity for the utilization of the young people.

For the first time the Commission announces a suggested program for a full year, starting with a study of what happens at this year's General Convention, Youth Sunday preparation and promotion, and continuing with such activities as a Parish Vocational Conference, study of world needs and the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief, the Individual religious life, the Christian Family, and the Whitsunday Parish Communion, which, it is stated, should be developed with stress on family worship.

The annual United Youth Offering is to be devoted exclusively to purposes of rehabilitation next year. Objectives are extension of work camps, promotion of youth conferences and advanced work, rehabilitation of children in war areas.

The Commission devoted considerable time to consideration of problems growing out of the war. Use of young people as lay readers, Church school teachers, etc., is suggested for parishes drained of much of their adult leader-parishes and missions, or relieve their ship, both clerical and lay. Young people can help to minister to vacant own rectors for ministry in other places.

The Commission points to the opportunities for young people to serve as nurses' aids, and to arrange trips and recreation for men returned from battle fronts. Continued observance of the Youth Angelus is urged, this "God's Minute" at 6 P. M., to include prayers for peace, for war sufferers, for those serving in the armed services. Correspondence with service men is urged; work in helping to follow removals; hospitality to service men visiting home communities and parishes; cooperation with the Army and Navy Commissions, and "regular participation in services of the Holy Communion by the young people remaining in their home parishes on behalf of those who because of the war cannot be present, are some of the activities urged upon young people of the Church in time of war. Looking to the future, plans were discussed and studied covering programs affecting men who return from the war, and still further ahead, men who are finally demobilized.

"No program designed 'To Know Christ and to Make Him Known,'" the Commission declared, "is possible if it does not permit of fullest participation by youth of all races. We recommend in particular that the Negro and Indian young Churchmen have representatives of their own number on diocesan and provincial youth councils and commissions." Consideration was given to the National Council's new program for work with Negroes, and fullest support promised.

Attending the Commission meeting were: (From the Provinces) Rev. John Brett Fort, Loomister, Mass.; Miss Helene Schnurbush, Wakefield, Mass.; Robert Gagnon, Rutland, Vt.; Rev. Gray Blandy, Troy, N. Y.; Miss Helen Smaling, Newark, N. J.; Miss Gloria Gebhart, Flushing, L. I.; Rev. Edmund L. Gettier, Baltimore; Miss Madeline Noce, Sharon, Pa.; Everett E. Ellis, Norfolk, Va.; Rev. John C. Grainger, Goldsboro, N. C.; Miss Nancy Lee Noble, St. Elmo, Tex.; Fitzsimmons Allison, Columbia, S. C.; Rev. Gordon Brant, Chicago; Miss Patricia Milbrath, River Falls, Wisc.; Miss Muriel Swetka, Detroit; Rev. Philip McNairy, St. Paul, Minn.; Miss Betty K. Curzon, Omaha; Albert Spalti, Denver; Miss Marion Barclay, Seattle; Miss Jane Dickerson, Glendale, Calif.; Miss Beverly Connon, San Jose, Calif.; Rev. John Burgess, Lockland, O.; Miss Charlotte Dean, Miami, Fla.; Miss Grace Eagle Fox, Porcupine, S. D.

Attending for the National Council's Division of Youth were Bishop Clinton S. Quin, Chairman; Miss Mary E. Johnston, Glendale, Ohio; Mrs. Harold E. Woodward, of the Girls' Friendly Society. Also Mr. Arterton and the Rev. Curtis W. V. Junker.

Representing youth organizations were: Rev. Thomas Barrett, Gambier, Ohio, Church Society for College Work and Canterbury Clubs; Mrs. Woodward, New York, Girls' Friendly Society; Miss Alice K. Rennie, New York, Daughters of the King; Rev. Arthur G. W. Pfaffko, Blue Ridge Summit, Va., Pi Alpha; Mrs. Pfaffko, Tau Delta Alpha; Rev. H. Bonnell, Spencer, O. H. C., Servants of Christ the King; Rev. Arthur O. Phinney, Boston, Order of Sir Galahad; Mr. Harrison Fiddesof, Washington, Brotherhood of St. Andrew; Mrs. Alice Kirkpatrick, Boston, Order of the Fleur de Lis.

LETTER FROM THE PRESIDING BISHOP TO YOUTH OF THE CHURCH

New York, N. Y.—Addressing directly the young people of the Church, Presiding Bishop Tucker writes:

"I hope that you will regard this letter as a very personal word from me.

"On Sunday, October 31, young people everywhere are going to observe Youth Sunday. I hope that you will take part in this great nation-wide service of dedication in your parish, and as one means of making your Christian witness count, participate in the united Youth Offering.

"These two adventures, Youth Sunday and the United Youth Offering, are integral parts of the Church's challenge to its young people. You are called to a new and deeper commitment to Christ and to a sacrificial effort to advance His Cause everywhere, in parish, in community, in nation and in the world.

What Has War Done to the Seminaries?

The war has reduced the enrollment of several Episcopal seminaries, and it seems likely that by next October all of them will suffer a marked depletion of student personnel. Dozens of young men who might otherwise have studied for the ministry have gone from college into the armed forces. Others have interrupted their theological studies to enter combatant branches and ambulance units. Many graduates of these same schools are serving as chaplains.

But a day is coming when the young men will return. We must be ready to give them the best in preparation for the Church's service.

The war and the taxation program have reduced the prospect of large gifts to the seminaries. Yet buildings must be maintained, and trained faculties, which cannot be assembled overnight, must be kept intact. In order to do this, the seminaries need many small gifts.

This advertisement is provided in the interest of all our Church Seminaries by the following institutions:

BERKELEY DIVINITY SCHOOL, NEW HAVEN; EPISCOPAL THEOLOGICAL SCHOOL, CAMBRIDGE; GENERAL THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, NEW YORK; PHILADELPHIA DIVINITY SCHOOL; VIRGINIA THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, ALEXANDRIA

"I regard the call of the Church to her young people and the response of youth to that call as one of the most important aspects of our Church's work and life. This is but another way of saying: 'You Count!' May God bless your efforts for the cause of Christ throughout the coming year."

SGT. CHARLES F. HICINBOTHEM WRITES FROM AFRICA OF A SOLDIERS' RELIGION

New York, N. Y.—From somewhere in Africa Technical Sergeant Charles F. Hicinbothem writes to a friend at home expressing something of a soldier's religion.

"Religion here is a real and tangible thing," he says. "Men come to Church, not because it's the thing to do, but because they want to worship God. Men who come in such close contact with danger know God as they never knew Him before. Which one of them can tell, when he starts on a mission, whether or not it is his last? Not one of them. But they do realize the part that God has in their lives, and they want to know Him better, as a Friend, as one they can go to in their innermost thoughts. They want to put their lives in His hand, and they want to thank Him for, oh! so many blessings, blessings which at home had been taken for granted."

"War is no picnic; we all know that. Thousands of lives are snuffed out; many bodies and minds are broken. And yet, with all the horrors of the war, God finds a way to draw men to Him. 'Come unto Me, all ye that travail and are heaven laden, and I will refresh you.' These are words to which we listened over and over again, and perhaps never heard. Now it is different, we hear the words. They have a meaning, and their meaning will be carried with us wherever we may travel even unto the ends of the earth."

HISTORIC CHURCH HAS SESQUI-CENTENNIAL

Duanesburgh, N. Y.—The 150th anniversary of Christ Church was celebrated by a commemorative service on August 29, the Rt. Rev. G. Ashton Oldham, D. D., bishop of the diocese, preaching the sermon. Two former rectors, the Rev. Arthur W. Abraham and the Rev. Frederick H. Belden, and the Rev. Harold P. Kaulfuss, Rural Dean, participated in the service, which was attended by a congregation that filled the building and crowded the churchyard. The present rector is the Rev. Edward Diamond.

Christ Church, founded in 1793 by James G. Duane, on land granted his father, Anthony Duane, an officer in the British Navy, who never saw his holdings, is one of the most interesting of our historic churches. The founder was a vestryman of Trinity Church, New York, also Mayor of that city and a member of the State Senate, and a friend and associate of George Washington. Having established by settlement the township that became the village of Daunesburgh, he built the church, which was consecrated by Bishop Samuel Provost and stands today on the same ground, a white-painted, two-story structure, with square paned windows and green shutters, the spire on the eastern end being the distinguishing mark of a church. The Duane mansion, built by the daughter of James Duane, now the property of George W. Featherstonehaugh, was the scene of a reception for the throngs of people who were at the notable service.

Box pews, including the special one provided for the Duane family, are interesting features of Christ Church. It has a three-decker pulpit from which Bishop Oldham preached the anniversary sermon, a gallery and one of the oldest organs in this section of the country. The heavy Communion silver and collection plates were presented by James Duane, and there is a Chippendale chair that was one of the original six brought to America. Among the early rectors was the Rev. Dr. Robert Spence Lowell, a brother of James Russell Lowell. The rectory, over one hundred years old, stands on glebe land presented by James G. Duane. Various memorial gifts to the Church include a brass altar cross, a marble baptismal font, a brass ewer, altar vases, cruets and service book. There are also murals of old-fashioned, ornate design and inscribed in rather stilted English.

Despite difficulty of transportation, the assemblage of people attending the anniversary represented the near-by cities and towns and countryside and over-taxed the capacity of the austere, ancient church.

CAMP RIVERDALE BOYS VOTE GIFT TO HUDSON STUCK MEMORIAL HOSPITAL, FORT YUKON, ALASKA

New York, N. Y.—Boys of Camp Riverdale in the Adirondacks voluntarily voted that $25.00 collected at their final camp service be sent to the National Council designated for the Hudson Stuck Memorial Hospital, Fort Yukon, Alaska.

Frank S. Hackett, Headmaster of the Riverdale Country School which operates the camp, says that the gift is made "because of our appreciation of the great work being carried forward there under such difficulty, and particularly of our realization of what it will mean by way of encouragement to Dr. Disosway and her colleagues.

"The interest of our boys in Fort Yukon reverts to the visits of Dr. and Mrs. Grafton Burke, and the presence here for many years as boy and counselor, of their son, Grafton."

SAFE ARRIVAL IN KUNMING OF BISHOP GILMAN

New York, N. Y.,—A cable from Bishop A. A. Gilman of Hankow, China, notifies the National Council of his safe arrival in Kunming. Bishop Gilman was fortunate in securing passage on a fast ship direct to India, and made the journey from New York back to China in just about five weeks. He was repatriated last year on the S. S. Gripsholm, but has been eager to get back to Free China where he believes he can be of service.

Mr. Robert A. Kemp, who started back to China about three weeks ahead of Bishop Gilman, has not been so fortunate in his transportation arrangements. On August 14, he was still in Melbourne, Australia, expecting to start for India at any time, and thence to China. He hopes to arrive in China early in September.

Since 1927 I have been one of the two recording secretaries in the House of Bishops in our Chinese Episcopal Church General Synod (Bishop Roberts was the English recording secretary, and I was the Chinese). I like to record this General Convention news and send back to enrich the Chinese Church."

It has previously been announced that Bishop Y. Y. Tsu of Kunming will attend the General Convention and address a joint session.

REV. ALDEN DREW KELLEY AND MR. LAWRENCE DALE BELL RECEIVE DEGREES

Geneva, N. Y.—The Rev. Alden Drew Kelley, executive secretary, Division of College Work, National Council, delivered the principal address at a special Convocation of Hobart and William Smith Colleges in St. John's Chapel, September 5, to graduate 25 seniors and one graduate student.

Honorary degrees were awarded to the Rev. Alden Drew Kelley, and to Lawrence Dale Bell, president of the Bell Aircraft Corporation, Buffalo. Both Dr. Kelley and Mr. Bell were to receive their honorary degrees at the Commencement exercises of the colleges last May in company with Madame Chiang-Kai-chek, Attorney-General Francis Biddle, Ship-builder Henry J. Kaiser, and others, but illness prevented their presence at the exercises, so the award of degrees was postponed until September. Dr. Kelley's degree is Doctor in Divinity.

PANAMA CANAL ZONE

A 50th anniversary has just been observed with an early morning Eucharist, by Christ Church Academy, the parish day school of Christ Church by the Sea, at Colon in the Panama Canal Zone. The school is a living monument to "Teacher Bailey". Mr. Samuel T. Bailey, a West Indian who was the first school master, then was in charge for most of the school's 50 years, and now, about 80 years old, and failing in sight, still lives in Colon. Mr. Leon A. Gilkes is the present principal and the Rev. A. M. Harmon, rector of Christ Church, is chaplain. At the weekly service for the school at 8 A. M. on Fridays, he sees about 165 of the school's 175 enrollment. The younger grades have boys and girls; the older classes are for boys only, all young enough, however, to enjoy the treat of ice cream which marked the afternoon of the semi-centennial.

QUESTION BOX

Every fall each parish and mission conducts an Every Member Canvass, at which time convassers (lay members) visit in the homes of the people, reporting on the Church activities during the past year, and hopes for extending the Church's work during the coming year.

At this visit, the member indicates on a pledge card his or her pledge for the coming year.

This pledge is subject to variances in the pledger's income: it may be adjusted lower if the pledger finds difficulty in meeting it. And of course it may be increased if the pledger so desires. In either case, the pledger talks the situation over with the Parish Treasurer.

We decide for ourselves what our Church pledge is to be, but in any case, let's not mock God by offering Him less than we spend each week on movies, or as club dues.

What is this silly stuff about the Episcopal Church being "both Catholic and Protestant"? I don't believe such a thing is possible.

Yes, our Church is truly Catholic in that She maintains the four marks of the primitive Church (Acts 2:42):

The Apostles' Doctrine, and Fellowship, the Breaking of Bread, and Prayers.

And our Church is Protestant in that She protests against the man-made errors of Rome, standing for a purified Church instead. However, this no more means that our Church became a new Church at the Reformation than that a person healed of disease becomes a different person. Our Church is the same, but cleansed.

Perhaps in the early days there was a parallel clash as "Unitarians" and "Trinitarians" bitterly disagreed. Then the historic Church, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, expressed Her Faith, recognizing we are Unitarian in that we know that there is only One God; and Trinitarian in that in the One God are Three Persons.

God grant that His Holy Spirit may guide us (and may we allow Him to guide us) as Christendom faces the chaos of our time.

THE CHURCH: Good Neighbor Too

NO. 5 IN A SERIES: THE CHRISTIAN OFFENSIVE

WHILE war rages in other parts of the world, Latin America occupies an increasingly importaut part in political and business developments of the future. And although the Latin American countries are counted as Christian, the ministrations they receive are utterly inadequate to their needs according to the best judgment of missionaries who have lived and worked there for years.

The fundamental need for what the Episcopal Church can give Latin America remains and will grow stronger as our neighbors to the south become more and more strategic in the fellowship of nations. The Anglican Communion, including the missionary societies of the Church of England and our own American Episcopal Church, has traditions and virtues which Cubans, Brazilians, Haitians, Mexicans, and Central Americans have long recognized as valuable in their national life.

The great aim and goal of our work in these countries is the establishment of a native ministry and leadership so that, as their political governments are partners in the family of nations, so the native Churches will become partners in the world-wide family of the Anglican Communion. Already marked progress has been made in this direction, for in all these Central and South American jurisdictions, most of the work is carried on by native priests and laymen. Only a small fraction of our clergy there come from the United States and the call which comes to us now is primarily to aid these young native Churches to train native clergy and to guide them on their way to a new day in local leadership.

Many opportunities in Latin America beckon us insistently to give in richer measure the service that has been rewarded for so many years with such grateful response. The Presiding Bishop feels that the American Church must answer this call through its missionary program for the years immediately ahead. Here are but a few examples of the opportunities:

The Bishop of Cuba needs a larger staff of better-trained native clergy and an extension of our school system. Quantities of first-class printed materials for religious education also are needed.

The Bishop of Southern Brazil is anxious to provide educational facilities for a larger number of Brazilian clergy. Twenty or more chapels need furnishings and an equal number of parish halls and Sunday schools need proper equipment. The opportunity for telling the Good News through press and radio is unlimited, given but small sums for its preparation and dissemination.

A new farm school at Quebrada Limon, a far-seeing project for training native youth, which already has attracted favorable attention, has the first call on any additional aid we can give the Bishop of Puerto Rico.

The simplest of rectories and slight increases in astoundingly meager clergy salaries are provisions for which the Bishop of Haiti asks. All but one of his clergy are native Haitians.

In the Panama Canal Zone, teeming with war activity, the bishop is eager to reach out into newly populated communities, including that part of Colombia which has always been part of his district and where our Church has done little.

Opportunities also await us in the Dominican Republic where the Church is inadequately staffed in proportion to the field of work.

In Mexico, work of our native clergy needs to be supplemented by trained lay workers.

In the Caribbean area, American jurisdictions are near neighbors to the British West Indian and Central American dioceses which are ministering to thousands of young Americans in the military services. A share in the support of these areas, for the present at least through English missionary societies, is the privilege of our National Church.

Statesmenlike plans for future expansion in all this Latin American field are part of the new Christian Offensive which the Presiding Bishop proposes. As our government is the Good Neighbor to Latin American governments, so our Church must be the Good Christian Neighbor to the Latin American peoples.

SECRETARY OF WOMAN'S AUXILIARY SAYS RELIGIOUS EMPLOYMENT SITUATION PARALLELS INDUSTRIAL FIELD

New York, N. Y.,—Miss Ellen B. Gammack, Personnel Secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary says that the employment situation in religious work closely parallels that of the industrial field. At present, she says, "we are faced more than ever with the constant request for trained women Church workers. At the moment we know of more than 40 positions where such women are needed and this by no means includes all of them."

Women are entering the various training schools, but the number of such entries is necessarily affected by the opportunities for industrial war work, defense work, the WACS, WAVES, SPARS and Marines.

Miss Gammack points out that "the general feeling is that few if any young people will be sent abroad for post-war construction but, rather, a smaller number of well-trained and skilled experienced workers will be sent. The question then is, how far some of the women interested in post-war reconstruction may be channeled into long range work under the Church overseas."

"For this type of work," Miss Gammack concludes, "and also for home missionary work, and Church social service work, we are planning to keep a file of first-rate women to follow up at the conclusion of the war, and we are asking that names and addresses of such women be sent in to the Woman's Auxiliary at 281 Fourth Ave., New York 10, by Church people who know women of the type needed."

IN PRAISE OF COMMON THINGS

For stock and stone,
For grass and pool; for quince tree blown
A virginal white in spring.
And for the wall beside;
Grey, gentle, wide;
For roof, loaf, everything,
I praise Thee, Lord!

For toil, and ache, and strife,
And all the commonness of life.
This is the best:
My little road from east to west,
The breadth of a man's hand,
Not from the sky too far,
Nor any star,—
Runs through the unwalled land;
From common things that be,
It is but a step to run to Thee!"

The Question Box

From The Episcopal Church Evangelist, The Rev. Smythe H. Lindsay, Editor.

How much of the Bible is covered in our Lectionary for the year?

The Bible is read through, so far as the important passages are concerned, once a year in our Church's provision for daily Morning and Evening Prayer with appropriate lessons (consult pages x to xxviii in our Prayer Book).

Some parts of the Old Testament are omitted as not being suitable for church reading. Other magnificent portions are read several times. The Psalms are arranged to be read 12 times in a year.

While the Old Testament is covered approximately once a year, the New Testament is read twice. At the service of Holy Communion, the New Testament is read almost exclusively.

What Churches are a part of the Orthodox Communion?

The Orthodox Communion includes the ancient Patriarchates of Constantinople, Alexandria, Antioch, and Jerusalem.

National Churches in addition to the Russian, Roumanian, and Serbian, which have been granted the rank of Patriarchates, include the Church of Cyprus, the Church of Greece, the Church of Bulgaria, the Church of Poland, the Church of Georgia, the Church of Albania, the Church of Finland, the Church of Esthonia, the Church of Latvia, the Church of Lithuania, the Church of Cxecholovakia, the autocephalous Church of Sinai, and the Orthodox Churches in the United States.

Who were St. Paul's companions on his missionary journeys?

St. Paul set out on his first missionary journey, of about two or more years from 47 A. D., with St. Barnabas and St. Mark as his companions. (See Acts 13 and 14.)

On his second missionary journey of three or more years (see Acts 15, 22), he was accompanied by Silas.

Timothy and others accompanied him on his third missionary journey of three or four years (see Acts 18).

It is interesting to note that St. Paul and St. Barnabas parted company because St. Paul lost faith in John Mark, who turned back and left them at one time.

St. Barnabas, well named Son of Encouragement, insisted John Mark should have another opportunity to make good.

A Message from the Archbishop of Canterbury

To the Editor:

The Archbishop of Canterbury has expressed to the American people his appreciation of the aid extended to children in Great Britain through the Save the Children Federation. His message was prompted by his observance of the successful operation of twenty-eight nurseries that have been under the supervision of the British Save the Children Fund, and which have been supported by American states, cities, colleges and other institutions. He was also alluding to the aid given to more than 12,000 children individually through the Federation's "Adoption" plan.

In a special word of thanks to Dr. John R. Voris, Executive Director of the Save the Children Federation, the Archbishop said:

"I want to express the gratitude of all English supporters of this cause for the help that the Save the Children Federation has given us and for the generosity of the United States of America."

The message was received by Dr. Voris, who has been in England in the interests of the welfare work of the Federation, and who has just returned to the United States.

PRESIDENT OF NEWLY-ORGANIZED CIVIC CLUB

The Rev. Dr. J. Henry Brown, bishop of Southern Virginia, director-chaplain of Fort Valley College Center, has been made president of the newly-organized Civic Club,—"Civicle",—the name formally adopted for this new organization for Negro men, as a national social and civic club.

Dr. Brown states the purposes of the Club as: "To encourage the exercise of citizenship rights for Negroes; To sponsor moves for better educational facilities on all levels for Negroes; To work for the improvement of health and sanitary conditions in Negro communities; To sponsor youth organizations serving to improve Negro youth; To work for better jobs for Negroes, and better training for Negroes on and for jobs; To increase religious idealism; To work for better race relations."

Meeting for organization was called by President H. M. Bond, President of Fort Valley State College, and C. H. Henderson, president of the Fort Valley Civic League. Dr. Brown believes that the new Club will find useful work to do in the Fort Valley area, and that it will spread to other States.

CABLE FROM CHINA

Announces Death of Bishop Sargent

New York, N. Y.—A cable received August 30 by Bishop Y. Y. Tsu, now in the United States, advises of the death from plague of Bishop Christopher Birdwood Sargent of Fukien. The cable, from Bishop Ronald O. Hall of Hong Kong, says that the Archbishop of Canterbury concurs in the belief that the Chung Hua Sheng Kung Hui should elect a successor.

Bishop Hall advised Bishop Tsu further that "Municipal street widening makes demolition of St. John's Church imminent. Bishop's residence, office, and congregaation, homeless. Vestry is opening a rebuilding campaign."

HAVEN . . .

By J. W. KENNEDY

YESTERDAY I was privileged to take a long look into the hollow places of another's loneliness and to hear how these places had been relieved of their dull aching feeling of helpless lostness and filled with substance and sanity. Loneliness is a mass affliction, for nearly everyone of us has a descent into its void for brief or long stays through the years of our ascent. It is not a pleasant place to be and few would choose to reside there for love or money. I have been there and would have traded my place for a lowly position in any friendly group of human beings. The worst of it is the vastness of oppression which comes primarily because we are no longer surrounded by the familiar and usual. Everything seems strange and different and we feel like friendless wanderers in a land unaccustomed to the sound of our footfall and without understanding of our speech. There are varying degrees of loneliness. Some of them, mighty frequent these days, is the temporary absence of a loved one to which we must adjust. The difficulty of the adjustment depends upon how large a place the absent one occupied in our life and thoughts, how thoroughly the absent life was entwined with our own, and the desire on our part to do everything possible to hush the weird echoes and sounds unheard before in the cavern of our present need. Loneliness is an acute awareness of loss, of something missing, whether it be the childlike loneliness of first separation which no one seems to understand unless he share its pang, or the irreparable condition of a lost loved one beyond the bounds of time and space. I said irreparable. By this I meant that no one can ever make up for the loss and nothing can ever step in to hush completely the voice sounds of memory. But even this terrible, bitter loneliness has its solace for those who will unwrap the blanket of self-pity and selfish sorrow from around themselves, which has already suffocated every feeling or thought of dealing with the almost unbearable moments of aloneness. Yesterday's glimpse of loneliness was inside the heart of one who had loved much and whose sorrow and sense of loss had been drained of their miserable bitterness because of the hold she had on the Lord God of all human kind, whose comforting presence in Christ, was ever caring, strengthening, assuring with bits of truth and remembrance. One of the finest phrases for the loneliness of sorrow was created for endless repetition by the absent one. She told me of her habit of dropping into her church, where she had assumed great responsibility, for an odd job or two in the late afternoon. She lived close by and her only son was married and gone. When her husband failed to find her at home he would always come to the church, and when he saw her, these were his words of greeting, "I always know where I can find you." Because of this vivid sense of His speaking nearness she has been able to come to church and to find there a real gift of response to a living God who has reassured us over and over again that there is no death, only a different kind and a different place of living. That is why the words of Jesus mean so much to the lonely one, "Come unto me". Because of Jesus we shall always know where to find God. We come unto Him by the very simple act of loving Him and desiring Him and using what He used—the innate powers of light to shine in the darkness to keep God ever in sight. Just to believe beyond shadow of doubt that He is there, within reach, ready to sustain and understand, anxious to direct and give counsel, will be sufficient antidote for the devastating effect of life's moments of loss and loneliness when life seems to have stopped dead, when self is only a numbed fragment that remains when the sweetness and the radiance have gone from the air we breathe and we feel "it is the end". But this woman, even though there are still many difficult moments, has found God must use one life for two, that each day the hurt grows a bit less, that, as she depends upon His guidance to lead, she somehow finds the way through each day. The very worst hell can cease to torment when we turn at last to God in Christ in us.

Loneliness is where nothing exists but self. Let God share it and what has seemed to be never-ending darkness will become ceaseless dawn.

COLLECT FOR THIRD SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY

Almighty and merciful God, of whose only gift it cometh that Thy faithful people do unto Thee true and laudable service; Grant, we beseech Thee, that we may so faithfully serve Thee in this life that we fail not finally to attain Thy heavenly promises; through the merits of Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

"What, Then, Shall We Do?"

By THE RT. REV. WILLIAM BERTRAND STEVENS, D. D.

MOST OF US are ready to accept as a general proposition that there is a God, that He has revealed Himself in One called Jesus, that there are divine forces called the Holy Spirit operating in the world and that it is God's wish that those who believe in Him should be associated in a fellowship called the Church. Those are matters of belief and faith. What, then shall we do about them? If we do nothing they remain mere ideas. They must be translated into life.

First, we decide. The primary step is an act of decision and surrender. We have no theories as to the exact nature of what is called conversion. It may be sudden as it was in the case of St. Paul or it may be a slow development. But it is something that makes us different. It is expressed by confirmation in many Christian bodies and in the Episcopal Church it is then that there is a reaching out for and a bestowal of spiritual power.

My God, accept my heart this day,
And make it always Thine
That I from Thee no more may stray
No more from Thee decline.
(M. Bridges)

A newspaper man once said to his minister, "I have decided to give myself to the cause of religion," to which his pastor replied, "Are you committed far enough to surrender your will to God?" No emotional or intellectual surrender is enough. It must be a complete abandonment of selfishness and self-will.

Second, we pray. In the sphere of religion everything that we do must somehow be focused in the art of prayer. Our great difficulty is not so much accepting the reasonableness of prayer as in making it one of our soul's habits. Within the sound of this broadcast there are probably thousands of people who, if asked if they believe in prayer would say, "of course." But the proportion of those who do much about it might surprise us. It is not that they do not pray in the great crises and emergencies of life, but rather that prayer is not a part of their daily lives. There are many listeners who are anxious to pray for those in the armed forces of our country. We ask them to remember that the constant remembrance of them in daily prayer is more logical than spasmodic appeals to God to keep them from physical danger. It is good to pray when there are special dangers confronting us and those we love, but it is more helpful when we pray habitually in the routine of ordinary living. If we pray habitually, we pray more easily and naturally in the moments of stress and strain. By regular prayer our lives become integrated and their diffused ambitions and interests brought together.

IN THE PRACTICE of private and common prayer we are caught up out of the little world of unimportant things in which we so often live. If we pray honestly and earnestly we find that religious loyalties, moral values and general ideals all fall into their proper places because we relate them all to God. It is not as simple as it sounds but it has been proved in the experience of countless thousands who have learned to know God and to face life unafraid.

So shall my walk be close with God
Calm and serene my frame:
So purer light shall mark the road
That leads me to the Lamb.
(Cowper)

And in the lives of many others this experience reaches its peak in the service of Holy Communion, that service instituted by Christ Himself. One does not like to be presumptuous, but our hearers will understand if we say that it would be a wonderful thing for our nation if on next Easter Day each of us could be at his own Church joining in the service of Holy Communion or whatever may be its equivalent. It will be a wonderful special fellowship of our own for that day—all of us, Christians of various names and perhaps sometime in that general period our Jewish brethren, too, joining in a sacramental act of fellowship and in prayer for a better America and a better world.

Third, there must be a determination on our parts to carry through. Surrender, communion, prayer, all have their emotional appeal that is difficult to sustain. The religious world is full of those who, like certain followers of Jesus of Nazareth, have heard Him and marvelled and have gone their way. There is a law of atrophy in our religious life just as in our physical life. We all possess a measure of spiritual responsiveness and it must be used. Those who fail to exercise their bodily muscles lose the power to use them. Those who live in conditions of comparative darkness lose the power to respond effectively to the stimulus of light. It is a well established principle of religious education that a child's ability to respond spiritually is dependent on the use which is made of it. Deliberate cultivation is necessary. So much of our modern civilization encourages spiritual atrophy. Even the task of winning a war has its dangers. Certainly something of the fine flavor of apostolic Christianity has been lost and religion's problem is perhaps more intensive today than extensive. Because churches cannot build new buildings, because missionaries cannot go to remote lands, our obligation to deepen our religious faith is all the greater. We need men and women who do not shrink from the "crispness of religion" and who are eager to restore its "lost radiance."

FINALLY, there must be in life the willingness, yes, the determination to express our faith in God in terms of love and brotherhood. No religious program that is based on hate or criticism of others will work in the long run. There must be a community of purpose among all religious groups. That does not mean the sacrifice of conviction or of our identity as Christians of one group or another, but it does mean the elimination of rancor and suspicion. Perhaps within the sound of my voice there are those who wonder if the religious groups of the world have not encouraged disunity by their isolation from one another and their lack of sympathy towards people who differ from them. There is in history some support for such an impression and perhaps in many quarters today evidence that it is so. But the heart of the religious forces is sound and among the churches there is, not agreement, of course, but a common determination to practice the virtue of love and sympathy. We realize

The Lizette Woodward Reese Memorial Sermon

By WILLIAM R. MOODY

THERE IS A SENTENCE in the Book of Common Prayer with which the choicest of the poets would all agree. It is very familiar,—so much so that you will be tempted to say it with me when I tell you what it is; and I am tempted,—almost,—to ask you to say it with me. I will ask you to say it in your heart, and to keep it there during all our time together this afternoon.

It is a brief sentence from the General Thanksgiving. We are speaking to God, and we say, "We bless Thee for our creation!" I do not know whether you have ever thought seriously about that sentence. Think about it now.

No poet I have ever read has had, I think, a deeper appreciation of the great truth which lies behind this phrase than the poet whose memory we honor this day. No one can read her poetry—perfumed as it is by the flowers, and lighted by the beauty of them, filled with glimpses of the spring, or with the warmth and fruitfulness of the summer, or with the sweep of winter winds—and miss the fact, the fact deep cut, that here was one who loved creation as it is, one to whom the beauty of it was as food, yet one who would not flee the sorrow of it after having tasted its joy.

And no one can read her poetry without seeing clear and plain that she knew to whom earth's beauty and earth's fruitfulness belong, and that she blessed Him for it. "We bless Thee, God, for all creation!"

There is a kinship between those who know how to create,—yes, between the Great Creator Himself, and His human children within whom burn a spark of the Fire Divine. Lizette Reese knew this, and the sign of it is in her work.

Not all those who have the creative gift know their great Kinsman,—yet kinsman He is! There is more poetry in a bee's wing than in any ballad ever written; more music in a violet than in any song ever sung. Thrice blessed is the artist who knows in his heart that artists are sons of the living God, and that the hand that holds the chisel, or the brush, or that guides the pen, is kin to Him that formed the worlds, and set the new stars whirling through the hush of ancient night!

Thrice blessed is the artist who realizes that the mission of art in life is not to embroider a pretty doily, nor to crochet a graceful edging to be tacked on to the more solid things of living, but that art is life, the best in life, because God, who created life, is the greatest Artist of them all!

So Lizette Reese wrote her sonnet——

To Art

"What are thine ends? To idle at the door,
The while the wharves call and the ships go by;
Set sail and drift under an April sky,
A curious mariner from shore to shore?
To strip from woodland pool the pipe of yore,
Bursting with many a high, sweet, ancient air,
And shrilling down the country highways fair?
Son of the gods, and hast thou nothing more!
Storm through the tides, unheeding wreck or night,
Lord of the chart, the track, Lord of thy fears,
Fling to the gust the reed of weather's slight;
Blood of our blood, and kin of all our tears,
Cry through the dark, and drive the world to light;
Strike at the heart of time, and rouse the years!"

Miss Reese not only thanked God for creation, she demanded and took her share in creation—for as the Creator's kinsmen we are creators, too. And then, out of the labor and the toil of it, out of the planning, out of the vision, another thing appears,—creation is costly! The Creator pays a price for creation! There is no creation without labor, none without sacrifice, none without its undertone of sorrow. And there is no creation without an understanding of these things. Creation is not magic.

There are more dilettantes in art than in any other activity of man, but they are not artists, because they recognize no real necessity for work; they are not artists because they see no need for sacrifice; they are not artists because they have never entered into the fellowship of suffering.

"Creation is labor.
It is planning.
It is vision.
Above all, it is sacrifice.
Creation is not magic!

Creation is the stooping of that which is higher to lend a hand to that which is lower.
Creation is the father working for his children.
It is the mother, listening in the night for the cry of her little ones.
It is the labor of care, of watchfulness, of love.
It is the feeding of bodies that they may grow.
It is the training of minds as well as of bodies; and of souls as well as of minds.
It is the heart-break for the child grown wrong, as well as the joy for the child grown right.

Creation is not magic.
It is labor:
It is planning:
It is vision:
It is sacrifice!
It is the Voice of God, crying in the darkness, and in the chaos,
In the blood, and in the confusion of battle;
In the slums, and in the places of oppression;
In the concentration camp, under the whip-lash;
In Britain, in Germany, in Russia, in Italy, in Japan—
On tangled, tragic Bataan——
It is the Voice of God, crying in the darkness and in the chaos,
Let there be light!
That is creation!"*

We bless Thee, God, for our creation!"

SOMETIMES IT IS hard to bless God for our creation. At other times it is easy. The art of the true artist mirrors all this, and we find it mirrored in Miss Reese's poems. It is easy enough to thank God for having created us when skies are bright, and there is no cloud. When we are in the midst of some deep happiness everything about us seems to echo that happiness. It is mirrored in the faces of the people we meet. It sings a joyous song in the sounds of the traffic. The sunlight catches it up. It speaks in the raindrops, in the wind, in the sky. The wonder of human life when experienced in pleasant places is a rapturous wonder. There are moments when life is too exquisite for memory, so sweet and so endearing that its rapture is close to pain.

*From "Creation" by William Moody

All this Lizette Reese traced with sure and sensitive pen, weaving in a skillful, fragile, beautiful pattern of words the "rapturous wonder of life experienced in pleasant places"—yet underneath it all, like the beat of an ancient surf, comes the hushed and solemn voice of an old sorrow, a sorrow too deep and too wide for the experience of the poet herself, and belonging to all creation,—and even reaching into the heart of God Himself. In it there is the memory of His cross.

To Lizette Reese this age old sadness under joy is expressed in common things. It is the cry of an old house, calling for the vanished little ones whose cheerful voices were once heard within its halls; it is the cross of Christ, set up on Good Friday at her own door; it is the tender voice of a mother, praying over the bed of her children for the leaders of a lost cause, for Beauregard and Lee; it is in the plaintive lament for "Lydia, gone for many a year"—under the happiness, under the sharp sense of earthly beauty, the scarce forgotten sorrow; under the open tears the whisper of still remembered joy.

Her experience is ours, and that is why her poetry finds us, and wins us. There have been days and hours when we, if left alone to the mood and the experience of the moment, could not say that we blessed God for our creation. There were times, I am sure, in her life, —as there may have been in yours,—some sad and solemn moment when you felt that you, like Job of old, could arise and curse the very day you were born—but even there, in the blackest of dark grief, not for the now, but for the then, not for the cross, but for the triumphant, resurrected life beyond it, you could take these words upon your lips, —"We bless Thee, God, for our creation!"

And through the beauty of the things which God has created,—even through the beauty of the terrible things of earth,—we find our way to Him. Like the poet whom we honor today, I am thankful to God for my world,—for the piercing beauty of it!

I bless Him for the wide and spacious skies. For clouds. For wind and rain.

And I thank my God for trees, and for the gift that He has given me to see the beauty of them, and to love them.

I thank Him for the bite of the axe into the good wood; and for the smell of smoke in the autumn; and for the warmth of the fire in the winter; and for the flight of birds.

And I thank God for the Seasons—for the tenderness of the springtime, for the strength of the summer, for the fulfilment of the autumn, and for winter branches etched against the sky.

Yes, I thank God for the Seasons,—for that high alchemy that transforms the world with every hour, and makes no two moments of living ever possible the same. I thank the great Father who created me, that with me He created these.

And I thank Him that He is in this world that I love. I thank Him that two thousand years ago, factually, indisputably, God in Christ graciously tabernacled with men. I thank God for that fact, full as it is of mystery, of wonder, and of awe, transfused with glory and with beauty. The poor, fragile human reason, which sees through a glass darkly, has seen in Him, so far as can be seen, the character of God.

And I thank God that there have been those among us,—those like Lisette Woodward Reese,—gifted with great vision, and with unusual power of expression,—those with the gift to see, and with the gift to write down for us what they have seen, of Him in whom we have believed.

"WHAT, THEN, SHALL WE DO?"

that the will of God is that men should love and trust each other and that society cannot be organized in opposition to the will of God. Our world problem is megalomaniac dictatorship, reversion to primitive cruelties, abandonment of even a pretense of national honesty, and in some countries a definite decision to stifle the influence of, and even to prevent the existence of, religion. And our common defense against this is the power of love. "Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels and have not love, I am become as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal." It is believing in things that makes life worthwhile. It is believing in the power of love that gives us the patience to face the dangers of the present and the faith to believe in the possibilities of the future.

Faith is not merely the belief that we may attain Heaven when we die. It is the conviction that in God's good time love will prevail in the world, that we can have peace and good will among men, that sorrow and sighing may be done away, and that the kingdoms of this world may become His Kingdom.

O Master, from the mountain side
Make haste to heal these hearts of pain;
Among these restless throngs abide,
O tread the city's streets again:

Till sons of men shall learn Thy love,
And follow where Thy feet have trod;
Till glorious from Thy heaven above,
Shall come the City of our God.

BOOK REVIEWS

F. J. WARNECKE

OUR CHURCH. By the Rev. William P. Witsell. Morehouse-Gorham, New York, 1943. 407 pages. $2.50.

This is a reprint, with some revision and some additions, of a volume first issued in 1924. The sub-title, "One Through the Ages", indicates the special pleading of the author. Even an Anglican could wish that the writer would be a bit more objective in his attitude and not always make the Anglican Communion the shining Galahad of Christianity! So, for example, the tradition that St. Peter founded the Church at Rome is quite bluntly noted as a tradition without historical proof—as it is! But even the extreme legend that St. Paul might have gone to England to begin the Church there receives respectful consideration and finalliy this unsubstantiated statement: "It is most likely, if not practically certain, that if the Apostle (St. Paul) fulfilled his purpose to go to Spain, he would also go over into Britain, a well known province of the Roman Empire." The method of the book is also not a particularly happy one. It is to quote at considerable length secondary sources, piling these one on top of another though they but repeat the same statements. Some chapters are little more than an anthology of standard and sub-standard Anglican Church histories. Devoted as we are to our Church, we don't think it needs this kind of pseudo-historical special pleading.

THE CHRIST WE KNOW. By Lars P. Qualben. T. Nelson and Sons, New York, 1943. 169 pages. $2.

This is a series of meditations on the first eighteen verses of the Gospel according to St. John. The style is more argumentative than mystical. The author's viewpoint is extremely fundamentalist, viz: "The evolutionary theory is still a theory which no one has been able to prove scientifically correct . . . the evolutionary theory is not sound." Again, "Turning to the writings of John, that is, the Gospel, First, Second and Third Epistle and Revelation . . ." Such an ostrich attitude towards modern scholarship will scarcely lead a sceptical person "to a more dynamic and victorious Christian life."

"The War Against God"[1]

This is the title of an interesting book which will be on the book shelves September 30th. So much has happened since September 1st, 1939, that we have forgotten (if we even knew clearly) some of the issues involved. The definite anti-Christian characteristic of National Socialism as practiced in Germany has been submerged by shrewd Nazi propaganda and her attempt to paint in livid colors the anti-religious background of Soviet Russia. The Nazis posing as champions of religion is ludicrous to those who will take the trouble to learn the facts. We were definitely amused by the recent press release from Germany that she had taken the Vatican into "protective custody."

Have we quickly forgotten her treatment of the Jews, a religious minority? Martin Niemoeller, we suppose, is in protective custody? The courageous Bishops of the Roman Catholic Church, who have been outspoken in their opposition to Nazism, have been treated with every courtesy? This is no attempt to fan the fires of hatred but to keep the record straight. After all there is such a thing as righteous indignation.

Carl Carmen, the author of "The War Against God", has done an excellent and useful piece of editorial work. We trust that all the clergy will avail themselves of the privilege of reading this splendid compilation.

The scheme is a simple one. The book is divided into five sections. Section one is headed "The Plot Against Christianity." Hitler, Rosenberg, and a German soldier speak of their hatred of Christianity. Then the editor shows how the resistance to such attacks was answered by Niemoeller and the Roman Catholic Bishops. The last two chapters of this section show how the attack spread, and its effect in the Far East.

Section two is titled "The Democratic People's Answer." Here we find excerpts from the addresses of such people as President Roosevelt, Viscount Halifax, Stanley High, and others.

Section three bears the title, "In the Words of the Spiritual Leaders." Here we find the voices of such men as Henry Sloan Coffin, D. S. Cairns, Bishop Henry Hobson, Bishop Manning, Lewis Cardinal Dougherty and others.

The Fourth Section is headed "Personal Testimony." It is the recorded testimony of fighting men.

The Fifth Section is "For A Better World." Here one may read the firm statements made by Sir Stafford Cripps, Sherwood Eddy, Lynn Harold Hough and others.

Not the least valuable part of the book is a splendid bibliography.

To help us all to clarify our thinking, and especially our attempts to think down Christian channels this book will help. For definitely this is a war against demonic forces that would war against God.

We recommend the reading of the "War Against God," by all thinking Christians who wish to get a firmer grip upon the real issues at stake in this global revolution.

A Peaceful General Convention

The time allotted for General Convention to do its work in is short. Several very important matters are to be brought up for consideration. The Report of the Commission on the Revision of the Marriage Canon; the report of the Commission on a See for the Presiding Bishop; and the controversial report on the Approaches to Unity. All of these reports are important. There is a wide divergence of opinion in regard to each of them. While not advocating a "do-nothing policy," we believe it would be best to accept continuation reports from all these commissions until the Convention of 1946, when, we trust, the War will be over and more time may be allotted to that Convention.

We would wish to see the Cleveland Convention spend the greater part of its time only looking carefully into the Budget requirements for the next triennium, and into the broad strategy and policy of the Church in regard to Post-War Problems.

In other words, to spend time on purely internal problems, when a world is on fire, would seem to us to present a poor example of Christian understanding. We have a task to perform in the world; the Protestant Episcopal Church has a contribution to make. Let's make plans for strengthening that contribution, rather than bickering about our own internal problems.

We do not wish to be misunderstood. One of the finest examples of our showing how we realize the seriousness of our "unhappy divisions," would be by the adoption of the majority report of Approaches to Unity. This, after all, is nothing more than a continuation report.

May true Christian courtesy and brotherliness prevail at Cleveland!

Anglo-American Responsibility to Africa

A Plea from the Chairman of the London Missionary Society

By EDWARD FULLER
Of the London Save the Children Fund

DR. HAROLD ADUNDEL MOODY, Weset Indian native, whose ancestors were slaves brought to Jamaica from West-Africa, fills the unique position, this year, of Chairman of the London Missionary Society—the oldest British missionary society and the first to elect a colored man to this high office.

"Livingstone would have been pleased," Dr. Moody is reported to have said when he was told of his election. He was alluding to David Livingstone, the African explorer, founder of the London Missionary Society, who, when lost in Darkest Africa sixty-two years ago, was found by Henry M. Stanley, sent out to search by Gordon Bennett, New York Herald proprietor.

David Livingstone gave his life to bring the Gospel to the people of Africa. Harold Moody is a living symbol of the success which blessed his labors.

As founder and president of the League of Colored Peoples, he has probably done more for them than any other man of his race. Dr. Moody is also a member of the Council of the Save the Children Fund, and vice-chairman of its Child Protection Committee, which deals with the welfare of children of the non-European races.

But all these public activities do not exhaust the versatility of a unique personality. Dr. Moody is by profession a physician. He graduated from King's College in the University of London and he has one of the largest practices in that city. His patients include many of the poorest denizens of South London, and when people ask him how they like having a colored man for their physician, he replies, "There is no color bar among the poor." This is a remarkable side-light on the British mentality. I think it is significant too that two of Dr. Moody's children should have been given commissions in the British Army, his daughter Christine being the first colored woman to be commissioned. She is a Captain in the Royal Army Medical Corps. Mrs. Moody, by the way, is an English woman, a true help to the Doctor in all his activities. Far away in Jamaica his ninety-year old mother follows, prayerfully and admiringly, the progress of her famous son.

IT MAY EVEN BE that this West-Indian physician, who for years has been healing the physical ills of the people of London and helping its new lives into the world, will be a great healing influence for some of the world's wounds and will help to bring to birth the new world for which we all hope and pray. In a letter which he recently addressed to people of his race in Africa, a letter that reads rather like a Pauline Epistle to one of the young churches of the early lays of Chistianity and yet is a brilliant essay in statesmbanship, Dr. Moody says:

"Dear Friend:

Greetings in His Name!

May I introduce myself by saying that I am the Chairman of the London Missionary Society. This is the first occasion on which a member of the younger churches has thus been recognized, and as I am of African descent, coming as I do from Jamaica, I felt that it would be of special interest to you and your Council.

During this year I should like to do something which would be of positive and permanent value to Africa and I now write to you for guidance. I have suggested to our friends on this side that Europe, already tremendously in debt to Africa as a result of the slave trade and modern industrial exploitation, is now further indebted to her, because Africa brought into a war, which was really no concern of hers, is the first continent to be liberated from the enemy and is now able to provide an excellent vantage ground from which to make onslaughts on the enemy. My feelings are that Europe and America will feel constrained to make some returns to Africa and that such returns should take the form of an imaginative and serious attempt to free Africa from those disabilities which now bind her down economically, socially, educationally, politically, spiritually and morally. We have abundant evidence for this conviction in President Roosevelt's Four Freedoms, in the Atlantic Charter and in the recent pronouncements of various statesmen, both in England and in America.

Now my purpose in writing to you is to obtain your views about this. Do you agree with my outlook? If you do, would you like to convey to me your ideas as to the form such an enterprise should take? I am certain that any plans we may decide to make should only be made after the fullest possible consultation with you. Indeed, I feel that a representative Council of Africans should be summoned to meet a representative Council of Europeans and Americans in order to discuss fully the future of Africa in its every aspect. You will gather from this that I am not only thinking of the work of the Church but of the work of the State as well.

If Africa is to be fully liberated, then we Africans and persons of African descent must play our part to the full in this great task. I therefore ask you to consider this prayerfully and let me have your reply as soon as possible. I also ask you to pray for me, that God may give me vision, inspiration, and grace that I may be able to do what He wants me to do during this year of office. I am more convinced than ever that my accomplishments will be the direct results of the prayerful co-operation of my friends in the Church of Christ the world over. I believe that God is calling His Church to a great task today. May that part of the World Church in Africa play her part to the very full!

This is the prayer of your friend and fellow Christian,

Harold Arundel Moody"

DR JOHN R. VORIS, Executive Director of the American Save the Children Federation, which is the sister organization of the British Save the Children Fund and which is doing an extensive war-time work among British children, met Dr. Moody on a recent visit to England and has this to say of him:

"I am proud to have met this man—proud that our Save the Children movement should be able to number him among its friends and colleagues. He has the large outlook without which mankind cannot be saved from disaster, and that spirit of co-operation which is essential to the realisation of our dreams of a better world. My own particular concern, as Executive Director of the Save the Children Federation, is with the children who in a few years will be citizens of that world. But I realize—and none more so—that all the best brains of all the peoples must make their contribution to its planning; and in that planning men like Harold Moody will have a great part to play."

SQUIRREL MONOLOGUE

I like the autumn best,
With acorns on the ground,
And leisure in my nest,
And color all around.

At other times my lot
Is grievous to behold.
The summers are too hot,
The winters are too cold.

In spring I find my rest
Disturbed by warbling sounds.
I like the autumn best,
With acorns on the ground.

STRANGE ESCAPE

Three Scotch privates and a corporal had been cut off during a fierce engagement in a Belgian town one day just preceding Dunkirk. Taking refuge in the loft of an empty house, they awaited what seemed to be certain death. Outside they heard the Germans setting fire to buildings, looting, killing.

Suddenly the corporal said, "Lads, it's time for church parade, let's hae a wee bit of service here."

The soldiers looked a bit astonished, but, placing their rifles in a corner, they stood at attention. The corporal took a small Testament from his breast pocket and turned the pages.

As he read, loud shouts came from below. Doors banged, and glass was shattered.

He finished, and his grave face took on a wry smile. "I'm no' a gude hand at this job, but we must finish it off. Let us pray."

The corporal stood with the Bible in his hand. The others knelt and bowed their heads. A little haltingly, and very simply, he committed their way to God and asked for strength to meet their coming fate like men.

Suddenly a heavy hand crashed open the door. An exultant exclamation in German was heard and then a gasp of surprise. Not a man moved, and the corporal went calmly on. After a pause he began to repeat the Lord's Prayer.

Hearing a click of his heels a second later, they knew the enemy was standing at attention. A moment of suspense, and then came the soft closing of the door and the sound of footsteps dying away.

Gradually the sound of battle moved on. At dusk the four men ventured out and, by making a wide detour, worked around the flank of the enemy. They reached the British outposts in safety that night. —From the Record

THE SNOWDROPS

Our neighbor's evacuee is a little maid of five, and a day or two ago she and I walked into the woods together.

It was not a long journey, but it took us both far from this world of war and weeping, bringing us, as it seemed, into the very presence of God.

As I say, Mavis and I walked into the woods together. She did most of the talking.

"I like living here better than in our street at home," she said. "But I wish Mummy could be here, too. It is all houses where we live."

I nodded. "And now," said I, "we are leaving the houses and coming to the woods. I love this place."

"Yes," she whispered.

Our path took us among the trees and through slanting sunshine and kindly shadows and amid a shower of bird music, till suddenly we came upon a carpet white as snow—a patch of snowdrops in the sunshine.

"Look!" gasped Mavis in wonder. "What are they?"

"Snowdrops," said I, "hundreds of them."

She stood quite still. Never, I was sure, had she seen such a sight before. Her lips were parted. She was breathless with amazement.

Then, after a long pause, she whispered, "Who made them?"

"God made them," I replied.

There was another pause and then Mavis looked up shyly: "Do you think He would mind if I picked just one or two for Mummy?" she asked.

WHEN ROBERT REALLY PRAYED

Robert liked to tease his sister Nancy. Sometimes he made her so unhappy that she cried. Robert was sorry then, and when he went to bed he prayed: "Dear God, forgive me for teasing Nancy. Make her happy again."

One night, Robert's mother said to him: "Robert, I think you ought to learn to pray."

Robert looked at her in surprise. "Why, Mother," he said, "I've prayed every night since I was a little boy."

"No, Robert," said his mother, "you just talk to God telling Him what you want Him to do. Prayer is thinking with God, using the minds He has given us to think of how we can work with Him."

After his mother left, Robert thought about Nancy. "It's fun for me when I tease her, but it can't be much fun for her," he said. Then Robert remembered what he had said to God—"Make her happy again." He thought, "How can God make Nancy happy?" He wished that God would do something real nice for her.

Soon an idea came to him of a lovely surprise for Nancy. She wanted a little wooden bed for her doll. He had the tools, and his mother would help him. It would mean work, but what would that matter if Nancy were made happy and by him?

Now Robert remembered what Mother had said about prayer. "Why," said he, "I've been really praying. God helped me to feel loving toward Nancy, and He showed me what I could do to help make her happy. God really does seem nearer to me than ever before."

LOUISE

Oh, what shall I name my Dolly?
Barbara, Ruth or Jane?
Margaret is very pretty,
Anne is a wee bit plain.
Mary, Elizabeth, Alice,
Dorothy, Rose and May.
I think I shall have to call her
A different name each day!

But how would my dolly like it?
Perhaps not so very well,
To be tucked in tight as "Florence,"
And waked up "Anabel."
I am sure she would grow bewildered,
As days passed quickly by,
And would try to ask me, "Mother,
Please tell me, just who am I?"

So I've told her not to worry,
That her name would always be
Louise—and she looked delighted,
And pleased as she could be.
Whenever I sit and watch her,
She tries so hard to smile,
That I simply have to hug her,
Up in my arms awhile!

THE POLITEST MAN

"Blessed are the peacemakers." The politest man has been discovered. He was hurrying along the street one night when another man, also in haste, rushed out of a doorway and the two collided with great force. The second man was infuriated, and spoke abusive language; while the polite man, taking off his

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF THE NEWS

Appeals for More Chaplains

"Behind in Procurement Program," Stated Gen. Arnold in Address to Conference of Leading Religious Groups

New York, N. Y.—To emphasize the need for more Chaplains in the Army, and to urge the religious press to cooperate in broadcasting the need, Brigadier-General William R. Arnold, Chief of Chaplains, invited representatives of leading religious groups to a conference in New York City September 8. Addressing the group, Chaplain Arnold said:

"As the tempo of the war increases the soldiers' interest in spiritual matters also increases. We are receiving evidence of this almost daily. Chaplains reporting to our office from the battle areas point out the increased interest which they have observed and the increased opportunities which have been afforded them. Because such conditions prevail, I believe you will agree that we dare not fail these men by not supplying them with the necessary chaplains.

"To carry on a global program of this nature in providing religious ministrations for all who desire them requires several thousand chaplains. As the Army expands the number of chaplains required will continue to increase.

"That we are behind in our procurement program is a known fact. Requisitions for chaplains are being received, which cannot be filled immediately. We need 859 additional chaplains today. Of these, approximately 350 are needed by the Air Force and 509 are needed by the Army Ground Forces and the Army Service Forces. It should be stated that these chaplains should be under 45 years of age for duty with combat troops. At present we have no vacancies for those over 50.

"On a month to month basis, there are several denominations or church groups which have kept pace with the expansion of the Army and have supplied chaplains according to the procurement schedule which we have prepared. Two groups, the United Presbyterian Church and the Unitarian Church, however, have gone beyond this schedule and have already filled their entire 1943 quotas. The efforts and example of these groups are, indeed, laudable. Others have fallen slightly short of the month by month procurement schedule. Among the denominations which on a month to month basis are either slightly ahead or are keeping pace with the procurement schedule are the following: Baptist (South), Presbyterian (U. S.), Reformed Church in America, and Jewish. Among those which have almost maintained their schedule are: : Lutheran (Mo. Sy.), Protestant Episcopal and Baptist (North).

"Several Church groups have been lagging in the matter of procurement. Some to a greater degree than others. In this category are the following: Methodist, Lutheran (NLC), Presbyterian (USA), African Methodist Episcopal, Colored Methodist Episcopal, African Methodist Episcopal Zion, and Roman Catholic.

"The problem of procurement is increased due to the losses the Corps sustains through deaths, resignations, and reclassification for physical reasons. During the month of July, 35 chaplains were lost due to various reasons and causes. Since Pearl Harbor 33 chaplains have given their lives in the service of the Army. All of these, of course, have to be replaced."

Chaplain Arnold pointed out that the War Department has been most generous in providing Chaplains with necessary equipment to carry out their ministry, and he presented abundant evidence to prove that the American soldier is grateful for such provision. "The Chaplain," he said, "by the terms of the Geneva Convention, is a non-combatant. He carries no weapons except spiritual weapons, but he marches side by side with those who are armed in order that he may always be available to serve his men." He pointed out that the duties of Chaplains lie in four fields: First, those strictly Religious, with reference to the sacramental aspects of their various Churches; Secondly, Pastoral, a direct ministry to the men; Thirdly, Educational, with, of course, a religious background, and, Fourthly, Cultural. "There isn't much opportunity for this in active warfare," Chaplain Arnold said, "but we do find Chaplains helping with concerts, organ recitals, and entertainment programs in hospitals."

A member of the press group asked Chaplain Arnold if he felt that a Church should urge its clergy to become Chaplains when it would mean definite loss to parishes and people at home. The reply was that "clergy are needed for the Army at no matter what cost to the local parishes. Rob the parishes, if necessary, but put clergy in the Army to minister to men who are suffering tremendous hardship, and are facing death."

Speaking privately to the Episcopal Church representative present, Chaplain Arnold said, "Your Army and Navy Commission is doing a great job. All I want to see is that you keep it up. You were out ahead for a time, and you can get out there again."

50th Anniversary To Be Celebrated

Church Divinity School Opens 51st Year on September 20

Berkeley, Cal.—With five applications already received, the student body of the Church Divinity School will be almost normal on the opening day of its 51st year, September 20. During the summer session, ten students were registered.

The Jubilee volume, with fifteen essays on the topic of Christianity and the Contemporary Scene, edited by Randolph C. Miller and Henry H. Shires, will be published by Morehouse-Gorham in October. This publication is part of the celebration of the fiftieth year of the school, the exact date of which is October 18.

As part of the Jubilee, Dean Shires has announced a campaign to raise additional funds for the support of the school. Two appeals are being made: (1) for capital funds to add to the endowment, and (2) pledges of $10 per year by all lay people and clergy interested in providing for the education of the clergy of the future. An interesting historical brochure has been prepared, and it may be had by writing the school, 2451 Ridge Road, Berkeley 4, Calif.

During the fall quarter Dr. Miller will teach the introductory course in philosophy of religion for the Pacific School of Religion. This course was previously taught by Dr. John C. Bennett, who has accepted a professorship at the Union Theological School in New York City.

The Church Divinity School is also cooperating with the other seminaries in the Post-War Reconstruction Curriculum, which is providing special courses for Christian reconstruction in Europe and Asia at the close of the war.

Private Geberlein was graduated from Vassar in 1936 and attended Columbia University's Teacher's College, and later completed a course at Gaines Business College.

Private Prentiss' family have been pioneers in the Carolinas since 1803, where she is a member of the DAR. She received her B. S. degree from the College of Charleston, and her religious training at the New York Training School for Deaconesses.

500 PRAYER BOOKS SENT TO WAR PRISONERS IN JAPAN

New York, N. Y.—The S. S. Gripsholm, sailing from New York to exchange prisoners of war in the Orient, carries 500 copies of the Episcopal Book of Common Prayer. The Rev. Dr. Almon R. Pepper, executive of Episcopal Church work in Social Relations, says that when War Prisoners' Aid of the YMCA learned that they would be given some space on the Gripsholm to send religious education and recreational material to prisoners of war in Japan, they decided that the Book of Common Prayer would best meet the needs of all prisoners of war who are not Roman Catholic or Jewish. They communicated with the Episcopal National Council at Church headquarters in New York and asked if 500 copies of the Prayer Book could be supplied. plied.

Dr. Pepper took the matter up with the Bishop White Prayer Book Society of Philadelphia, and the New York Bible and Prayer Book Society. The Rev. W. Arthur Warner of the Bishop White Society agreed to provide 300 copies of the Book of Common Prayer and Mr. R. M. Pott of the New York Society agreed to provide 200 copies. Mr. Pott also added to this donation two Altar Service Books and two Priest's Prayer Books.

Roman Catholic and Jewish groups are sending their own liturgical books, under the auspices of the War Prisoners' Aid.

Dr. Peper comments, "Space on the Gripsholm was extremely limited and it is our hope that she will be able to touch at such points in Japan that the books can be distributed. It will not be of slight importance to get 500 copies of the Book of Common Prayer into the hands of American prisoners of war."

DR. WASHBURN APPEALS FOR 92 MORE CHAPLAINS

Boston, Mass.—"The Army wants 92 more Chaplains from the Episcopal Church during 1943," is the S O S just sent out by the Army and Navy Commission.

The Episcopal Church is one of the very few Communions which has kept its quota filled almost from the beginning of the war. The Rev. Dr. Henry B. Washburn, secretary of the Army and Navy Commission, is hoping that the 92 men needed may be found soon, so the excellent record achieved thus far may be maintained.

ST. PHILIP'S CHURCH RECEIVED MEMORIAL GIFT

Laurel, Del.—St. Philip's Church recently received a gift of $500 from Mr. A. H. Phillips as a memorial to his late wife, Maude C. Phillips, and the income will be used for a better care of the Altar. The gift is in the hands of the trustees of Diocesan property.

Vern Swartzfager visited the parish recently and helped to organize a chapter of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew and the installation service was held Sunday, September 12, with the following officers: Director H. W. Ralph, vice director George I. Spicer and secretary and treasurer Gardner Rogers. Their first project is to see what can be done for a number of church children who live in the country.

The rector of St. Philip's, the Rev. R. Y. Barber, has resigned as the priest-in-charge of All Saints', Delmar, and he will devote the released time to strengthening the work as it centers about St. Philip's. One of the things he is anxious to see organized in Laurel is a local welfare society which will be something more than a name. For the last seven years a small and urgent work has been done by him through "St. Philip's Welfare" organization but it never has been large enough nor had income enough to really do the work needed in order that adequate relief was given.

A HERALD OF THINGS TO COME

At a time when the Church faces new opportunities and General Convention is to consider the program for the future, the dioceses and districts have accomplished a new record of achievement measured by the percentage collected on Expectations to meet the Missionary Budget.

In the total amount paid, the percentage of the amount due that is paid, the number of dioceses and districts paying 100% or more of the amount due and the percentage of the total Expectation paid to September 1, the present report has never been duplicated, although, of course, the total given is far, far below what it was a decade ago.

As this is Convention year a comparison with 1940, the last Convention year, will be found interesting and, we believe, helpful.

| | September 1, 1940 | September 1, 1943 |
|---|---|---|
| Amount due | $871,407.00 | $890,932.00 |
| Amount paid | 778,714.21 | 920,443.08 |
| Per cent of amount due paid as of September 1 | 89.3 | 103.31 |
| Dioceses paying 100% or more | 47 | 72 |
| Per cent of total Expectations for year | 52.1 | 60.2 |

Faithfully yours,

Lewis B. Franklin, Treasurer.

7 September, 1943.

Almighty God, whose loving hand hath given us all that we possess; Grant us grace that we may honour Thee with our substance, and remembering the account which we must one day give, may be faithful stewards of Thy bounty; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

FIRST CLERICAL CONFERENCE HELD IN MISSISSIPPI IN FAVOR OF UNTY

Majority in Favor of Unity

Aberdeen, Miss.—Headliners at the first clerical conference of the Diocese of Mississippi, just held at All Saints' College, Vicksburg, were Dr. George B. Myers of Sewanee, Rev. A. B. Keeling of Jackson, and Rev. Warwick Aiken of Pass Christian. Bishop Duncan Montgomery Gray led the informal conference, explaining that he did not want the clergy to work under him but rather with him.

Dr. Myers presented "Distinctive Christianity" as an Anglican edition of New-Orthodoxy, Dr. Warwick Aiken led an evangelical and devotional approach to "The Forward Movement and Conversion". Rev. A. B. Keeling presented carefully the needs of his race today in the South, asking for justice in education, employment, law courts, and citizenship. A group discussion found the majority indorsing his suggestions.

Rev. Holly Wells of Laurel presented a serious paper with delicate humor on pastoral Christianity as the alternative to proxy religion. Rev. Homer E. Bush of Brookhaven and Chaplain C. G. Minton presented the church's military work.

Rev. E. L. Malone of Clarkdale scored "Basic Principles" and opposed unity with the Presbyterians. Rev. Charles G. Hamilton of Aberdeen declared that it would be intellectually dishonest and spiritually dangerous to break off negotiations now. Dr. Myers warned that while he stood for our historic heritage, we might become a mere sect instead of a catholic Church if we close the doors to union. After discussion, led by the Bishop, it was evident that a majority favored unity.

RELIGION IMPORTANT IN THE NAVY

Washington—Religion holds an important place in the life of the Bluejacket of the U. S. Navy, according to Rear-Admiral William Brent Young, Chief of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, who returned recently from a visit to naval units in the South Pacific.

Discussing his tour of observation with the fleet and at advance bases, Admiral Young said: "I became intimately acquainted with the splendid work being carried on by the Chaplain Corps. These valiant and often unsung officers furnish not only spiritual guidance in the usual sense, but they perform modern miracles in maintaining the highest type of morale.

"Your Navy man knows that he can turn to the Chaplain for friendly help in any problem—whether he's worried about his God, his family back home, or his own chances for leave. Quiet, comforting, invariably a 'right guy,' the Navy Chaplain comes through—and brings his men through!

"I have seen it work in the Pacific. I know it's working throughout our fighting Navy in all parts of the world."

Central Committee Set Up

Called Church Committee for Overseas Relief and Reconstruction

New York, N. Y.—Presiding Bishop Tucker and members of the National Council staff have been conferring with Archbishop Athenagoras of the Greek Orthodox Archdiocese of North and South America, who also represents the Ecumenical Patriarch on plans for the rehabilitation of Orthodox churches and work in Greece after the war. In the discussions the Archbishop expressed gratitude for the sympathy and encouragement always shown by the Episcopal Church and especially at this time of deep tragedy for the Orthodox Church in Greece. He stated that the destruction of church buildings and institutions has been very extensive, but more tragic than this has been the depletion of the clergy and seminaries of the Church and the general exhaustion of the Greek people. He welcomed especially a suggestion from Bishop Tucker that the Episcopal Church would wish to join with the Orthodox Churches in America in standing shoulder to shoulder with the bishops and clergy of the Orthodox Churches in Europe.

Bishop Tucker disclosed that he is in correspondence with the Archbishop of Canterbury, with the intention of assuring that plans of the English Church and the Episcopal Church may be coordinated and may supplement each other. Also, because an interest in the Orthodox Churches of Europe is not an exclusive interest of Episcopal Church members, and because Churchmen will want to show their appreciation and sympathy for the heroic stand of the Churches in Norway, Denmark, Holland and other countries, a central conference committee called the Church Committee for Overseas Relief and Reconstruction has been set up by joint action of the Foreign Missions Conference and the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. Mr. Harper Sibley is chairman of this committee and it is here that the developing plans of the several Churches are being cleared and discussed.

Bishop Tucker revealed that conferences have been planned with officials of the Serbian Church in Yugoslavia, and other Churches which have suffered persecution. He said also that he has discussed these various problems with his Committee on Ecclesiastical Relations, and that he believes the most useful contribution that Churches in this country can make to rehabilitation in Europe after the war will be to assist the already existing religious bodies there to get on their feet so that they can adequately minister to the spiritual needs of their own people.

SUMMER CHAPEL HAS A WINDOW IN HONOR OF BISHOP OLDHAM

Twilight Park, N. Y.—Bishop Oldham is serving the Memorial Church of All Angels for the last three Sundays of the season. He was in charge of this chapel the entire season of 1942.

Returning this summer, he viewed for the first time a stained glass window, in his honor, designed and presented to the chapel by Miss Jessie Van Brunt. The window has three panels, the central one having a figure of the Good Shepherd, the left-hand one his coat-of-arms and his name, and the right-hand one a pastoral staff with the date of his consecration and the legend, "Living, Loving and Beloved."

The window was dedicated on the Feast of St. James, the Rev. Howard S. Kennedy, rector of Emmanuel Church, Little Falls, who was serving the chapel during the month of July, officiating. It was unveiled by General George A. Wingate.

UNITED CHURCH CANVASS

75 Churches to Participate in Buffalo

Buffalo, N. Y.—The Very Rev. James Cosby, Church of the Good Shepherd, announces that 75 churches of the city have signified their intention of participating in the United Church Canvass, November 14-21. Dean Cosby is chairman of the United Canvass Committee.

The united canvass idea, Dean Cosby says, has been endorsed by 19 Christian and Jewish bodies, and more than 300 communities used it last year. Some of the results reported were increased financial returns, increased church attendance, increased lay interest, and a gain in community interest in Church affairs.

On the committee with Dean Cosby are the Rev. George F. O'Pray, St. Clement's, Buffalo, and George T. Ballachey of St. Paul's Cathedral, together with representatives of the other faiths participating.

RELIGIOUS TRAINING

Carbondale, Ohio.—Many children who have not even known the Lord's Prayer, and a still larger number who have had practically no religious training of any kind, are among the 450 to 500 boys and girls in five small mining communities of southern Ohio who have been taught each week by the diocesan religious education worker, Miss Eleanor E. Gifford, with headquarters at Christ Church Neighborhood House, Carbondale. In spite of their lack of training she finds the children a responsive lot. Seventeen older girls form an active Girls' Friendly Society which has carried on a variety of useful activities and has been especially valuable in producing young leaders. From this group have come teachers for vacation Church schools running through seven weeks of the summer.

Dr. James Owens Offers Resignation

Accepted Reluctantly by Vestry After 27 Years of Faithful Service

Shreveport, La.—Dr. James M. Owens, D. D., rector of St. Mark's Church, Shreveport, is to terminate his active service in the ministry on October 1, 1943, or as soon thereafter as his successor can assume charge of the parish. His resignation has been accepted by the St. Mark's vestry with the greatest reluctance, and with every expression of appreciation for the years of faithful service he has given.

Coming to St. Mark's in 1916, Dr. Owens has seen it grow from a comparatively small but active group of Church people in a small southern city to one of the great parishes of the diocese and of the entire South. Its growth has paralleled and even exceeded the growth of Shreveport. The parish was never static but as soon as one major objective was accomplished it undertook another. First the parish house property adjoining the Church was acquired and finally paid for at a total cost of $95,000. While the plant expansion was interrupted by the problems arising from the disastrous fire of 1919, the Church itself was rebuilt and restored at a total charge of $85,000. Next the rectory on Elizabeth Street was erected and paid for. Recently St. Mark's has acquired and has fully paid for the site of a new Church-to-be in Shreveport, to be located in the growing South Highlands residential section. The erection of a new chapel, from which the new work can begin, is the next item on the program, which will challenge the vision of the new rector of St. Mark's, whoever he may be.

Dr. Owens was born in Henrico County, Virginia, in 1874, and graduated from Virginia Theological Seminary in 1897, after having previously graduated from Roanoke College, Virginia. He was ordered in 1900 by Bishop Randolph of Southern Virginia. After some early work in church settlement work in New York City, he took charge of Trinity Church, South Boston, Virginia. During that period he received several calls to important parishes elsewhere, but he felt a strong obligation to remain in his native State. He married Miss Bessie Green Faulkner, of South Boston, Virginia.

In 1902 he became assistant at St. Paul's, Lynchburg, later becoming rector of the Parish. During his five years there, a parish debt of some $29,000 was cleared away, the present organ installed at a cost of $8,000, and a fund for a parish house was well under way. In 1907 Dr. Owens became rector of historic St. Paul's, Norfolk, and during his incumbency there the parish made notable progress, building its parish house, and completely restoring the stately Georgian Church, erected in 1739. After four years in St. Andrew's, Louisville, Kentucky, he came to St. Mark's, Shreveport in 1912.

Throughout his life Dr. Owens has been active in numerous spheres outside of his parochial duties. He was an organizer of the Caddo Chapter of the Red Cross, and served in the Red Cross in the 1918-19 war period. He took part in the development of the tuberculosis sanitarium in Shreveport, served as a director of the Y. M. C. A., and in numerous other important civic and social prjects.

Equally active and responsive to calls from the Church and Diocese, Dr. Owens has held many important diocesan offices, all of which he has discharged with faith and devotion. He has been a delegate to the General Convention on three occasions, and is an alternate this year. He is a member of the Diocesan Council of the Army and Navy Commission, and of other important diocesan committees. His work with the Army posts in and near Shreveport has been signally successful and has won more than local recognition.

St. Mark's has had a great rector for 27 years, one who has left his imprint on the lives of hundreds of people, and whose name will be cherished and honoured, not only in his parish and diocese, but outside of that, in the great city of Shreveport which he has served so faithfully and so well.

LAYMEN'S SUNDAY TO BE OBSERVED OCT. 24

New York, N. Y.—The Laymean's Movement for a Christian World is sponsoring the observance of Laymen's Sunday, October 24. Bishop Tucker, through the Presiding Bishop's Committee on Laymen's Work, the Rev. W. C. Campbell, Director, is cooperating.

According to Wallace C. Speers, of the Laymen's Movement, the purpose of Laymen's Sunday is "to bring home to each individual layman, and to the Church, the ultimate reliance of Christianity upon the response of the individual, if Christianity is to become a relevant, practical force in the everyday life of society."

Last year reports were received indicating the observance in Churches located in 42 States, and of eleven denominations. Laymen conducted or participated in the services in most instances.

SPEAKERS ANNOUNCED FOR TRIENNIAL CONVENTION

Cleveland.—Charles P. Taft of Cincinnati; Mrs. Stephen K. Mahon of Toledo, a national director of the Girls' Friendly Society; Henry Pitt Van Dusen of Union Theological Seminary; Samuel McCrea Cavert General Secretary of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, and Dr. Wu Yi-fang, the distinguished woman educator of China, are among the speakers announced for the Triennial Convention of the Woman's Auxiliary which meets in Cleveland, October 2-11.

The Woman's Auxiliary is the official women's organization of the Church. Five official delegates are selected from each diocese and missionary district. If the full quota attended there would be more than five hundred enrolled. But attendance from most of the overseas districts is hardly to be expected this year.

The Auxiliary is distinctly socially minded. Among the subjects announced for discussion are such subjects as: Christians and the World Order; The American Scene; What Shall be the Role of Church Women in Developing a more Christian America?; The Church in Europe; The Missionary Enterprise in the Post-war World. The programs for the auxiliaries in the local churches for the next several years will be largely shaped by these discussions.

Dr. Wu Yi-fang

Dr. Wu Yi-fang of China is a good illustration of the modern, socially-minded church woman. She is the president of Ginling College and holds a Ph. D. from the University of Michigan. She is one of five presidents of the National People's Political Council of China. In 1936 she was a delegate to the International Congress of Women in Chicago and the Harvard Tercentenary. In 1938 she headed the Chinese delegation to the International Missionary Conference at Madras. She was one of the five women who attended the conference on post-war construction conducted by the Federal Council of Churches at Princeton in July. She is one of the ties between fighting China of today and our own nation.

While meeting at the same time as the 54th Triennial Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the U. S. A., the Woman's Auxiliary is autonomous in its own organization and power. It plans its own programs and develops its own policies. It is a splendid example of the blending of religious devotion with social vision.

The presiding officer selected by the national executive board will be Mrs. Edwin Allen Stebbins of Rochester, New York. Mrs. W. L. Van Schaick of La Jolla, California, will be the assistant.

Mrs. William G. Mussun of Cleveand is the president of the Woman's Auxiliary in the Diocese of Ohio, and chairman of the local committee on arrangements for the Triennial.

In past years this meeting has brought as many as 5,000 visitors. This year any attendance which burdens public transportation is being discouraged and it is expected that, outside of local visitors, only the official representatives will be present.

DEATHS

EVA DOWNING COREY
An Appreciation

Boston, Mass.—Miss Eva Downing Corey of Brookline, whose death occurred at Phillips House, Boston, on September 7, after an illness of many weeks, had been a prominent leader in Episcopal Church work in parish, diocese, and nation for thirty years. Her exceptional ability won for her the distinction of being the first woman member of the Diocesan Council and one of the first group of four women to serve on the National Council of the Episcopal Church. As president of the Massachusetts Woman's Auxiliary and head of the Women's Division of the Church Service League, she gave loyal service under three bishops of Massachusetts: the late Bishops William Lawrence and Charles Lewis Slattery, and the present Bishop, Henry Knox Sherrill.

Eva Downing Corey was born in the old Corey homestead on Washington Street, Brookline, where the family had lived for four generations on land which once included Corey Hill, a landmark of Greater Boston. She was one of the eight children of the late Timothy and Sarah Elizabeth Corey, the former being a descendant of Brookline's earliest settlers, among whom were a governor of the Massachusetts Bay Colony, a representative to the Continental Congress, and a captain in the Revolutionary War. The family name of Downing goes back to English forebears, for whom the noted Downing Street, London, and Downing College were named. She always continued to reside on the family estate, together with her sister, Miss Linda Emery Corey, who survives her. As a townswoman of Brookline, Miss Eva D. Corey served on various civic committees and was for a period the president of the Brookline Garden Club.

Miss Corey was a parishioner, almost from its beginning, of All Saints' Church, Brookline, which is built on a portion of the old Corey farm. Foundation for her remarkable achievements in church work were laid when, as a Sunday School teacher in All Saints', she decided to learn how to teach. Courses in pedagogy in the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, extension courses at Harvard, and attendance at Church summer conferences followed. In 1911, she became a district vice-president of the Massachusetts Woman's Auxiliary; in 1916, its secretary for adult education; in 1921, its president—an office she filled with great distinction until her resignation in January, 1941.

When a general reorganization of diocesan work was made under Bishop William Lawrence in 1921, Miss Corey was elected head of the Women's Division of the Church Service League, an inclusive organization whose success owes much to her initiative, sound judgment and clear vision. During those busy years, she also served as president of women's work in the Province of New England, and as the first president of the first National Board of the Woman's Auxiliary to the Episcopal Church. Infused with fervor for the cause of missions since the days of the great missionary exhibit called "The World in Boston", in 1900, she gave of her time, interest and substance to causes and workers in every quarter of the globe.

With a life-long interest in young people, Miss Corey was one of the founders and a leader in the Church Conference for Young People held annually for the past twenty-two years in St. Paul's School, Concord, New Hampshire. In addition to serving on National Church departments of finance and education, she was an active member of the newer commissions on college work and youth. "The Church Service League Book of Prayers", which has passed through five editions, was compiled and edited by her.

The Rt. Rev. Wiliam Lawrence, writing about Miss Eva D. Corey in his diocesan magazine, "The Church Militant", used the words, "strong personality, enterprise, integrity and intellisence, backed by a vital religious faith." He also spoke of her singleness of heart and high purpose. In a life active to the weeks of her final illness, Miss Corey made a signal contribution to Episcopal and also to inter-denominational Church life. Miss Eva D. Corey was greatly beloved by a wide circle of friends and had a great influence upon the religious life of many, and will be greatly missed in private as well as in public life.

DR. WILLIAM PATON

World Christianity suffered an inestimable loss on August 21, 1943, in the death of the Rev. William Paton, D. D., Secretary of the International Missionary Council since 1927, and joint secretary since 1938 of the provisional committee of the World Council of Churches.

Dr. Paton's rich experience, his breadth of vision, his fine scholarship, his abundant vitality and ability to inspire confidence, and his infinite capacity for work will make his loss keenly felt at every turn in the days ahead. To his many colleagues in the world-wide mission of Christianity his death will be a source of deep personal grief.

Dr. Paton was born in London on November 13, 1886, the son of John and Elizabeth Paton. He received his M. A. with honors from Pembroke College, Oxford, in 1908, and spent a further year of study at Westminster College, Cambridge, in 1911. His honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity was bestowed upon him by the University of Edinburgh in 1939.

From 1911 to 1922 Dr. Paton was Missionary Secretary of the Student Christian Movement of Great Britain and Ireland and went to India under the Y. M. C. A. in 1919. His brilliant record attracted the attention of those concerned with developing the organization of the National Christian Council of India, Burma and Ceylon, and he was invited to become its secretary in 1922. He held that post until the Ratvik meeting of the International Missionary Council in July, 1926, called him to a wider sphere as secretary of the International Missionary Council and editor of the International Review of Missions.

He assumed his new duties in the spring of 1927, and was intimately associated with Dr. A. L. Warnshuis, the secretary of the Council in New York, in all the preparations for the great Jerusalem Meeting of the International Missionary Council in 1928 and in the direction of the meeting itself. Ten years later, again in close association with Dr. Warnshuis, he planned and directed the epochal meeting held at Tambaram, Madras, India, in December, 1938. At the close of the meeting he edited the seven volumes that, in effect, sum up the fullest information and the best thinking of the era in the missionary movement, which came to an end with the beginning of the present war.

In his capacity as secretary of the International Missionary Council, Dr. Paton paid many visits to the United States, and hundreds of mission and church leaders came to know, to appreciate and to trust him. On several occasions he combined lecture or preaching tours with his trips. The last of these occurred in the first part of 1942 when he toured the country on a preaching mission under the auspices of the Federal Council of Churches.

His loss will be keenly felt in British church circles, as well as in the international Christian world, for Dr. Paton was active in many phases of British church life. In addition to his many and heavy duties as secretary of the International Missionary Council and of the World Council of Churches, Dr. Paton also carried official responsibility for Indian affairs and some other major matters for the British Conference of Missionary Societies. A member of the Presbyterian Church of England, he enjoyed the confidence of the Anglican Church and of the Free Churches as well. He was an ardent promoter of the newly organized British Council of Churches and one of the principal movers in a church group which is studying the post-war peace settlement. Recently he had been instrumental in securing a private gift of 24,000 pounds sterling to be divided among Christian Literature, the post-war work of the International Missionary Council, the World Council of Churches, the British Council of Churches, The China Christian Colleges, student evangelism in China. The multiplicity of his contacts with British governmental authorities was amazing, and in all of these he was trusted and most influential. He was in intimate contact with the refugee governments in London as well, and also with the various refugee groups of continental Christianity.

His publications, in addition to his extensive editorial work were many and varied. They include: Jesus Christ and the World's Religions (1916); Alexander Duff (1922); A Faith for the World (1929); The Faiths of Mankind (1932); Christianity in the Eastern Conflicts (1937); World Community (1938); The White Man's Burden (1939); The Message of the World-wide Church (1940); The Church and the New Order (1941); The Church Calling (1942); as well as numerous magazine articles. At the time of his death he was contemplating a volume on post-war mission policy.

Dr. Paton is survived by his wife, four sons and two daughters.

THOUGHTS FOR THE THOUGHTFUL

THOUGHT FOR THE— GUIDE . . . .

What God places first in the list of human responsibilities man dare not place last.

We build our ideals and they in turn build us.—Le Comte.

"Those who do God's will each day, God will hide under His wings when the storm breaks."

We cannot change the world by changing systems; we can only change it by changing lives.
—Rufus Jones

William Carey, face to face with the dark millions of India, exclaimed, "What is there on earth worth living for, but the glory of God and the salvation of souls?"

In nature there's no blemish but the mind;
None can be called deformed but the unkind.

We should be more anxious that our afflictions should benefit us than that they should be speedily removed from us. —Robert Hall

The achievements of Christianity are numberless. Even so they are not enough. The task still lies ahead. For every generation it must always be ahead. We cannot rest upon the gains that others have won for us. Glad and thankful for the past we must still take our place in the procession of witness and service determined and unafraid.

Lord Jesus who knew temptation, Thou knowest ours;
Lord Jesus who fought temptation, help us to fight;
Lord Jesus who conquered temptation, help us to win.
Lord Jesus who knowest man, forgive us;
Lord Jesus the perfect man, make us men;
Lord Jesus, Son of God, guide Thou our way. Amen.

As a lamp lowered into the impure air of a deep cave expires, so religious feeling dies away when shut up entirely within the narrow limits of self. It is in its nature expansive; it will struggle to spread itself abroad, to assimilate whatever of human nature is within its reach, to its own likeness.
—Daniel Wise

"We lose religion if we do not use it, just as we lose friendships when our interests and those of our friends no longer cross and recross each other. I know of no way in which faith may be kept in storage."

If God is Love, He is, by definition, something more than mere kindness. And it appears, from all the records, that though He has often rebuked us and condemned us, He has never regarded us with contempt. He has paid us the intolerable compliment of loving us, in the deepest, most tragic, most inexorable sense.
—C. S. Lewis, The Problem of Pain.

If you wish to keep Christ very near you, and to feel Him with you, the way to do so is no mere cultivation of religious emotion, or saturating your mind with religious books and thoughts, though these have their place; but on the dusty road of life doing His will and keeping His commandments.
—Alexander Maclaren

What brave holiness, what self-denial, what heavenly walking with God ought to be seen in those who are chosen to be a peculiar people, the representatives of God on earth, and courtiers of the New Jerusalem above! As the world waxes worse and worse, it becomes men of God to wax better and better. —C. H. Spurgeon

Faith might well throw up its hands in despair, as indeed, it often has done and does, in face of the sustained and deepening tragedy that has masked, and marred, the long story of human affairs. Only face to face with Jesus Christ, arrested intellectually and apprehended spiritually by a unique and otherwise inexplicable phenomenon, can a man look steadily at his fears and hopes, and say, with certainty born of spiritual insight, "God is love."

A Call to the People of America To Keep Step With Our Gallant Men

Broadcast September 14 from Algiers, North Africa

BY THE REV. DR. WILLIAM BARROW PUGH,

Chairman of the General Commission on Army and Navy Chaplains

In my visit to the various theaters of war I have found the most unusual army I have ever seen. A few days ago I watched an unusual mess line. The guards, American soldiers, were at the head of the line. They were in the same line, to receive the same food, as the prisoners of war. An Italian chaplain, himself a prisoner of war sationed there to minister to his own countrymen, noting my interest, turned to me with a comment in Latin which literally translated means, "You cannot wrestle with a people like that!" What a commentary upon the spirit of the American fighting men! There they were, giving an unmistakable demonstration of the fact that if the victory of democracy over despotism is going to be a blessing, it must lead to a gospel of peace and good-will.

For almost a month now I have been traveling through various theaters of operation seeing our American soldiers in every phase of their war. I have seen them with absolute recklessness and invincible determination setting forth on their bombing expeditions. I have seen them shortly after they have completed their missions. I have watched members of the ground forces, the mechanics, the technicians, and the truck drivers, without whose exacting work there could not be the effective bombing which is taking place today. I have witnessed the careful and deliberate way in which the various units are preparing for the land attacks which lie ahead. I have seen battalions of Negro troops with the joyous characteristics of their race completing with fidelity the important tasks assigned to them. I have seen officers and men charged with highly specialized tasks giving unmistakable evidence of their ability to handle the arduous work which is theirs. I have seen men in the hospitals slowly recovering from the wounds of battle, girded to bear their sufferings by the grim determination and hope, that the healing minitry given by faithful doctors and tireless nurses will soon enable them to take their places in the ranks again with their comrades. I have seen men tenderly laying the remains of a fallen comrade into the ground as taps sounded its solemn requiem. I have seen these Army men in all stages of their work and in all branches of their service. I am very certain that those who are listening to me are asking, What are they thinking?

For one thing, they are thinking of home. Home, wherever it is in the United States, still remains to them the most sacred place in this whole wide world. Home is where their thoughts and hopes and loves are. Mothers, fathers, sisters, brothers, wives, sweethearts of America, you are constantly in the hearts of your men. Through the heroic efforts of our efficient transport service, your letters are now arriving much more quickly than a few months ago. And how those letters are appreciated! Try to include snapshots when you possible can. I wish you could have seen the joy of that farmer lad from Ohio when he opened a letter and found a snapshot of his father and mother, standing with milk pails in their hands. Or the pride of that young husband as he saw the picture of his sturdy son celebrating his first birthday. Many of the men have special wallets for their pictures, and when they begin to show them you have to see every single one. Make this a commandment: Keep writing to your men. Remember the little gossipy items, the cheerful news, the pleasant things, forgetting as much as possible the bitter or tragic element and, above all, send a few pictures.

But the big thing which these men are thinking is the gigantic task which has brought them over here. I have never seen men so determined that a task be completely and successfully accomplished. There is no boasting, there is no bragging, but just that quiet, dogged determination that every obstacle be overcome, and every barrier be swept away, that stands between them and final victory. You never saw such team work. Every man, every outfit, every branch of the service is working as one unit, ready to give everything it has. As the enemy is being struck, you may be very sure that he is thoroughly aware that he is being struck hard—by one solid impact of determined manhood, ready to give everything it has for the final and inevitable victory. Is it any wonder that in such an atmosphere of united endeavor, the men are asking me very pointed questions about you folks back home?

These questions have sometimes been a bit embarrassing. They want to know whether you are doing your duty—by saving your tires, by saving gasoline, by observing the ration rules, by being faithful to your work in all things great and small—which will mean victory in the present struggle. They know it is not easy to be heroic in peaceful civilian surroundings, and to get the feel of contributing to national victory while at home, in factories, mines and shops, but they also know that the whole outcome of the present struggle stands or falls with you—upon what you do, and how much you accomplish. They are confident that you will not let them down. They are so very anxious whenever there is the slightest indication that the home front is not completely united.

Because of the peculiar responsibility which is mine as Chairman of the General Commission on Army and Navy Chaplains, to confer with the Chaplains and to survey the religious work throughout all branches of the service, I want now to emphasize two things.

First, the work of our Chaplains with the armed forces. During the past month I have met over 75 per cent of the Army and Navy Chaplains in the various theaters of operations that I visited; ordained ministers of all faiths, who are charged with the specific responsibility of ministering to the religious needs of the men. I wish I could tell you of some of the examples of the self-sacrificing work of these Chaplains. I have already seen enough to know that when the history of the achievements of this war is finally written, it will contain no more heroic pages than those upon which are inscribed the consecrated work of the Chaplains.

Somehow I have the feeling that the work of these Chaplains is not being sufficiently appreciated by the Churches back home. I urge you to think of these ministers of yours. Remember them in your prayers. While dozens of Chaplains have told me they have received evidences of the devotion of their own Churches, there has been an altogether too large a number who, according to their own statements, have been almost forgotten, and who have reminded me that their Churches and fellow ministers have apparently followed the principle of "out of sight

HAVEN . . .

By J. W. KENNEDY

A FLOOD of memories, mingled good and bad, returned from the hidden corners of my mind the other night to delight me, for the most part, because whatever of hurt had once been in them had been filtered away through the porous portions of time. The occasion was the picture "We've Never Been Licked," which as entertainment was pretty far-fetched and disappointing. But for the glimpse of my old school (Texas A. and M.) it was priceless. The campus, the buildings, the cadet corps, even some of the traditions were not the same, but for me it was a two-hour re-living of days that meant a lot to me both positively and negatively. But my specific memories of part of my school days is not important save perhaps as an indication of certain life-choices which were influenced there. But a few moments devoted to the workings of memory and its influence upon us will be valuable. One of our chief regrets along spiritual lines is that we failed to remember. One of these days our memories will weave the narrative of our lives in colors for us to see as a whole or will confront us with the jig-saw puzzle picture of life all fitted together. The satisfaction or dissatisfaction with the picture woven as tapestry for the walls of our souls will depend, in large measure, on the remembering we have done as the threads for the weaving were gathered and stored. If you have read "Death Comes to The Archbishop" and remember the days of lingering illness before the Archbishop died, during which time he re-lived his entire life, you will have a feeling about memory and its function that will be most helpful.

PSYCHOLOGISTS tell us we never really forget anything but when we appear to have forgotten we have simply pushed the item deep into some mental crevice out of sight, but not out of mind. There many of them will stay until an inspiration or a chain of association—such as a movie for me, or a psychoanalyst, drags them into the light once again for enjoyment or regret. Memories are priceless treasures when they keep alive a love or an ideal; and loss of a loved one, be it temporary or permanent, is often made bearable by what memory is able to do for the one who is left behind. But to live upon memories is quite another thing. To eliminate the present and to live in the past is bad business and cuts one off from reality and has the possible end result in store of a mental disease known as schizo-phrenia. No, unless memory is harnessed to the present and to some concrete action or activity it will be to our souls as slow poison and to our minds a drag and to our hearts a choking flood which ceases not. A word of Jesus has always helped me when the temptation to live in the past grew strong, or when the longing for the good old days returned. (This last usually crops out when some present condition of failure or hurt or lack is acutely felt. It is a form of escape for our having to face the present.) But the phrase of Jesus is this: "Do this in remembrance of me." There is the substance of memory's worth—the inspiration from the past for doing something in the present. Unless memory is an aid to life on-going and still-growing in one way or another, it is a phony article which has duped us into using it.

THE AVENUES OF MEMORY are numerous and we should like to walk down all of them but there is time for only a few thoughts on ways to use memory.

Keep helpful memories fresh.

Keep to the habit of recalling each past day for guidance and correction and inspiration for the day now being lived.

Keep the good memories in a place of easy access.

Place the bad memories out of reach through facing their evil and their hurt.

Keep in remembrance what Jesus did and said as the sum total of all our doing. Remember not to forget Him at any moment from dawn to dawn.

A Civilian in an Army Camp

By RABBI MORRIS ADLER

I WAS PRIVILEGED to spend a week in one of the great military camps of America at the invitation of the National Conference of Christians and Jews. I was a member of a trio consisting, in addition to myself, of a Catholic professor of philosophy, and a distinguished Protestant minister. We spoke at five to eight meetings daily to thousands of men, reaching in the course of twenty-six meetings every man on the post.

Our subject was "America's World Task". We felt it was important to discuss the place of America, not alone in the war but in the reconstruction of the shattered world after the war. The Army authorities agreed and made possible our presence at this camp. The physical health, the military training and fitness of the young men in our armed forces are requisite for victory. The thoughts, the feelings, and the attitudes of these same soldiers will determine the nature of the peace to follow the hostilities. For it must be recognized that the Army comprises not only today's soldiers but tomorrow's civilian leaders and citizens. Therefore, we spoke of the greater objectives beyond the defeat of the enemy which grow out of the very essence of the American spirit and way of life. We spoke, too, of the pattern of national unity which we must develop on every front—a unity uncoerced and uncompelled—yet the invincible unity of a free and indivisible people. There are forces and people here and abroad seeking to divide us, to deepen the chasms and widen the breaches between groups of religious faiths. The greatest element in the American dream is the aspiration to make of the social, cultural, and religious differences which characterize the varied population of America, a source of national strength and an opportunity to enrich our common life with the stimulus and inspiration that comes from these very divergences. America believes that our many differences can be engirdled with an unbreakable chain of a common national destiny and purpose.

MORE ELOQUENT than the words spoken was the symbol created by the presence on the same platform of three men representing the major faiths of the land. Their presence testified to the underlying community of American interest and will. The technique of presenting a triad of speakers of various faiths is not novel. It has often been employed at meetings in civilian life. Speaking in the Army camp, however, my colleagues and I enjoyed two important advantages. First, we reached the whole population of the post. To civilian meetings dedicated to good will there usually come people who are sympathetic to the purposes of the meeting. People of deep-seated prejudices are not generally to be found in attendance. In the Army we reached all. Many undoubtedly were impregnated with profound social and sectional prejudices and racial and religious bigotry. We had the opportunity to address them as well as those who had a more wholesome attitude toward those who differed. Secondly, we came with the full approval and cooperation of the commanding officer and thus our words became invested with greater prestige and authority.

WE LIVED the whole week in the barracks. We mingled with the men and met literally hundreds of soldiers every evening in seminars and personal conferences. We also had a number of meetings with the fourteen chaplains of the various faiths who are stationed there. My impressions may be quickly summarized. One, I was greatly impressed by the youthful appearance of our soldiers. We have a young Army. It was often difficult to realize that one was addressing not a high school assembly, but a multitude of fighting men. Too, the morale was exceedingly good. Look for no "rah-rah" spirit or boyish cheering. The men realized that this is not a game, but they are there for as serious a purpose as any group could be mustered. The men expressed no defeatism nor any futile rebellion at a destiny which pulled them out of their normal pursuits and placed them in uniform. They accepted the inconveniences and disciplines as necessary conditions. A boy whom I visited in the guardhouse, where he was imprisoned for some minor infraction of the regulations, said to me, and I believe it to be typical, "I had it coming to me". Three, ours is a clean Army. There are serious dangers that arise whenever so large a group of men is gathered and has to live in isolation from the usual social opportunities and contacts. The commanding officers showed me statistical reports of the health of the Army. In none of the previous wars did America have an Army as free from infectious and social diseases. Four, the free and friendly disposition of the men impressed me greatly. While military discipline is pervasive and frequently rigid, it has not destroyed the innate good nature and sportsmanship of the American boy. As they gathered in the chapels or the post exchange stores or in the recreation halls, they were typical American boys with the buoyancy and ease of manner which are so typical of American youth. Five, the chaplains are trying to discharge their responsibilities with earnestness and devotion. Not the least important task of the Chaplain is to bring the personal, the spiritual, the friendly touch into the vast impersonal organism of Army life. This the chaplains are doing by giving of themselves unsparingly, whether on duty or off duty. Many boys shall return to their homes with a more sympathetic attitude toward synagogue and church because of the friendly hand and voice of a chaplain in the Army.

I was intensely interested, of course, in the Jewish boys and their adjustment to Army life. I spoke to great numbers of them every evening of the week. Some of them are intensely troubled by the conflict between military exigencies and the traditional observances which they were accustomed to follow. Quite a number of them came to speak to me to express their uneasiness at the things they are compelled to do on the Sabbath and the foods that they must eat. I pointed out to them that tradition takes into serious account such emergencies and extraordinary situations as war and is considerably more flexible in such a time. It was my desire to free them from any oppressive consciousness of sin and yet not encourage them to accept in a sanguine and easy manner the complete breakdown of Jewish law. I urged the boys to deny themselves some particular type of food, and

The Proposed Basic Principles For Merging The Episcopal Church With the Presbyterian Church

Has the General Convention power to change, or to set aside, the Apostolic Threefold Ministry of the Holy Catholic Church? And if these "Basic Principles" were accepted, what would the Episcopal Church then be?

By THE RT. REV. WILLIAM T. MANNING

"But continue thou in the things which thou hast learned and has been assured of, knowing of whom thou hast learned them."

II Timothy III, 14.

THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH is facing this time a most grave and serious situation. In the midst of the present World Tragedy and Crisis, when the whole thought and strength of the Church ought to be centered upon its spiritual work and ministrations, an issue is being forced upon us which is creating division and disunity in the Church, and is bringing distress, apprehension, and dismay to great numbers of our faithful clergy and people.

I refer to the Proposals termed "Basic Principles" now presented by our Commission on Approaches to Unity, to merge the Episcopal Church with one of the several Presbyterian Churches in the United States. These Proposals are strongly opposed by many in the Presbyterian Church who recognize their artifiiciality and unreality, and in our own Church cannot possibly be accepted by any who wholeheartedly believe the principles and teachings of the Church as set forth in our Prayer Book. I yield to no one in respect and esteem for our brethren of the Presbyterian Church. I honor them truly for their forthrightness and for their loyalty to their convictions, and I know that many of them realize that if organic union is to be achieved between the two Churches it will have to rest upon agreements far more real, and more forthrightly stated, than those now suggested by our Commission on Approaches to Unity.

WITH THIS SITUATION before us, I speak with deep sense of responsibility as a Bishop of the Church, I speak in behalf af the peace and unity of our own Church, and I speak also in behalf of the cause of Christian Reunion, for these Proposals as now presented are not unifying Proposals, they are divisive and disruptive Proposals, as the present situation all too fully shows. It is to be noted that our Commission on Approaches to Unity is itself not united as to these Proposals; some of the members of the Commission are presenting a Minority Report which takes grave issue with the Proposals of the Majority Report. I commend this Minority Report to your careful attention.

Our Lord and His Apostles founded the Church, and the Ministry of the Church has come down to us in the Threefold Order of Bishops, Priests, and Deacons.

The Episcopal Church holds this belief as to the Ministry of the Church in common with all the historic Catholic Churches of the World, both of the East and of the West, in common with the whole Anglican Communion throughout the World, in common, that is, with three-fourths of all the Christians in the World at this time. No one with regard for history can doubt that this has been the belief of the Holy Catholic Church from Apostolic days, and no one who understands the official formularies of the Church can doubt that this is what the Episcopal Church holds and teaches as to the Ministry. In clear and solemn words our Prayer Book declares that "from the Apostles' time there have been these orders of Ministers in Christ's Church—Bishops, Priests, and Deacons."

But the Proposals now offered by our Commission on Approaches to Unity cannot by any possibility be reconciled with the Faith and Order of the Holy Catholic Church as this has come to us "from the Apostles' time" and is declared and given to us in our Prayer Book. These proposed "Basic Principles" are contrary to, and destructive of, the principles and teachings of the Prayer Book as to the Apostolic Ministry.

These "Basic Principles" are expressed in ambiguous language. The Report uses words in a way which will mean one thing to Episcopalians and a different thing to Presbyterians. The words Bishop and Priest are used, but a careful study of the Report shows that the Apostolic Threefold Ministry is in fact abandoned and set aside.

THE whole Report is based upon the declaration that the Presbyterian Church "is willing to accept the Historic Episcopate while not prepared to accept a particular doctrine concerning it," and we are told by members of our Commission that in view of the terms of the Lambeth Quadrilateral, and of the willingness of the Presbyterians to accept "the Historic Episcopate", we are now bound in honor to unite with the Presbyterian Church. But a study of the Report and of the "Basic Principles" shows that the Presbyterian Commission has by no means expressed its willingness to accept "the Historic Episcopate". The "Historic Episcopate" means, and has always meant, the Episcopate in succession from the Apostles and in relation with the other two Orders of the Apostolic Ministry, the Order of Priests and the Order of Deacons. This is the only meaning that "the Historic Episcopate" can possibly have. This is the meaning that these words have, and have always had, in the Lambeth Quadrilateral. But the proposed "Basic Principles" show quite clearly that the Presbyterians have not accepted this.

In the proposed "Basic Principles" the office and work of a Bishop is to be no more than that of a Superintendent or Presiding Elder. The Episcopate is no longer to exist as an Order of the Ministry distinct from the Presbyterate but is to be equated with, and merged into, the Presbyterate. The local Presbytery is to exercise exactly the same spiritual duties and powers that the Bishop exercises, including the power to Ordain Ministers and to Confirm. Can anyone say, with truth, that this is "the Historic Episcopate"? In the official covering letter sent out from the office of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church to the constituent Presbyteries with these "Basic Principles" it was stated truly, and quite honestly, that "the office of Bishop as herein set forth is Presbyterian in its conception".

As to the second Order of the Ministry, the Priesthood, these "Basic Principles" are equally far from acceptance of the Apostolic Threefold Ministry. The word Priest is used but not in the natural and historic meaning of the word, the meaning which it has had always in the Holy Catholic Church and which it has in our Prayer Book. There is no assurance that "Episcopal Ordination" is to be necessary for the Minister who celebrates the Holy Communion. The Report gives the Presbyterians the impression that in the Second Ordination Sentence in the Prayer Book the word Priest has a meaning different from that which it has in the First Ordination Sentence, a gravely misleading suggestion, for there are not two grades of Priests in the Episcopal Church. The word Priest in the Second Ordination Sentence has exactly the same meaning that it has in the First Ordination Sentence and everywhere else in the Prayer Book.

IN THESE PROPOSED "Basic Principles" Confirmation ceases to be a Rite coming to us with Scriptural and Apostolic Authority. Its use is to be made optional, which means that it is to be of no importance, and when used it is to be administered either by a Bishop or by a "duly authorized" Presbyter. As the Minority Report says, "It is a serious matter to trespass upon the Holy Scriptures and to break with nineteen centuries of Christian precedent by separating the Rite of Confirmation from Episcopal administration but in this case the Rite itself is further emasculated by allowing the laying on of hands to be purely optional . . . The name Confirmation is retained in the Basic Principles but the thing itself is abandoned".

As to the third Order of the Apostolic Ministry, the Order of the Diaconate, these "Basic Principles" frankly propose that it shall disappear entirely and shall be merged with the Presbyterian "Licentiate". The Licentiate in the Presbyterian Church is not an ordained minister at all but corresponds to our "Lay Reader". One member of the Commission on Approaches to Unity, the Chancellor of the Diocese of Michigan, in his published defence of these "Basic Principles", says definitely that the question for us to consider "is whether the Diaconate, as we have it, is inherently worth preserving"—but the Prayer Book teaching is that "from the Apostles' time there have been these Orders of Ministers in Christ's Church—Bishops, Priests, and Deacons".

AS WE STUDY these proposed "Basic Principles" we may well ask,

First—Has the General Convention power to change, or to set aside, the Apostolic Threefold Ministry of the Holy Catholic Church?

Second—If these "Basic Principles" were accepted what would the Episcopal Church then be?

I hope that every Deputy to the Convention will consider these two questions.

The answer to the first question is that the General Convention has no such power. The General Convention cannot change the Apostolic Threefold Ministry any more than it can change the Scriptures, the Creed, or the Sacraments. Over all four of these great Divinely-given Agencies of the Church, and over all of them equally, there is written a "Once for all". The Scriptures, the Creed, the Sacraments, and the Threefold Ministry of Bishops, Priests, and Deacons, all stand on the same basis and all come to us with equal authority. The New Testament Scriptures, the Creed, and the Episcopate were all equally brought forth under the promised guidance of the Holy Spirit, and the Episcopate was developed and established earlier than either the Canon of Scripture, or the fully formulated Creed. The view held by some today that modern scholarship has weakened the grounds for belief in the Apostolic Ministry is simply incorrect and not in accord with the facts. With the late Dr. Streeter's conjectures all before them, and having in view all that modern scholarship has said on the subject, the Committee on the Unity of the Church at the last meeting of the Lambeth Conference in 1930, a Committee of seventy-four Bishops, said in their official Report—"Without entering into the discussion of theories which divide scholars we see no reason to doubt the statement made in the Preface to the Ordinal that from the Apostles' time there have been these Orders of Ministers in Christ's Church—Bishops, Priests and Deacons."

I REPEAT THAT neither the General Convention nor the Lambeth Conference, nor any other Body, has power to change the Faith and Order of the Holy Catholic Church as this has come to us from the Apostles' time.

The answer to the second question is equally clear. If these "Basic Principles" were accepted the Episcopal Church would no longer be the same Church that it has always been. If these "Basic Principles" were accepted the Episcopal Church would no longer be the Church in which we were Baptized, Confirmed, Admitted to the Holy Communion, and Ordained to the Ministry. If these "Basic Principles" were accepted the Episcopal Church would no longer be the Church for which Seabury and White, and our fathers in the Faith who stood with them, made such sacrifices and endured such great trials to secure the Apostolic Ministry, and to which John Henry Hobart gave his great watchword—"Evangelical Truth and Apostolic Order." These "Basic Principles" are not really a Proposal for Union between the Episcopal and Presbyterian Churches, they are a Proposal for the Episcopal Church to accept essentially the Presbyterian form of the Ministry, and so become a Presbyterian Church.

I do not believe that these "Basic Principles" will be accepted by our General Convention, but if they were it is certain that the cause of Christian Unity would not be helped and that the Episcopal Church would be faced with actual crisis. The Clergy and People of this Church still believe that the teaching

Hopeful Christian News

Christianity is a religion of hopes. In times of extreme duress, the faithful religionist and particularly the Christian has to be content with crumbs of hopefulness. This is patently true today.

Within the last few days the press has carried some items that bring a degree of hopefulness to Christian hearts. These bits of good news are closely allied One is the report of the re-establishment of the Church Patriarch and Holy Synod in Russia by formal recognition from the Government. This is a step forward, as Alexander Werth, New York Times correspondent in Moscow cables that a prominent Soviet personality told him:

"We don't want any part of our population to think that we are trying in any way to deprive them of something they genuinely and deeply desire—religion. The Church has been patriotic and loyal and if in the past the Crurch was traditionally associated with the old regime and was almost automatically anti-Soviet, twenty-five years have made an enormous difference. Today the church has realized profoundly the national character and has fully 'accepted' us."

Mr. Werth goes on: "There is no doubt that the re-establishment of the church fits completely into that process of a revival of the Russian national tradition which has been going on for some years particularly since 1935. Many Russian unbelievers are very pleased with the reform because they like churches and church ritual as something belonging to Russian historical traditions. In a country where so much is said about the great heroes and statesmen of the past, including Ivan the Terrible and Peter the Great, there is an inenvitable interest in the Church."

This is more than hopeful news—it is thrilling news. Charge political expediency if you wish. Link this move with the dissolution of the comintern, and you still have the residue of a hopeful change for the best. We believe it to be more than a crumb of hopefulness.

To our way of thinking it proves the hardiness of Christianity. For better than twenty-five years the Christian religion in Russia has suffered all the exquisite tortures of persecution. It has survived and is beginning to function normally in the U. S. S. R. We are not implying that a religious revival has begun in Russia; or that the official attitude of the Government has become Christian. We do emphasize that there are encouraging signs on the horizon.

Coupled with this bit of news, is another flash that means a great forward step. The Archbishop of York, the Rt. Hon. Cyril Forster Garbett, is on his way to Moscow to confer with the Patriarchal Locum Tenens of the Russian Church, 76 year old Sergius. If there is a Christian leader in the world today who inspires confidence and is fearless in his approach to the realities of any given situation, it is Archbishop Garbett. We will await anxiously his report on this historic conference.

Great Britain, Russia, and the United States will each have much to contribute toward a lasting peace in the Post-War world. It is encouraging to note that a great Christian leader, in the midst of war, has gone to confer with our Christian brethren, in a country that for twenty-five years has in the minds of the unthinking been synonymous with the word god-less.

All of this is hopeful news. May we, as Christians, pray earnestly that out of this conference a firmer tie may come between our country, Great Britain, and the U. S. S. R.

There is a better chance for a Christian peace, when news such as the above is brought to the attention of thoughtful people in all three countries. It is hopeful Christian news.

Approaches to Unity

We publish this week a sermon by Bishop Manning, in which he disagrees with the Majority Report of the Commission on Approaches to Unity. This sermon was preached in the Cathedral. It made the headlines in the Press.

We disagree with Bishop Manning. At the same time we are willing to open the columns of the Southern Churchman to both sides on any controversial issue.

We suggest that after you read the Bishop's sermon, you take the Southern Churchman issue of August 14, or any Church paper which carried both the majority and minority reports of the Commission on Approaches to Unity, and read the recommendations of the Commission. We fear that you may not have the report, here is the resolution the Commission asks the Convention to adopt:

1. That the Joint Commission on Approaches to Unity be continued.

2. That the Joint Commission on Approaches to Unity be directed to carry forward its negotiations with the representatives of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America.

3. That any plan for the union of the two churches, before being submitted for final action to the General Convention be referred to the Lambeth Conference for consideration and advice.

Could anything be clearer? This is merely a request for further study and negotiation, with our Christian brethren of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America. To our mind it would be a direct slap in the face if we at this time cut off further deliberations with the Presbyterians. We do not share Bishop Manning's views, and think he and those who follow him are befogging the issue. We are for unity and not just a friendly pat on the back of other Christian groups. The latter says in effect "you are grand people, but our way is the only way!" We believe God's way is the only way that will lead to organic Unity.

Haymaking in The Swiss Alps

By

Marie Widmer

Hay, especially fragrant, from blossoms galore, glorious in the pastures above St. Moritz, Switzerland

In these days of stress when landlocked Switzerland is obliged to attain an always greater degree of self-sufficiency, haymaking in all altitudes has gained added importance. Winter tarries long in the Swiss mountains and the carefully housed cattle are to a considerable extent dependent upon the yield of the summer pastures.

Haymaking begins in July and continues without a break, if the weather is favorable, until September. The bountiful meadows in the valleys are cut first. Here the hay is stored either in lofts above the cattle-stables, which on some farms still adjoin the owners' living quarters, or in special barns. In a normally good season a second crop of shorter hay can be harvested in the lower regions during the month of August.

After the first hay harvest in the lesser altitudes is well under cover the time has come for the peasants in the mountains to start their work. Hay harvesting in the high alpine districts is attended by countless dangers and when he bids farewell to his family the mower knows that he will have to brave death many times a day. His scythe on his shoulder and carrying cramp-irons and huge squares of home-spun cloth or nets neatly rolled up in a bundle, he sets out before dawn. During the few harvest weeks a peasant only goes down to the village three or four times to replenish his supplies.

Where the sure-footed goat would hardly venture the alpine haymaker stakes out his field of endeavor. For on the steepest and rockiest slopes he finds the juiciest herbs.

Absolute quiet prevails in these dizzy heights except for the occasional whistle of a watchful marmot or the call of some wild birds. Bread, cheese and smoked meat are the haymaker's simple fare and when he is thirsty there is always a crystal-clear mountain brook nearby.

The newly mown grass is scattered and dried within a few hours in the broiling sun. As soon as it is perfectly dry it is carefully piled into a cloth or net, then carried down for temporary storage in one of those primitive chalet-type barns which one finds here and there on the steep mountainsides.

A scene of breath-taking beauty on the Beltner Alp, in the Upper Valais, Switzerland

In winter, when a thick mantle of snow covers the ground, the peasant climbs up to the place where he has stored his hay, first pulling, later carrying his sturdy wooden sled on his shoulders. Sometimes he is unable to take his sled as far as his barn and is then obliged to carry the heavy bundles of hay on his back until he reaches his vehicle.

In the Samnaun, in the most Eastern part of the Grisons, the hardworking men club together when the time has come for bringing down the hay. Weather conditions are carefully studied and the Council of the valley has to give the necessary permission for this truly dangerous expedition. When everything is in order heavily roped peasant-sleds padded with straw, to prevent any possible loss of hay, are hauled up the mountainside. Since the snow is many feet deep a few young men lead the way by shoveling a path. The difference in altitude between Samnaun, 6,050 feet a/s, and Alp Cevlas, where the hay has been stored, is about 3,280 feet. The ascent consequently is strenuous and the descent also is full of hardships. Often the sleds sink deep into the snow so that the brave workers have to dig them out again and again.

Bringing in the hay harvest in Switzerland is by no means accomplished after one uniform pattern. Different methods prevail in different parts of the land. Thus the peasants in the Lotschen Valley deposit their bundles of hay through an opening in the roof of their barns. A haymaker in the Emmental mountains loads his bundles on a crate specially fashioned for this purpose in order that he may have an unobstructed view for his going. In the lowlands generally the hay harvest is brought in on wagons drawn by horses or oxen.

In the Great St. Bernard region, in the Valaisan Goms, in the Engadine, as well as in parts of the Bernese Oberland, the peasants use lightly built "ladder-wagons" for taking home their hay. Before loading it they bundle it up in home-spun cloths, about eight bundles making a load. In the Lotschen Valley the price of a pasture is still figured according to the number of bundles of hay which it produces.

A glad event is the Hay-Sunday Festival which is celebrated in the middle of August and marks the height of summer life on the mountain pastures. First there is an impressive religious service in the nearest church or chapel where praise is fervently offered to God for all His bounties. Afterwards the haymakers, together with their families and friends, enjoy a happy get-together, also their favorite pastimes of singing, yodeling, alphorn and accordion playing plus dancing and wrestling.

PROPOSED BASIC PRINCIPLES

of the Prayer Book is true and that the Historic Episcopate—the Threefold Ministry of Bishops, Priests, and Deacons—comes to us from Christ and His Apostles. They cannot, and will not, accept these "Basic Principles".

Our efforts and our prayers for Christian Reunion must continue, but these proposed "Basic Principles" should be definitely rejected and there should be no vague and general resolution adopted which will afterwards be taken to mean that these "Basic Principles" have been in some measure endorsed. A new Commission should be appointed as the Minority Report urges, a Commission more truly representative of the whole Church and with clearer realization of the principles of the Holy Catholic Church as given to us in the Prayer Book, and the work of the Commission should be broadened to include approaches not only to the Presbyterians but to the Methodists, the Lutherans, the Congregationalists, and all others, both Catholics and Protestants, who believe in Jesus Christ as God and Saviour.

THIS IS A TIME for unity in our own Church and for fellowship in spirit with all Churches. As I said to our Diocesan Convention last May, our true course, as a Church, at this time, is to work side by side with the Presbyterian Church, and with all other Churches, and not to attempt to force measures for organic union, for which none of the Churches, our own included, are spiritually ready, and which if prematurely forced will produce not unity but disunity and disruption. Our true course is to be loyal to the teachings of our own Church, to do all that we can to strengthen the spirit of mutual appreciation and brotherly love between all Churches, both Catholic and Protestant, to cooperate with others in all good works to the fullest extent possible without compromise of conviction, and to strive especially to get rid of mere party spirit and partisan prejudice in our own Church. If we will do this we shall be helping towards the day when, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, organic union will be possible.

At this time, let us give our whole thought to the spiritual work and ministrations of the Church, and let us stand in fellowship with all Churches, and with all the Religious Forces of our land, to uphold our people in this great World Battle against Evil, Cruelty and Terror and to hasten the day of Victory for Right and Truth, that Victory which we pray shall bring true and lasting Peace, and shall open the way for this to be a better and a more Christian World.

on Sabbath to refrain from some activity not required by their superior officers, and thus symbolize their acceptance of the traditional regimen and discipline.

I FOUND, TOO, a new and deepened interest in Jewish religion. These young men who have a very keen awareness of the dangers to which they are destined soon to be exposed, saw religion now not merely as a matter of laws and prohibitions, but as a view upon life, as an affirmation of life's meaning and essential purpose. They plied me with questions that struck a much deeper note than the questions of a civilian group of the same age. They asked me to speak of the ultimate objectives and significance of religion, as a system of thought. None of the boys who spoke to me could tell of any flagrant act of discrimination which was practiced against him. Now and then, to be sure, there was a fellow soldier, and sometimes an officer, who seemed by his manner to indicate a lack of complete tolerance. All of the boys, however, testified to the fairness of the Army organization and to the desire of the Army to be fair and just to all men regardless of creed or color. I enjoyed a happy reunion with a number of Detroit boys to whom I was able to bring personal greetings and regards from their family.

It was a stimulating experience to meet face to face these thousands of youths who on the morrow are to go forth to fight and perhaps to die. It lifted one's spirit as one saw the bright, youthful faces, and heard their resolute voices. Any nation could well be proud of an Army of such timber. One felt like shouting across the oceans to the tattered and racked multitudes of the enslaved, "Hold on. Keep up your courage a little longer. The day of reckoning is coming. These young men will, under God's grace, by their vigor, sacrifice, and heroism soon deliver you."

But as one stood before these young men one also felt sobered and humbled. They are fighting not only their battle but also our battle. One wished upon his return home to say to every one of his neighbors in the city, "How utterly insignificant are the inconveniences and restrictions, the sacrifices and the taxes which have been introduced into our civilian life alongside of the great victory which must be won, and alongside of the sacrifices of these young men. Let you and I strive to do but this—to be worthy of our fighting sons."

THREE BOOKS ABOUT JESUS

If three different people write the life-story of one man, each has different things to tell. But the main facts are alike in all the stories—where the man lives, and the most important things that he has done.

Suppose the man they are writing about is a professor of geology. Geology is the story of the earth written in the rocks. The three people who write about the professor are his wife, his pupil, and someone who likes geology.

The professor's wife writes how kind and thoughtful he is at home with her and the children. His pupil writes that he is a teacher who makes you remember things. The one who likes geology writes what the professor has said about rocks and the earth-changes that have come during the long years past. All the stories of the professor are true—but how different!

Matthew, Mark, Luke and John—the four writers of the books called gospels—each told of the life-story of Jesus. But each showed the side of Jesus that he knew best.

The story told by these four men had much to do with making Christianity grow in the world. And it made something else grow which we call civilization.

Almost everything we know about the life of the Lord Jesus is found in these four books. If we want to be true Christians—or Christ-people—we ought to learn everything we can from the books of Matthew, Mark, Luke and John.

Matthew was a Jew whose place of work was on the road between Damascus and the seaports of Phoenicia. He collected money called custom duties from all who traveled on this highway. He was often dishonest and made people give more money than was necessary.

Matthew in turn gave all this money to the Roman rulers—except his salary, and the extra money which he dishonestly kept for himself.

One day Jesus Christ passed along the road and called to Matthew, "Follow me". Matthew gathered up his money and gave it all to the Romans; and after that he went with Jesus, and was one of His disciples.

Matthew wrote his gospel to show the Jews that Jesus was the King whom God had promised to send them. He told how Jesus was born in a family of kings. He wrote that when Jesus was a baby Wise Men brought Him rich gifts as they would to a king.

Matthew, Mark and Luke are called the synoptic gospels, because in all of them the life-story of the Lord Jesus is somewhat the same. John's gospel is different; he writes down long talks of Jesus, and tells about many wonderful deeds called miracles which are not mentioned at all in the other books.

Probably Mark was written the first of these four books; so if they were named in the right order we should say Mark, Matthew, Luke and John.

Mark is by far the shortest book of the four. The man who wrote this gospel was really named John; Mark, his Latin name, means "a large hammer". Mark's mother Mary lived at Jerusalem, and the Christians used to go to her house to pray together.

Probably Peter helped Mark to become a Christian in the first place, for in a letter Peter spoke of him as "Marcus my son". Once Mark went on a missionary trip with Paul. He turned out to be a poor missionary, for he ran away and went back home. But he was sorry afterward, and later was one of Paul's good Christian friends.

Mark wrote his story for the Romans. He showed Jesus as a strong, brave man, always working hard and doing things to help other people.

Luke was a doctor, and he had probably lived in Greece as a boy. No doubt it was Paul who had told him about Jesus.

Luke wrote his story for the Greeks. Greeks liked men who were gentle and kind and manly. So Luke wrote down the stories Jesus told about the loving father who forgave the prodigal son, the kind master who forgave his servants their debts and the great supper for the poor.

In the fifth book of the New Testament—Acts—Luke wrote about the wonderful things Jesus did for His people after He went back to His Father in Heaven. Read these five books and you will know much about the Saviour of the world.—Marian Madison, in Burning Bush.

Bishop Co-Adjutor Consecrated

Service Takes Place in St. Stephen's Cathedral, Harrisburg, Bishop Noble Powell Preaches Sermon

Harrisburg, Pa.—Preaching the sermon at the consecration of the Very Rev. J. Thomas Heistand, D. D., as Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese of Harrisburg, in St. Stephen's Cathedral, September 15, the Rt. Rev. Noble C. Powell, D. D., bishop coadjutor of Maryland, used as his text the admonitions of St. Paul to St. Timothy in II Timothy 4:1-5 to emphasize the importance and the opportunity of the work of the Episcopate in a world in which evil is rampant. He reminded the Bishop-elect that St. Paul used the words, "My Gospel", and pointed out that each minister of Christ must preach Christ as he himself has experienced Him. He declared that a bishop is a man of authority which comes to him from God through the Catholic Church, and that he must not use weasel words, but speak with the authority that comes from the Lord of Hosts. He is not an experimenter, but an expert, knowing exactly what he is doing and using tools which Christ Himself has given to him as His Ambassador. He is a leader who has seen the Light of the World and in its brightness has discovered the gold for men. He must never fail to realize that he has not chosen the Ministry, but remember that the Lord God hath sent him. He is to serve not only his diocese, but the whole world. Directly addressing the Bishop-elect he applied the words of St. Paul to St. Timothy, and adjured him to preach the Word, to be instant in season and out of season, and to make full proof of his ministry.

The Bishop of the Diocese, the Rt. Rev. Hunter Wyatt-Brown, who was to have been one of the co-consecrators, had been advised by his physician that it would be unwise for him to make the trip from Blue Ridge Summit to Harrisburg and to participate in the service, on account of his ill health. The Presiding Bishop was the consecrator, the co-consecrators being Bishops Sterrett, of Bethlehem, and Hart, of Pennsylvania. The presenting bishops were Bishops McClelland, of Easton, and Gardner, of New Jersey. Canon Paul S. Atkins, D. D., of York, Pa., and the Rev. Harry D. Viets, of Carlisle, Pa., were the attending presbyters.

The litany was read by Bishop Hart. Bishop Sterrett read the epistle, and Bishop Gardner read the gospel. The registrar was the Rev. John Henry Fitzgerald, of Brooklyn, N. Y., registrar of the Church.

The certificate of election was read by Lesley McCreath, secretary-treasurer of the diocese; the canonical testimonial by Charles L. Miller, chancellor of the diocese; the certificate of ordinations by Canon Clifford Woodworth French, bishop's chaplain; the consents of the standing committees by John I. Hartman, of Lancaster, and the consents of the bishops by Bishop Gardner. Canon Heber W. Becker, of Lancaster, was master of ceremonies, and the Rev. Charles P. James, of Columbia, was assistant master of ceremonies. Marshals were the Rev. Messrs. Stuart F. Gast, J. Moulton Thomas, John R. Leatherbury, Wayne M. Wagenseller, Robert C. Batchelder and Robert T. McCutchen.

The bishop's vestments were given by the Cathedral parish and members of his family, the pectoral cross was the gift of Mrs. Frank Payne, of Harrisburg, and the episcopal ring was given by the clergy of the diocese.

A priest of the Eastern Orthodox Church in his resplendent robes, the Rev. David Nakoff, of Steelton, Pa., was in the procession.

The Holy Communion was celebrated at an early hour by Canon French, to give opportunity for those who wished to make their communions, only the bishops, clergy, members of the standing committee and members of the new bishop's family receiving at the service of consecration.

Following the service a reception and luncheon was held in the Cathedral deanery.

SEABURY MEMORIAL, ABERDEEN, SCOTLAND, COMPLETED

New York, N. Y.—The Rt. Rev. Frederic L. Deane, recently retired as Bishop of Aberdeen, Scotland, writes the National Council that he is anxious for American friends to know that "The Seabury Memorial" in Aberdeen has been entirely completed. "This memorial has been built entirely by American subscribers," the Bishop says, "and while I cannot reach them individually, I do hope that they may be reached through the papers and magazines of the American Episcopal Church."

Bishop Deane reports a recent visit to the Seabury Memorial by His Excellency Mr. John Winant and Mrs. Winant, accompanied by the Chinese Ambassador and Mrs. Wellington Koo, "to acknowledge on behalf of subscribers in America the completion of the Seabury Memorial."

The Memorial consists of repair, restoration and decoration of St. Andrew's Cathedral, Aberdeen, in which Samuel Seabury, first American Bishop, was consecrated.

DATE OF CONVOCATION CHANGED

Sioux Falls, S. D.—Bishop Roberts has announced that the date of the annual Convocation of the Missionary District of South Dakota, to be held at Pierre, has been changed from Sept. 21-23 to Oct. 19-20 in order that the Convocation might have the benefit of the reports from General Convention.

Seminaries Unite Temporarily

Bexley Students Come to Virginia

Alexandria, Va.—The Virginia Seminary and Bexley Hall are uniting temporarily. The Bexley students and Dean Roach will go into residence at Alexandria at the beginning of the fall semester.

The Bexley men will live and worship with the Virginia Seminary students and take part in all Seminary activities. All courses, whether taught by the Virginia faculty or Dean Roach, will be open to men from both institutions. But the Bexley students will be candidates for Kenyon degrees, and Dean Roach will have charge of their studies and discipline.

The war-time decline in number of candidates for the ministry, the need of conserving all funds available for theological education and the shortage of clergymen for parishes, led the Boards of the two institutions to approve this arrangement enthusiastically. But it should be emphasized that this union is temporary. Bexley Hall will preserve its identity as the theological department of Kenyon College, and will resume its functioning in Gambier as soon as the situation permits.

CHURCH'S WORK INCREASING

Lakeport, Cal.—Mendocino County and Lake County make up an area of 6,000 square miles in the Diocese of Sacramento, in central and northern California. The Church's work has been increasing here although the region is entirely rural and suffers, like other rural districts, from exodus to industrial centers, great distances, shortage of gas and so on. The Rev. Edward Castledine, in charge of Trinity Church, Ukiah, has spent the summer at St. John's Mission, Lakeport, from which center he and his wife have been making visits for sixty miles around, holding week-day Church school classes and joining with other congregations for evening services. People share their cars and drive in to church from places eight to twenty-five miles away.

At Willits, an unorganized mission served from Ukiah, a new guild is active and services are held in a hall which the little handful of people have completely furnished as a chapel. At Trinity, Ukiah, the congregation is increasing, young people have formed a choir, the men have painted the church, the women's guild is growing. The whole region is one of great natural beauty and appears to be the abode of peace, Mrs. Castledine says, but there is hardly a house from which some one has not gone away to war.

Resolution On War Aims

Adopted by Men of Church of St. James the Less

Scarsdale, N. Y.—The whole world is now engaged in a titanic struggle to decide whether totalitarian serfdom or the democratic way of life shall survive. The totalitarians, seeking to establish a new world order, proclaim the inequality of races and the nothingness of man, the right of self-styled "super races" to dominate all others and of men in power to enslave the common man. This is a false and evil idea of man and his destiny.

The democratic principle, founded on the Christian conception of man, rests on reason, and the reasoning is perfectly expressed in the Declaration of Independence. "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the Pursuit of Happiness. That to secure these rights, Governments are instituted among Men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed." It is for the preservation of these principles that the Allied Nations fight.

These two doctrines of the rights of man are utterly irreconcilable and there can be no compromise between them. Men of all races, in every land, must be liberated not only from their physical oppressors, but from moral and spiritual confusion due to the infiltration of totalitarian ideas.

The unconditional surrender of our enemies on the battlefields must be followed by a spiritual crusade that will forever destroy the false totalitarian doctrine, and which will firmly establish the basic principles of democracy throughout the world.

The first step in this spiritual crusade is the making of a just peace. A just peace must make secure to every man, of every race, everywhere, those inalienable rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness with which his Creator has endowed him.

A just peace must acknowledge the right of all peoples to choose the form of government under which they shall live.

The march of democracy must go forward in the post-war years, curing imperfections or inequities in the peace, until the ideals of equality and justice, of the rights of man, and government by the consent of the governed, are universally accepted. Then, and then only, will there be an enduring peace, and man, under God, will pursue his exalted destiny.

THEREFORE, We, the men of the Church of St. James the Less at Scarsdale, New York, hereby adopt this statement of the principles for which our country and its allies are fighting, and hereby present it as the foundation for a just and lasting peace;

AND we hereby respectfully URGE.

1. That the Church solemnly proclaim these principles to all men everywhere.

2. That American educators instill these principles in the minds and hearts of all children, as the very foundation of our democracy.

3. That our Government undertake to train emissaries to explain the basic principles among all peoples in the post-war world.

4. That this declaration of war aims be presented to the next General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

RUSSIAN WAR RELIEF DIRECTOR

New York—Appointment of Fred Myers, public relations director of Russian War Relief since its inception in 1941 as the agency's national executive dirceor, was announced today by Allen Wardwell, chairman of Russian War Relief's board of directors.

Myers succeeds Arch Mandel, who resigned to accept an executive position with Community Chests and Councils, Inc.

Wardwell said that the directors of Russian War Relief have approved an intensified public relations program in support of the fund-raising campaign of the National War Fund, in which Russian War Relief is a participant, and of continuing drives for contributions of clothing, seeds, and other supplies.

Myers will administer that program, as well as the procurement and shipment of relief supplies to the Soviet Union, which this year have been delivered by Russian War Relief at a rate exceeding $1,000,000 worth a month.

Praise of The Chaplain

By a Cadet at Maxwell Field, Ala.

Reprinted in Kalends, the purely secular house organ of the Waverly Press, is the following item written by a cadet at Maxwell Field, Ala., and printed as a full-page spread in Preflight, the paper published by the Maxwell Field cadets:

"The Army, of course, is not an essentially religious organization. The cadet's life, however, like that of anyone else, would be empty and meaningless without a very definite spiritual guidance. And to provide that influence we have our church call and our chaplains.

"The inspiration that we get from our chaplain is far-reaching. He symbolizes consolation for those in trouble, encouragement for the despondent, and cheer for the sick. He is our link with home. No personal problem is too small for his attention, none too great for his untiring efforts in our behalf. He marries some of us. To others he is that special understanding friend. When everything seems out of focus, it is the chaplain who makes us realize the things that really count . . . ."

ASK FOR A FACTORY CHAPLAIN

The management of a large factory in the diocese of Worcester, England, is so impressed with the bishop's efforts to minister to his people where they live, reports the London Church Times, that it has asked to have a factory chaplain appointed and has offered a salary of 1,000 pounds a year.

Sponsor World Community Day

Women's Organizations and Various Denominations Urge Observance November 11

New York, N. Y.—The Woman's Auxiliary is sharing with other groups of Church women of various denominations in urging observance of World Community Day, November 11. Miss Margaret I. Marston, executive secretary of the Auxiliary, points out that "World Community Day fits in with the observance of November 11 as a Church-Wide Day of Prayer, which has been the custom of the women of our Church for several years, and also with the plans for Forward in Service and the follow-up of the Triennial Meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary."

Auxiliary leaders are receiving suggestions for the observance covering organization, committees, worship, publicity, radio, literature, program, luncheon, and other features which can be included to develop the greatest values of the occasion. Being distributed also is a booklet issued by the United Council of Church Women, on the theme, "The Price of An Enduring Peace", containing a worship service and program material for the day.

Twenty-seven women's organizations are sponsoring the observance, as well as eight of the foremost interdenominational agencies, such as the Federal Council, Foreign Missions Conference, Home Missions Council, International Council Religious Education, Missionary Education Movement, etc.

THE CHURCHES PREPARE FOR PEACE

Carlye Morgan writes as follows in the Christian Science Monitor (U. S. A.), August 4, 1943:

"If the methods used by the National Opinion Research Center at the University of Denver are reasonably representative, more than 80,000,000 Americans want their churches to take part in formulating the peace. The research center samples popular opinion in each geographical secton of the country, aiming at a proper proportion of 'rich and poor, young and old, men and women', and minority groups. Lately it put this question up for answer:

" 'Do you think that the churches should make plans for the kind of peace which should be established after the war, or don't you think this is a part of their work?'

"The votes came back: 'should make plans,' 63 per cent; 'not their work,' 33 per cent; 'undecided,' 4 per cent. Two out of three persons queried favored church participation in peace planning.

"This result reflects an awareness of the nature of the conflict between what Hitler called 'two worlds'. It displays, too, some understanding of the prerequisites of durable peace. Dr. Reinhold Niebhur writes in a recent issue of Fortune Magazine:

" 'Every great crisis in world history represents a breakdown both in the organization of civilization and in the life of a culture. It is a spiritual as well as a political and economic crisis.'

"And in a book by Dr. Henry M. Wriston, published late last week and reviewed on this page ("Challenge to Freedom"), the relation of the spiritual crisis of these times is restated: "No other source of freedom has ever been discovered; if we cannot accept its spiritual foundation, there is no foundation . . . Hitler . . . with swift intuition recognized religion as the enemy.' One of the 'Four Freedoms' is freedom of religion.

"Evidently a majority of free people recognizes religion as their friend, their ally, their support.

"But the churches had accepted responsibility for helping to plan the peace long before the research center switched on its green light. The scope and depth of inquiry being conducted among church leaders and laymen on post-war policies would amaze anyone who has not been fully aware of this encouraging development in public education, with its significant religious background.

"The work of church groups is by no means confined to conferences and discussion meetings, important as many of these are. Out of the organizations which promote such meetings there flows a stream of well-thought-out publications on peace questions. These include expertly prepared outlines to guide individual and group study, regular reports on group activities, bibliographies of important books on world affairs, and other guide-posts.

"One outstanding example of the churches' contribution to education is the programme called 'The Six Pillars of Peace'. This is the work of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. The wording of the 'pillars'—six statements of post-war aims —shows their authors to have been idealists guided by practical understanding of political actualities.

"Favorable comment on this programme has appeared in this newspaper under the signatures of such lay leaders as Sumner Welles, former Under-Secretary of State; Francis B. Sayre, of he State Department; Senator Joseph H. Ball, Governor Thomas E. Dewey, of New York. And the 'Six Pillars' have just been endorsed by leaders of the British Council of Churches.

"The endorsement shows that American and British views on post-war organization are moving in the same direction, even where some had expected sharp differences of opinion. Its effect will be felt far beyond the council rooms of religious leaders.

"Meanwhile the education of churchgoers as to the position of their country in the world promises to develop a political factor for peace which will be the stronger because based on a Christian concept of brotherhood."

DIOCESE OF FLORIDA

"The Diocesan Book of Property" Being Compiled

Pensacola, Fla.—The need of a more accurate, comprehensive and detailed statement of Church property in the Diocese of Florida than is shown by the annual compilation of parochial reports, has been apparent for some time, but, it took a resolution in Diocesan Council to focus attention upon this need and to create a determination to make the survey and file the data for easy reference and constant study by the actuary and the executive board.

The work has been begun by Frank P. Dearing, Sr., appointed by Bishop Juhan to do this arduous work. Already the completed pages are being inserted in the loose-leaf binder that eventually will be labelled "The Diocesan Book of Property". The printed forms that are being distributed to responsible persons in each congregation ask questions that are pertinent to the history of the property, its appraised value of land, buildings and funishings as well as the fire insurance coverage and the mortgage indebtedness, if any. The size of the buildings, the construction material and the use to which each building is put is also asked and space is provided on each sheet for a picture of the building, if one is available.

It is intended to have a separate page in the book for each building belonging to the Diocese or to the parishes and missions that constitute it. This means about 125 pages devoted to descriptions of buildings, including the fifty-five churches, the twenty-eight rectories, the twenty-one or more buildings used for Church School purposes, or as parish halls, and the dozen or so buildings not in use for strictly Church purposes.

It is planned to have pages in the book for description of the various pieces of property owned by the Diocese, or the congregtaions, upon which no building now stands. Properties being held for future extensions as well as property on which buildings formerly stood will be thus recorded and the possibility of loss through oversight averted. The Diocese owns two cemeteries in remote locations, from the adjacent site of which the building has been removed for use elsewhere or by fire, and the ownership of such properties as well as the responsibilities of protection and maintenance of these burial plots should be recognized and recorded.

The Diocese of Florida will be enabled to file for General Convention as accurate report of its holdings as it will be possible to make. Another valuable feature will be that from the information and pictures furnished it will be possible for a competent committee to study the insurance needs and make recommendations to those in authority. Another use to which these pictorial pages may be put will be publicity in diocesan papers so that those who live in the eastern end of the diocese as well as those who live in the western end of its 400 miles may know more of the whole field and its constituent congregations.

Young Churchmen Gather in Formal Meeting

The first formal gathering of the Young Cuhrchmen of the Diocese of Florida, representing all ages from 12 to 25 and all youth groups, was held during the recent Y. P. S. L. Camp at Camp Weed.

The meeting was opened with a service and talk by the diocesan chairman of the Youth Division, the Rev. Ben Meginniss. The afternon was spent in various interest groups where representatives were selected for the Youth Division. Harry Douglas, diocesan representative on the Provincial Youth Commission, gave a brief and most inspiring talk after dinner.

Bond-Lay-Away-Plan

Tallahassee, Fla.—St. John's Parish has begun what it calls a "bond-lay-away plan," and has secured gifts of war bonds and war savings stamps amounting to $900 since June.

It hopes to lay away, for use after the war, sufficient funds to increase the size of the church building and to provide better facilities for the Church School.

With over 500 communicants in the parish, and 300 Episcopal Church students at Florida State College for Women, the parish facilities are greatly strained. Also, St. John's is across the street from the chief hotel, and the attendance of transients is large.

No "drive" has been made, but the congregation is kept informed as to the weekly progress of the fund. All gifts are presented at the altar, and the rector, the Rev. Jeffrey Alfriend, writes a letter of acknowledgment to each giver. A chart, showing the growth of the amount from Sunday to Sunday, is posted in the Church vestibule.

The plan was originated at the June meeting of the parish council, with a recommendation to the vestry that it be put into effect. The vestry laid the responsibiliy of management upon the Laymen's League, whose president, Victor Johnson, named the plan committee, composed of Gordon Long, Barnes Hopkins, Palmer Munroe, Talbot Whitfield, Jr., and William L. Marshall, Jr.

The committee asked the cooperation of women of the parish, and Mrs. Elizabeth Cobb, president of the Auxiliary, secured the support of the six Auxiliary circles.

"The Chime", parish bulletin, makes frequent mention of the plan, calling attention to need for more pews in the church, and for more rooms in the parish house, giving the proper wording for the designation on the bonds, and reminding the people that they will be helping their Country as well as their Church.

Monthly News Letter for Service Men

St. Augustine, Fla.—Seeking an answer to the problem of keeping in touch with more than fifty members of its parish, who have entered the armed services and scattered to the four corners of the world, Trinity Church is issuing a monthly news letter for this purpose.

The idea was suggested by the acting rector, the Rev. Fred Golden-Howes, and the Laymen's League of the parish has undertaken the task of editing and mailing such a publication. J. T. Van Campen acts as editor, assisted by T. Guy Lucas and H. B. Symmes.

Assuming that servicemen are primarily interested in news from home, "Trinity News Letter" is designed to bring them information on current activities of their church and associates on the St. Augustine home front. The material is divided into brief items and paragraphs to encourage reading and an effort will be made to keep it in a light, cheerful vein. It is a mimeographed publication, printed on both sides of the sheet to save paper and mailing weight. A copy of the Church's honor roll was mailed with the first issue.

While considerable difficulty has been encountered in securing current addresses of the servicemen, many of whom are frequently transferred, through the cooperation of the Young People's Service League and Woman's Auxiliary a system is being worked out whereby it will be possible to check the mailing list completely each month.

Laymen's League Holds Annual Meeting at Camp Weed

LeRoy Johnson is the new president of the Laymen's League of the Diocese of Florida, succeeding H. L. Trezise.

New officers were elected at the recent annual meeting of the diocesan Laymen's League at Camp Weed.

At the opening session, the Rev. George M. Alexander, of Palatka, spoke on "What the Layman Can Do for His Parish or Mission," emphasizing the following points:

1. Attend church regularly and enthusiastically.
2. Bring your friends to church.
3. Be friendly to everyone.
4. Take and read at least one Church paper, preferably FORTH.
5. Carry Christ and the Church to your friends, be familiar with the parish program.
6. Look about the parish and see what is needed.
7. See that your parish takes an active part in the community.

Other guest speakers included Dean Ray V. Sowers, supervisor of education for Duval County; Chaplain Frank R. Wilson, of the Jacksonville Naval Station; LeRoy Johnson, and Millard Davidson, superintendent of the Industrial School at Marianna.

Bishop Juhan, at the closing session, called attention to the need for the missionary spirit in reaching others, and particularly the youth of the Church.

A CALL TO THE PEOPLE

out of mind".

Christians of America! This should not be. I plead with you, write to these Chaplains. Let them feel that there is really something in the tie that binds hearts in Christian fellowship. Remember that many of them have been in service for two or three years. It is so easy for even a minister to lose vital touch with the Church in such circumstances.

And particularly you ministers: If you have friends in the chaplaincy, write to them. They need letters from their fellow workers in the Kingdom of God. Tell them you think highly of their work. Tell them that whatever their days of weariness may be, their labors are not in vain in the Lord. Protestant, Catholic and Hebrew alike, they need not only the abiding strength and faith which come from an Omnipotent God, to carry on their sacrificial service of consecrated lives, but also they need to know that they are being thought of back home.

Second, what about the men themselves? Are they attending Church? I wish you could have been with me the other Sunday. About one thousand men were present to hear me preach. Believe me, no preacher in America on that day had a more inspiring service. How those boys sang the old hymns: "Holy, Holy, Holy," "Faith of Our Fathers," "Onward, Christian Soldiers!" How they listened to the anthem of the soldier choir, "Come, Thou Almighty King," and the beautiful solo, "The Lord Is My Light!" With what vigor did they participate in the responses! With what reverence did they bow in prayer! There were hundreds of such services being held at the same time all through these theaters of operation, some small, some large, all indicative of the response of American manhood to the worship of Almighty God.

Don't misunderstand me; I do not mean to convey the idea that all the men are going to Church. They are attending Church, however, somewhat better than they did at home. Popular Chaplains have large congregations, just as popular preachers do at home. Chaplains who are not so popular have the same results as they would have in civilian life. On the whole, among the officers and men there is a rich and abiding faith in Almighty God in the heart of the average soldier here, and the generals themselves, many of them devout Churchmen, are striving by precept and example to encourage in every way faithful Church attendance.

A week ago I stood in one of our cemeteries over here, facing the crosses, row upon row, where rested the bodies of those men who had paid the supreme sacrifice for you. About 75 chaplains of all faiths were there with me. In a simple service, and in the bond of prayer to the God of Righteousness, we paid tribute to the memory of those heroic men who had given their lives. It is in such united fellowship as there represented, that our American manhood here is courageously facing the future, looking to the certain day of victory, and to that final peace when free people everywhere shall work together to insure for the world the liberty and happiness that every man, woman and child so vitally deserves.

Friends of America! There is no clearer, more pressing call in the world today than that—the call to keep step with these gallant men of yours as they seek on a foreign soil to accomplish, at any cost, at any sacrifice, the great and worthy purposes to which they have dedicated their lives.

THOUGHTS FOR THE THOUGHTFUL

God can be loved through the love we show His works, and God can be served through the service we render to the humblest and most helpless of His living creatures. —Fr. A. Roche.

The final problem of human existence is the sinfulness of all men in the sight of God; and the final answer to that problem is a divine mercy which transcends, and yet does not annul, the divine justice. That, I believe, is the meaning of the Christian doctrine of the atonement.

—Reinhold Niebuhr.

When the middle-aged man is truly humble he is on the way to becoming great.

The only argument for Christ that no one can refute is Christlike character.

After all, the Jews have stood by the graves of all their oppressors in turn.

—Dean Inge.

God is always true to His servants. And He who became Man is still the Lord who rules our fortunes, justifying the confidence with which His people face life's demands, knowing that one fact is certain, God is with them to the end of the day.

This continuous influence of Christian character is one of the most ennobling and encouraging of all facts. The vast majority of Christ's followers are neither eloquent, nor rich, nor clever, but the least gifted of them can be greatly used of God when God has the whole of that person.

The astronomer finds his freedom only as he becomes servant of the stars. The farmer finds his fulfillment by keeping faith with the soil and the seasons. So we must honor life. The thrust of our will is essential, but it must be an obedient thrust.

—Dr. G. A. Buttrick.

To be with Jesus—need we fear it? To follow, where He has gone, is to travel no unblessed road. Assured of our continued intimacy with our Lord, still members of His body, and still unsevered from His ever living Christ, we need not fear to pass through the gateway, which we call death, into the fuller experience of the life beyond.

The S. P. G. has received a cheque for a hundred guineas from the parents of an airman who was shot down off Colombo by the Japanese on Easter Sunday, 1942. The donors, asking that this gift may be "earmarked for future work in Japan", remarked that "it seems to be the only decent Christian vengeance."

—Guardian (English).

On one occasion, when Dr. Schweitzer was giving an organ recital at The Hague in a packed hall, an admirer of his turned to the man beside him and asked what it was that had brought the great crowd together. Had they been drawn merely by the music of Bach or had they come to see the organist, the philosopher, and the theologian? "Not at all," was the reply, "they have come to see the man who acted while everybody else was content to talk."

Diaconate Report

Report from Commission on Approaches to Unity

THE REFERENCES to deacons in the New Testament indicate that they were appointed to be the agents of the Church's compassion and help for those in the Christian fellowship who were in physical need or distress.

It would seem that by the time of the writing of the Pastoral Epistles, the diaconate was a recognized order in the Church's organized and continuing ministry, the central duties of which continued to be those of service to physical human needs.

It is significant that this order of ministers performed certain liturgical functions which gave symbolic expression within the worship of the Church to the divine nature of that ministry of compassion to the primary human needs which first brought the diaconate into existence.

For several centuries the diaconate as thus conceived remained an independent or distinct order within the Church. Far from being absorbed into the Presbyterate, it tended for a time to be more highly regarded than the second order. St. Athanasius, for example, was never a presbyter but was elevated immediately from the office of a deacon to that of a bishop. The Church at Rome retained until the eleventh century the institution of seven deacons. These ministers, in addition to being assistants to the bishop, charged with the care of temporalities, had the specific function of almoners. Throughout the Middle Ages important vestiges of the classical situation remain.

The ordinal of the Book of Common Prayer stresses the social as well as the liturgical functions of the diaconate. The order is, however, accepted as the first stage of the threefold ministry of deacons, priests and bishops.

IN RETAINING this integration of the first two orders, which we favor, it should be emphasized that the deacon on being ordained priest does not cease to be a deacon. The responsibilities and duties of the diaconate are still incumbent upon him. The duties of the priest qua priest are primarily liturgical. But he now has the responsibility of prophecy — the proclamation of the Word of God—and of teaching. Prophets and teachers appear in Eph. 4:11 in the list of Christian ministers. Their functions have been largely subsumed into the priesthood. Similarly the functions of the primitive diaconate have largely been subsumed into the priesthood, though a vestige of its originally separate character lingers in the order as we have it.

There can be no doubt that the Anglican Communion has largely lost sight of the nature and values of the diaconate. These must be recovered and stressed, in order to make clear that ministry to the needs of the whole human being (in our complex civilization involving service in the whole field of social concern) is not only something which an interested minister may engage in, but is something which by virtue of his commission he is under obligation to fulfill.

In the Presbyterian Church, the ministry to human needs is entrusted to the deacon who, though following still his accustomed lay pursuits, is permanently set apart by formal service for this special office in the Church. The deacon may also have charge of the temporalities of the Church.

The liturgical functions of the Anglican deacon are in the Presbyterian Church entrusted to the Ruling Elder who is set apart for this office in similar fashion to that of the Presbyterian deacon. It would, therefore, seem that the nearest equivalent in the Presbyterian Church of the Anglican diaconate as it is by nature and theory is the Ruling Eldership and the Diaconate.

IN PRACTICE, HOWEVER, in the Anglican Communion the diaconate is little more than a step to the priesthood. The nearest equivalent to this in the Presbyterian Church is the licentiate. But whereas in the Anglican system the diaconate is an order of the ministry and confers indelibility, in the Presbyterian Church the licentiate is not ordained, his license can be withdrawn, and he remains a layman. In making a man a licentiate, the Presbyterian Church does not commit itself either practically or theoretically to anything like the extent the Anglican Church does in making a man a deacon.

The merging of the Anglican diaconate and the Presbyterian licentiate would not seem the best procedure. It might rather be better to introduce into the Anglican system the licentiate as a time of testing and further practical preparation for the ministry. A licentiate who proves himself might then be ordained deacon and then priest. But the diaconal functions of the priest should be explicitly stressed, their dignity emphasized, and their obligatory character affirmed.

It might be added that the preservation of the diaconate as a separate order, even though the deacon is after a brief period usually advanced to the priesthood, would have this value: it would symbolize the realm of the natural within which the supernatural works.

The question arises as to the practical relationship of the Anglican and Presbyterian diaconate. In the Anglican theory the deacon is in holy orders, has an indelible character, and is usually on his way to the priesthood. In the Presbyterian system, the deacon is a layman, but he has an indelible character and a status in the church of which he cannot be deprived though he may be inhibited (in Anglican terminology) or cease to function as a deacon for the time being and under certain circumstances. The essential similarities between the two offices thus are great. The difference between them lies in the fact that the Presbyterian diaconate is an autonomous office to which no liturgical functions attach.

A POSSIBLE SOLUTION of this problem might be as follows:

1. The Episcopal Church might well adopt the licentiate as a preliminary step to any ordination.

2. The Episcopal Church should think seriously of once more finding a place for the diaconate as a permanent order of the ministry in its own right. The Presbyterian tradition, by retaining within its congregational organization the office of deacon, has preserved a valuable functional organ of Church life. A permanent diaconal order might draw consecrated laymen, who have no intention of advancing to the priesthood, into the liturgical and social ministry of the Church.

3. Nevertheless, the Episcopal Church should, at the same time, retain the diaconate as an integrated order—in other words one of the "three orders of the ministry," in which ordination to a higher order presupposes previous ordination to a lower. This would insure that the "ministry of compassion," though exercised by some men as a permanent ministry in its own right, would remain also part of the ministry of priest and bishop.

4. The Episcopal Church would thus accept from the Presbyterian tradition one of its distinctive emphases of Church life—namely, the permanent diaconate as an order in its own right. The Presbyterian Church might, however, be requested to consider for adoption a corresponding contribution of the Anglican tradition—namely, the integration of diaconate, presbyterate, and episcopate.

5. If both these adjustments were made, the United Church would have a uniform and merged Church order—one enriched by shared contributions and embracing the values of both traditions.

ABOUT CHURCH UNITY

what has been written on this subject by eminent men, I do not know. Distinguished scholars though they are, it is possible that they have not. For sectarian differences are now regarded with so much contempt that few have the patience to read about them. This in a way, as a purely negative condition, is a factor rather favorable to Church union; but by itself it is hardly enough. One thing is certain, that not all the worthy men appointed to an ecclesiastical commission, be they bishops, presbyters or laymen, will be enlightened enough to understand what it is all about.

During one of the joint meetings of the two commissions I sat at dinner beside a godly Presbyterian "elder" who made this invidious verity very plain to me. He was delighted by our insistence upon the importance of "episcopal orders." "Our ministers," he said, "show hardly any disposition to obey the orders of the presbytery; but you, I am glad to see, are prompt to obey episcopal orders."

EDITORIALS

"About Church Unity"

By the time most of our subscribers receive this issue of the Southern Churchman, General Convention will be in session.

One of the most important reports to be received by this Convention, is the report of the Commission on Approaches to Unity. We have attempted to be fair by presenting both editorially, in the news columns, and in the articles published both sides of this vital question. There are two sides, or better two approaches. We believe that the majority report of the Commission should be adopted. Because we believe that the cause of world unity will be furthered by even one union step, in healing the breach of a divided Christendom.

We therefore take great pleasure in publishing in full in this issue an article by a distinguished presbyter of this church, on the whole question of Church Unity. Dr. Walter Lowrie of Princeton, New Jersey, former Rector of St. Paul's Church, Rome, Italy, and at present honorary Canon of Trinity Cathedral, Newark, New Jersey, is the author of this article. Dr. Lowrie has been for a number of years a carfeul student of all trends leading toward unity. He states clearly and emphatically his position. He is a member of the Anglo-Catholic party. With a fair judicial mind, he interprets all the facts in the case. We advocate the reading of this article by all our subscribers. If you agree with its thesis, then write or wire your diocesan representative at General Convention.

We hope that the Convention will go on record as accepting the majority report of the Commission on Approaches to Unity.

One Thing We Can All Do

There is one solemn obligation that all members of the Protestant Episcopal Church can perform durinf these next two weeks. Remember the members of General Convention in your daily devotions. The obligation of prayer rests upon all of us. In this vital Convention meeting, under the duress of war conditions, pray fervently that the Holy Spirit may guide the Convention in all its deliberations. Pray that the Christian spirit of charity may be in the hearts and minds of all the members. Pray that all pride and arrogancy may be banished and that great forward steps may be taken, in the advance of Christian unity and fellowship. See that your rector uses the Prayer in the Book of Common Prayer for meetings of Councils and Conventions. You may not be able to be present at Convention, you can through the office of prayer be there in spirit.

A Heroic Woman in the Solomons---Emily Sprott Twenty-Seven Years on Santa Isabel Island

What Our American Soldiers and Sailors Find When They Land on Little-known Islands of the Southwest Pacific

By S. HARRINGTON LITTELL, D.D.

(Fifth Bishop of Honolulu)

THE DAY WHEN the fall of Munda was announced, the dispatch from General MacArthur's headquarters stated that allied bombers had blasted Rekata Bay, 150 miles east of New Georgia, on Santa Isabel Island. This island is known throughout Melanesia as the home of a heroic missionary woman, Emily Sprott, affectionately called "Mother" by natives of many islands, among whom she has lived for twenty-seven years. The only white woman on Santa Isabel to remain after the Japanese seized the Island, she refused to leave, although forced to remain in hiding for many months, and yet kept in touch all the time with her native Christian friends throughout the Island. Openly hunted and quietly trailed by Japanese soldiers, she hid in the jungles and up in the hills. When the enemy first landed, Mrs. Sprott hid stores of food, and buried personal belongings and church furnishings. Thus much-needed provisions were saved from Japanese marauding parties which seized all they could find in the way of vegetables, chickens, nuts and other kinds of food. The invaders apparently knew well the influence and importance of Mrs. Sprott, for they sought her in her little house repeatedly, and demanded to know her whereabouts. It is reported that she was wanted as a hostage; that she was to be placed in a conspicuous spot near Japanese defenses on Tulagi to prevent, or to lighten, American air and naval attacks on that place. Exasperated at not finding her the invaders seized two young men whom they threatened to torture and shoot unless they revealed her hiding place. One of these declined to answer, and reported to her later the ordeal he had passed through. His silence he said was because, "my tongue he stuck, he no lift." The other man under rough treatment, said at last that Mrs. Sprott had gone to Australia. When freed, he went at once to see her in the hills, and anticipating her rebuke for such a statement, exclaimed, "But you did go to Australia. I only did not say that you came back." In spite of

About Church Unity

By DR. WALTER LOWRIE

Honorary Canon of Trinity Cathedral, Trenton, N. J.

EVERY RESOLUTION looking towards the reunion of the divided Church ought to state emphatically in its preamble the practical and compelling motive for engaging in this difficult task. There are to be sure reasons more ideal for seeking Church unity, and there are more persuasive reasons for loving our brethren; but the compelling reason is that Christianity is in danger of being overwhelmed by secularism and a resurgent paganism. This is not a danger which merely threatens us in a future more or less remote, for already secularism and paganism have overrun vast tracts of Christendom, as did Islam twelve centuries ago, and in lands which are still nominally Christian Christianity has been denaturized. So we must feel when we look about us with open eyes. Our bishops in America might feelingly describe themselves as bishops in partibus infidelium. In this situation we can no longer afford the luxury of sectarianism and its conspicuous waste. Unpalatable as the truth is, our people should be told plainly that while we are talking of missions to the heathen and of forward movements the Churches all over the world are losing ground, in numbers as well as in prestige. We can find scant comfort in the opinion of the Supreme Court that this is "a Christian country," when the fact is that not half the inhabitants of these United States even so much as profess to be Christians. The proportion according to the Census is 48 per cent, and perhaps not half of these "Christians" have even a formal connection with any Church or sect. Russia, with exactly the same proportion of citizens who are brave enough to profess that they are "believers," prefers to proclaim itself an atheistic state. In our land, when we take account of the intelligentsia, the situation is far worse than I have depicted it. Hence in our schools and universities the Christian minority is reduced to much smaller proportions; and, divided as it now is, it has to contend not merely with indifference but with militant hostility. The Church must again be militant, and to fight effectively it must be united.

AT THIS MOMENT, when for the first time an opportunity of union with the Presbyterian Church is seriously presented, it is ominous to observe that many in our Communion, oblivious of our real danger, are preoccupied by the fear that the influx of so many Protestants might overwhelm the Catholic movement which has become all but predominant in our Church. Such a result I too would deplore, but I do not fear it. Catholicism in thought and practice has so much to recommend it today that it is not dependent now upon a party in our Church. If all Anglo-Catholics had the courage of their convictions, they would rejoice at finding a new field to till, a new lump to leaven. For I feel sure that, if the Presbyterians are ready to make the large concessions implied in the report now presented, they are moved by a general desire, though it may be a vague one, for a more Catholic worship and discipline. Indeed I know some who, if they were to separate from their present Communion, would prefer, like Dr. Orchard, to leap clean over the Anglican via media into the Church of Rome. I, being born a Presbyterian but predestinated to become an Episcopalian, have been able nevertheless to maintain a fraternal relation with the Presbyterian Church—in all respects except, alas, communion in the Lord's Supper. I have been honored by a place on the editorial board of a forthcoming theological review sponsored and directed by Presbyterians. Lately I lectured for a week to a hundred and seventy Presbyterian ministers—and found to my chagrin that they were better equipped as ministers of the Gospel of God than our pastors commonly are. But they occasioned me no other chagrin; they did not treat me as an outsider, although I was presented, of course, as an Episcopalian and was known to some as an Anglican of the worst sort . . . an Anglo-Catholic. Not even the fact that I had occasion to recommend distinctively Catholic doctrines aroused any obvious resentment. I was prompted by this experience to reflect upon a rather ironical consequence which is likely to result from the proposed union, namely, that Presbyterian ministers will commonly be inclined to consort more intimately with their newly discovered Catholic brethren than with the Evangelicals who are too much like themselves. From this fraternity we may expect a more evangelical Catholicism. At present our Catholicism is not radical enough to impress the Church of Rome or to exert profound influence upon the Protestant world. At this stage Anglo-Catholicism is formal rather than theological. The name has even a nationalistic tang, a suggestion that it is not meant to be universal and not fitted to be. But I have found that Anglo-Catholics are commonly ready to embrace a more universal and evangelical understanding of Catholicism, if only they are assured that the real values to which they cling are thoroughly secured by it.

If only for the fear of jeopardizing our Catholicity (universality!) some of our people, and among them men who have talked most about Church unity, are inclined to oppose the only concrete possibility of union which is now within reach, it is clear that for the same reason they must oppose union with any Protestant body upon any terms, even upon the terms of unconditional surrender.

I DO NOT IGNORE the fact that the report presented by our Commission, the document entitled Basic Principles, gives some reason for discontent. It is not persuasive because it is not clear; and it is not clear because evidently there was a (gracious?) intent to make it appear as if the concessions on both sides are precisely equivalent. Perhaps the representatives of both Churches, being jointly responsible, were equally at fault for the obscurity of this document. But on the Presbyterian side there are men of such eminence in their own Communion that they may be expected to win consent to the proposals upon which they agreed, whereas our Commission has not known how to present the case to our Church in a persuasive way. Consequently few are able to see how advantageous to us the situation actually is, and that substantially the Presbyterian Church, if its spokesmen fairly represent it, is ready to concede everything the Anglican Church has ever demanded as a condition for union.

It is a disappointment that our Commission, after fumbling for six years with various proposals (the "Concordat" and "Joint Ordination") which they subsequently rejected as futile, should now confront us with a document which is unfortunate even in its title, since it deals predominantly not with "basic principles" but with "cooperative arrangements." The basic principles are what we already have in common. If it were not so, there would be no possibility of union. The question put to us is whether the cooperative arrangements now proposed suffice to begin with. They are only meant as a beginning—and one must begin somewhere.

It may be that no better commission could be appointed by our Church. I am inclined to think so when I see on the list the names of some of my most distinguished friends—and when I note how many professors of theology are included! The suspicion that some of these men might not be loath to see Catholicism diluted by a large influx of Evangelicals cannot fairly be regarded as a condemnation of this Commission. For how could there be a representative commission of our Church to which such a suspicion might not attach? Surely they are all, all honorable men. But, having so many honorable men in our Communion, perhaps another commission might be as good—might indeed be better for the mere fact that it is another, which not only would allay the animosity which unfortunately has been aroused, but, if it were to reach the same conclusions, would more convincingly express the mind of our Church.

There is danger, it is said, in swapping horses while crossing the river. But in this case the only peril is that our General Convention in discharging the Commission might fail to welcome heartily and emphatically the substantial offers that have been made for the sake of unity. The whole effort would thus be discredited, and a new commission would face the dispiriting task of carrying on a negotiation which had been condemned beforehand to failure.

AT THE RISK, as I have been warned, of "making everybody mad," I must say of the opposition to the report of the Commission that it has not been fair. One hardly knows whether to laugh or weep when some thirty-two (I am not sure of the number) Anglo-Catholic societies and orders unite in appropriating the slogan of the Evangelicals: "In Defense of Prayer Book Principles." It may be clever, but is it honest? Clearly these people have no right to this watchword, and they cannot utter it except with the tongue in the cheek. For really they have no more interest than I in maintaining the "Reformation settlement" which had its most eminent expression in the Book of Common Prayer. Unfortunately too the tracts which have been issued under this aegis are on a level with the sectarian controversy of the seventeenth century and ignore completely the results attained by historical study during the last hundred years. This is a reproach to the scholarship of our Church, and more particularly, as many good Catholics think, it is a discredit to the Anglo-Catholic Party.

The propositions upon which the two parties agree, and which they now recommend to their respective Churches, would have been much clearer, and to us at least more persuasive, if at the outset the basic principles which both parties accept and which both Churches do actually practice had been stated emphatically, and we had then been told what concessions each Church was expected to make for the sake of union.

It cannot be said too emphatically that we already have in common the basic principles of Christianity. As for the Holy Scriptures, no one will suspect that the Presbyterians have less reverence than we for the Bible as the rule of faith and life. As for the "system of doctrine" derived from the Bible, it ought to be made clear that this phrase was introduced some fifty years ago to relieve candidates for the Presbyterian ministry from assenting to the more peculiar and devisive tenets of Calvinism, and that since that time the Westminster Confession of Faith has been placed pretty much in the position to which we have relegated the Thirty-nine Articles. The Presbyterians, who never have rejected the Catholic Creeds, agree now to use them in public worship, as the expression of the "faith and unity of the Church." This means a great deal; it means at least "Neo-Orthodoxy," and it reflects the fact that today Modern Liberal Theology is rejected in the Presbyterian Church no less contritely than it is in ours. Twenty years ago such a union as is now proposed might have meant that while we had too little sectarian zeal to keep us apart we had too little Christian faith to draw us effectually together. Now it means that faith desires its expression and confirmation in visible unity.

THE PRESBYTERIANS have always administered Baptism in the name of the Trinity, and they regard it as a sacrament instituted by Christ. The fact that they insist upon the necessity of Baptism, that they are accustomed to baptize infants, and that they do not require immersion, singles out this Church as the one with which we might most easily unite. The Sacrament of the Lord's Supper they honestly intend to celebrate in conformity with Christ's institution and with the unfailing use of His words. They now agree to something more—something more than the Church of England or the Church of Rome could think of requiring, for they agree to use an "invocation of the Holy Spirit." They agree also to use "bread and wine." Not everyone recognizes how great a concession is implied in the word "wine," for among Presbyterians in America the use of wine is as rare as the use of bread is with us. It is clearly a necessary concession, for so long as they persist in using what is euphemistically called "unfermented wine" we cannot communicate with them, and if we could not communicate in the Lord's Supper, we should not be profoundly united, not even formally united. The conscientious scruple against drinking wine might easily be relieved by the use of the mixed chalice—which primarily was not a peculiar ritual practice, but reflected the universal custom in early times of mixing in the crater a great amount of water with the very strong wine which everywhere was in use because no other sort could be preserved in "bottles" of skin or porous clay. Unfortunately nothing is said here about the common chalice, and yet that is basic to any notion of union which is conceived as a communion. The hygienic squeamishness which has led American Protestants to use individual liqueur glasses is felt by many of our people and has led to the practice of intinction, which when it is performed by the communicants upon their own responsibility cannot well be prohibited.

From a conference which hoped to effect a formal union between Lutheran and Calvinistic Churches Dr. Martin Luther returned with the disconsolate impression that "they have a different spirit from ours." This might have been said a while ago of the Presbyterians; even today we feel it, and we feel it most uncomfortably at the celebration of the Holy Communion. It is the deepest ground of our division, it is very "basic," and yet in Basic Principles not a word is said about it. Forty years ago I thought that any approach to union must begin with a common understanding about worship, without which we cannot ordinarily pray together. But in the meantime things have changed, and perhaps Basic Principles does well to ignore this difference, with a clear enough understanding that on the part of the Presbyterians there already exists a will to transcend such a barrier, a will which manifests itself evidently, though not always wisely, by the use not only of our prayers but of ritual embellishments (altar-cross, candles, etc.) which, to say the least, are not prescribed by the Book of Common Prayer. It seems as if the "spirit" were not now so very different, as if perhaps sufficient uniformity in worship might be attained very simply when other and more formal obstacles are removed which still check and repress a spontaneous movement towards a Catholic cult.

IT IS OF BASIC importance that Presbyterians have always laid great stress upon ordination and solemnly accredit their office-bearers by the imposition of hands. Not so basic, but nevertheless of great importance, is the fact that Presbyterians have, and always have had, substantially the same forms of Church government which are now established in our branch of the Anglican Church—except for the lack of a bishop. It would be more correct to say that we have the same forms and principles as they; for historically our whole notion of representative government in the Church, with clerical and lay delegates having equal votes, was taken either directly from the Presbyterian Church, or indirectly derived from it through the forms of secular government which were established in these United States under the influence of Calvinistic notions. Hence our diocesan conventions and our synods, except for the lack on their part of a permanent president or bishop, correspond exactly to the "classical presbytery" and the synod of the Presbyterians, and our general convention to their general assembly, so that in this respect neither party is required to make any change. At the basis of this structure we have respectively the vestry and the session (eldership); and the Anglican vestry, as its functions have been interpreted in America, has been so closely assimilated to the Presbyterian eldership that there remains not much difference between them. Unlike the vestrymen of the Church of England, who essentially are secular officers, with some authority over Church property, our vestrymen are expected to exercise important spiritual functions: they commonly elect their pastors; they select (usually from their own number) deputies to the diocesan convention; and consequently they are responsible indirectly for the delegation to our general convention. We have no reason to object if we are asked to assimilate them still further to the "elders" by consecration with prayer and (perhaps) by laying on of hands. A shrewd parson might be glad to have the right of investiture, and a good pastor would surely rejoice if he could persuade his vestrymen to aid him in the visitation of the sick, and in some way at the celebration of the Lord's Supper. Bishop Wordsworth was profoundly impressed by the fact that the relation of pastors and elders in the Scottish Church precisely reflects the parochial organization in the second and third centuries. The "ruling elder" was the most important practical innovation made by John Calvin. There is, I believe, no Scriptural precedent for such an office (any more than there is for vestrymen); but now we are not asked to accept it as "jure divino and by the will and appointment of Jesus Christ" (the claim which was made in the Westminster Assembly, and which wrecked the hope of making Presbyterianism the established religion of England), but only as an institution of approved worth—and one which substantially we already have. The name of ruling elder (which was derived from a mistaken interpretation of I Tim. 5:17) cannot, I suppose, be taken to imply that we must adopt the peculiar Calvinistic notion that all ecclesiastical rule and discipline inheres in the eldership and not in the pastor as priest or presbyter. If this is still held as Presbyterian theory, it hardly corresponds with Presbyterian practice, especially now that elders are "rotated."

In the Presbyterian Church the name of deacon is applied to lay office-bearers who have nothing more definite to do than to pass the plate. Because the Scripture speaks of deacons, such an office, it was thought, must be perpetuated—for "charity never faileth." But this is so perfunctory an addition to the ministry that such office-bearers are not always appointed; and now the Presbyterians are willing enough to eliminate it, and to use the name of deacon (and the ordination which it implies) for the licentiates who are preparing to become presbyters—exactly as we do.

AS AN ELEGANT example of the perfect equilibrium of give and take in the present negotiations, Basic Principles speaks of "two steps" which must be taken: "the adoption of the historic episcopate in a constitutional form and the adoption of the ruling eldership"—precisely as though these two concessions were exactly of equal weight. But in fact, as has been pointed out, the institution of the eldership we have already adopted substantially, and therefore in this instance the concession is altogether on one side. But the acceptance of the episcopate is an immense concession. The bishop is recognized here as the principal agent in ordination, as the "chief pastor," and as the president in every assembly. That is to say, he is recognized in his essential character. If the episcopate is here described as "the historic episcopate," we must remember that it was we who invented this term, and that this is what we have offered again and again as a condition of union. It is stipulated, moreover, that the episcopate must be "constitutional"—and that, alas, is what we have.

To estimate how great this concession is, we must remember that in the Westminster Assembly the Presbyterians were not willing to admit that the bishops, since they were not pastors of a particular congregation, had any competence to ordain. Now, however, they admit this competence ungrudgingly. It is evident that they desire to have bishops. Perhaps, if they knew what is good for them, they might prefer to have unconstitutional bishops, like those of the early Catholic age, men unhampered by any formal restrictions, acting as they were moved to act by the Holy Ghost, who because they were everywhere recognized as genuine exponents of Christianity would be able, by admitting men to their communion, to admit them into the communion of the Church universal, and by recognizing men as able ministers of the new covenant would insure them of recognition everywhere. In this way, by the action of bishops subservient neither to a general convention, nor to the State, nor to the Pope, the reunion of divided Christendom might be brought about. But I am dismayed when I think of the disillusion of our Presbyterian brethren when they must deal with some of our constitutional bishops. After all, our bishops were not chosen with a view to this situation.

Concessions willingly made cannot properly be called concessions; and another willing concession is the offer to adopt Confirmation—which is described here as a "rite" but defined as a sacrament. But here we find the one concession which is required of us, and it

Letting Some Light Through

"For whatsoever is born of God overcometh the world: and this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith. Who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God?" (I John 5:4-5.)

IN ONE OF THE plays of Maeterlink, "Pelleas and Melisande," out of an empty and silent scene comes the cry: "Open the door! Open the door! Open the big door." That cry has been answered. There are no closed doors left in the world. They are all open. We are almost as familiar with the island of Sicily as we are with the Northern Neck of Virginia. We feel no strangeness when we hear the sound of place names like Kiev and Smolensk, Lae and Guadalcanal, Ischia and Procida, Salerno and Corregidor. Awe no longer chokes us when we think of 10,000 miles away, or breakfast in New York and dinner in London, or around the world in three days. We are not surprised when we hear regularly from Africa and India and Burma by air mail. The world has become a drafty place indeed when the wind from Irak blows upon our necks and makes us sneeze, and the sound of it echoes back again to that foreign land. The doors are open, the big doors of the world are open and will never be shut again. There are no more secret places. This means the light of knowledge and understanding may shine through to us from every corner of the world and from us to those same far corners, distant no longer.

Our vision is adjusted to a world view today, one big world, composed of people who must live together in harmony or disharmony. The people themselves must choose which. That is why we must not be ignorant of the Christian Church's work in this shrunken, homey, community world, which seems so far from showing the results of that work. I want to point to a few open doors to let a little light through to those who think they are still shut, so that we shall not be caught napping when the most gigantic layman's inquiry in the history of the world returns to make its unofficial report to every part of every church of every land. I want us to be up-to-date concerning our Christian Church at its work in and among the strange and familiar places and peoples of the earth. Our boys are making a junket that will reveal how well we have done our work and won our way, whether our missions have been and are worthy of our support. We must attempt to take a like journey and see if we can catch a wide sweeping glimpse of what they are seeing and not seeing as they march through open doors torn from their hinges never to be replaced.

The proof of the importance of spreading the "good news" will be found in the actually existing conditions seen under the abnormal times of war. A report of these facts should clear up our vaguely conceived and imagined idea of them gained from speeches and articles by retired missionaries and pious writers and not by recent first-hand information. Rumors are already afloat among our people that the work of the Church has stopped dead in its tracks, killed by the war. This keeps us guessing and hoping and praying. But we want to be more certain of what we have done and are doing as a Church, and as full of faith in our task—no matter how futile or feeble it seems at times in places—as was the hero of the underground against Nazism and Fascism who was portrayed so simply, grippingly and magnificently in the picture Watch on the Rhine.

IN HIS LAST annual report to the National Council, which was not merely a dull recital of facts and figures, the Presiding Bishop sounded the drums of the Christian offensive which must soon begin as the roar and thunder of guns die away. His words are a preface to accepted challenge and great revival, the girding for the task of evangelizing the spiritually starved and disillusioned countries which have been stripped to the bone—literally to be clothed with flesh again and given new life. He said: "The Church's task in a world so completely at war as at present is certain to be one fraught with grave difficulties yet at the same time glorious opportunities. During the past year the Church has been fully conscious of both difficulties and opportunities and has sought to face both without hesitation."

This note will sound again and again through the short tense hours of General Convention whose job it will be to keep on tip-toe and lose not the vision in a welter of figures and reports. Try then to imagine yourself actually on the spots we touch in our rapid survey report.

Japan—what will our boys report from there once they get there and return? Has the church failed? So it seems. But underneath the obviously superficial and despicable enemy actions which have brought sneers and cat-calls and smoldering hate, there are certain facts we must remember if we would know the whole truth. The Church is not dead even though all of the missionaries from our country are out. The Church remains. The native clergy we won and trained are still carrying on. The flame of Christian love still burns in the dark places of the hearts of many Japanese who are praying that this holocaust may soon cease. They are preparing for cooperation in the great floodtide of the Christian crusade which will begin the moment the order comes to "cease firing." Underground now perhaps and in chains, but holding always to the belief in John's words. . . "For whatsoever is born of God overcometh the world and this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." We do not know even from recent witnesses what is going on now within the Japanese Church, "but there is every reason to believe that in spite of poverty and a shortage of workers, it is alive and active," and though there will be martyrs, their blood will be the seed of the Church to come.

A number of returned missionaries from Japan are ministering to the 130,000 Japanese Americans ("Americans with Japanese faces") forced into ten relocation centers in the West and South. And their work is difficult. The camps are widely scattered from Idaho to Arkansas and in comparatively isolated regions, not always easy of access. "But we certainly owe it to them (and there are many of our own denomination among them), and to ourselves, to provide and to maintain an adequate ministry of worship, education and fellowship, such as will testify to the fact that the Christian Church practices what it preaches; that it is vitally interested in their moral and spiritual welfare, and that it will follow them and minister to them, however difficult the task may prove." The Church Women will study this problem in detail during the course of the year and it should cure any prejudice or resentment or hate which may have grown up because of the war, its propaganda and its terrible results. Our missionaries, because of their knowledge of the language and the people, have been invaluable in smoothing out difficulties which are inherent in the situation. Many of these Japanese are American citizens, too, and many of them Christians. Never forget it.

THE PHILIPPINES—darkness has fallen for a moment upon this little land of the brown man—until MacArthur's return. Only a few scraps of news have leaked through since she came under Japanese control. "We can send neither money nor cables. We know very little about the operation of our widely scattered missions. But our guesses are based upon a few reports such as one from Manila which indicated our staff there seemed to have relative freedom of action to carry on church work. We entertain strong hopes that all our staff are safe and well." Whatever happens a remnant will be there to greet us when we return and to report: "We fought the good fight and will carry on."

CHINA—that famous phrase of Chiang Kai Shek flashes again to mind—his words to President Roosevelt after Pearl Harbor—"We stand by you with all we are and all we have." But we have done little for this great courageous nation, which has so Christian a leader—and he so noble and gallant a Christian wife. But our missionaries have remained wherever and whenever they have been allowed to stay; they have identified themselves with the lives of the people, in the occupied areas and along the roads to the great new inland nation of Free China. Schools have been bombed, hospitals sacked, homes destroyed, work smashed, families separated, ill-treatment suffered at the hands of the Japanese invader, but the work of hospitals and schools and industrial co-operatives and evangelism continues to thrive because of the indomitable spirit of those who are sharing with the Chinese the hardships of an improvised mode of life and of the skyrocket rise in the cost of living. Only those missionaries who are ready for retirement are released from the call to active service again. The rest who are in this country wait impatiently to return. You will remember the visit of some returned missionaries like Dr. Lee and the Rev. Charles Higgins, who have given us first hand accounts of conditions in both the occupied areas and in Free China. (Pearl Buck's book, Dragon Teeth, will help to straighten out many false ideas about what is happening in China.) Even those who are forced to remain in America until they can return are preparing for the spiritual invasion and uprising through Asia and Indo-China, which is even now in ferment. We hold to the road. No door shall be shut.

The stories of continuation under stress and duress are pretty much the same wherever the Church is at work. (And it is not only our small branch of the Christian Church at work but all of the other parts as well.) There shall be no discouragement, because miracles of enlightenment are taking place before our very eyes. Our boys from Greenland to Kiska are being educated for Christian missions in the days to come after homeland is reached again; and it may not be so long. Woe betide us if we have not done our share by intelligent, prayerful, financial support of this work which we can share in no other way.

The story of present day missions is much the same wherever we have established a bridgehead: Honolulu—Alaska — Panama Canal Zone — Cuba — Puerto Rico (a classmate of mine is the Naval Chaplain stationed there)—Liberia—Latin America, all are taxed to their utmost to care for the extra burdens war has imposed upon their inadequate and depleted staff and resources. But one sentence can describe the action of our Church wherever she has taken root and that is: overcoming the obstacles of the present by faith in God, and holding to the certain hope that in the end Christ's way shall prove victorious. I remember the wonderful words of Kurt Mueller to his children in the closing moments of "Watch on the Rhine." I cannot quote exactly, but they gave this message: "It may take my life and yours, and it may not happen for years, but decent life will come to all and man's best will rise to wipe out the dark stain of his worst. We must work for that until it comes—never for a moment forgetting that it will come. Only then shall this wretched business be ended forever."

THE STORY is vast. Its chapters run from the comfort of an American home to the horrible misery of a room in Greece barricaded by fear against unbelievable persecution, housing children who are emaciated and starving. The song of it connects the melody of our Church hymns in this beautiful place with the filth and animal life movements and cries of the wolf packs of war orphaned children roaming the parched and devastated back roads of Europe. The blood written record of it is marked in large red letters in one bold stroke, from the speech of a misguided isolationist to a prayer for death from the lips of a Jew in the lonely ghetto of forsaken Poland.

Our boys will read the story in its vastness, will sing the off-key song in its original melody (so harsh to our squeamish ears), will follow the blood written record and cry out for strength to endure. But they will know that the whole adds up to one thing—"there must be an answer to this miserable mess and we shall find it." The guns they use are but temporary instruments which they despise and use only as a terrible means to an end. This end will prove good only when the guns are thrown away and trigger fingers begin to itch at the locks of the myriad problems awaiting our solution in a world which will be suddenly released from a mad-house of bedlam. Out of this strange stillness, fresh with the sight and sound of death, will come a small voice feebly crying—life and peace.

What the interpretation of these experiences will be depends largely upon our chaplains, who represent the Christian Church to the men who will make or mar its present and future mission of redemption. They are the ones who are keeping these boys in contact with God. This is an imperative task because God still must wait for them and us to help before a decent and orderly world is wrought out of the manifold gifts He has provided. These Chaplains are so important. Our sons' spiritual welfare is in their hands and the layman's report of Christian missions these boys write will depend largely upon the receptivity and guidance provided by these chaplains. Their opportunities are many. In talks and services and even as they walk into battle with their boys, they continue to manifest a faith that God is on both sides of them crowding in close.

Are we letting enough light through today? Will the Church let enough light through all its channels? There must be no hesitation or timidity at General Convention to seize these opportunities wherever and whenever they arise and to meet the difficulties with all the expertness and courage possible. The Christian offensive messages and posters point the way. See and read them in Church periodicals and posted in parish houses, and heed their message. This spirit of "nothing must stop us" must permeate the life and decisions of every parish. Our text gives us the way it is done. "Who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God?"

Notice the glorious stained glass windows in almost any church. They are dazzling when the light shines through, but after dark they are dull and unattractive. It is the same glass in the same window in the same spot. But the full, true beauty of it is not revealed until the bright sunlight comes through. We are the rose windows of the world. God is the light that overcomes the darkness of both us and world. The light comes when we believe the way of Jesus is the way of power and of peace and run breathlessly along that way until He be found in His fulness for all men.

Much of the saga of the continued earth life of the Son of Man is being written today under cover, but that which is hidden will be revealed at last and that which we ask the Father in secret will be given in the full light of men's presence. Our great contribution as stay-at-home, buy-bonds, pay-taxes, do-our-own-work-Christians is in brief this:

Never get on the defensive for Christ but be ever on the offensive for, as the Presiding Bishop has said, "The time has come when the Church must launch a Christian offensive designed to take advantage of some of the tremendous opportunities resulting from the war." Do not wince or complain, then, when that opportunity costs and pinches us through demands for more sacrifice of money and time; but heedless of the costs and contemptuous of the wounds we must press on with reinforcements pouring in from every side. We must be ready to "back the attack" when the time for invasion comes.

Whatsoever is born of God can overcome the world because of the faith in God's Son who came and suffered and died that death might cease and division might end. We hold to the belief that through us this plan of God will find its fulfilment through the world's big wide open doors.

A HEROIC WOMAN IN THE SOLOMONS

the vigilance of the Japanese soldiers, Mrs. Sprott continued to gather Christians together morning and evening for community prayers and worship. For a long time she was cut off from all communication whatever with other members of the mission on nearby islands, and from the mission headquarters in New Zealand.

Native Christians Render Invaluable Assistance to Allies

As in the case of American and Australian airmen, army and navy personnel, on many other islands, Mrs. Sprott was assisted and protected and guided to safety by natives who acted as sentries and coast-line watchers. Our Americans in the Armed Forces are outspoken in their praise of the invaluable help they have received from these far-off, dark-skinned native Christians. Our men who two years ago did not dream of ever finding themselves among these well-nigh unknown, primitive peoples, whom they had thought of as semi-savages, are writing back to America their surprise and satisfaction in finding themselves among friendly Christians. Mrs. Sprott is at present safe in New Zealand recuperating while waiting for the first opportunity to return to Santa Isabel. This opportunity may come soon, as the island was re-taken early in September, by American forces. How she ever succeeded in making the difficult and dangerous journey, or rather series of journeys, to New Zealand is a story of thrilling adventure and of providential protection, which we are told, it would be unwise to make public yet. She pays warm tribute to the fearless way in which native clergy continue their ministrations to their own people under most difficult conditions.

"A Faithful Melanesian Priest"

The Bishop of Melanesia, Dr. Walter Hubert Baddeley, D.S.O., tells of an instance where "the people from surrounding villages, having assembled overnight for their Communions in the morning, awoke to find a large concentration of Japanese warships anchored off shore. The men woke the priest—a Melanesian—and asked 'What now?: shall the people disperse?' His reply was something in the nature of 'I came here to celebrate the Holy Communion and I am going to do so. Why should we fail in our duty of worship when times are difficult?' The Service took place—perfectly normally; and I am told that the people afterwards dispersed with no signs of panic or even hurry, and from then onwards in that district there was everywhere a quiet carrying on—'In quietness and confidence shall be your strength.'"

New Zealand Visitor to America

The Dean of Christ Church and Arch Deacon of New Zealand, the Ven. Alwyn K. Warren, who was a delegate to the International Religious Peace Conference at Princeton, New Jersey, in July, has an official connection with the missionary work of the Province of New Zealand which includes the Anglican Missions in New Hebrides Islands, the Banks Islands, the Solomons, and the Santa Cruz Islands, and has placed in our hands materials regarding the adventures, the courage and the successes of missionaries throughout this whole region which will be widely shared in due time with Churchmen throughout the world, as some of the most thrilling and amazing achievements of modern missions anywhere.

Japanese Destroy Church and School Buildings

The Melanesian Mission was founded by Bishop George Augustus Selwyn of New Zealand, and later of Lichfield in 1849, and is therefore approaching its 100th Anniversary. Its first Bishop was John Coleridge Patteson, martyred at Nukapu, Reef Islands in September, 1871. A beautiful church at Tulagi erected as a memorial to Bishop Patteson and dedicated to Christ the King was completely destroyed during recent hostilities. Dean Warren says that almost the first act of the Japanese on invading an island, is to search out and destroy Christian Churches and schools, and to occupy or pillage hospitals and dispensaries with the idea of breaking down morale. He tells of an incident when two armed Japanese on scouting duty, came upon a small building of simple native architecture. Entering it, they saw it was a chapel, paused a moment in silence, removed their hats and went away—apparently Christians.

Takes His Cathedral With Him

The present Bishop, consecrated in 1932, makes his home so far as he can have any settled location, at Siota, British Solomon Islands.

His Cathedral is built into a ship, "The Southern Cross." Sailing in it from island to island, he anchors in harbors, or moors at little docks in the large number of islands where the church has been planted. On gang planks or canoes or rafts, the Christians from many villages come aboard the ship for worship. Four or five launches are a part of the mission fleet which moves among the islands in peace times. There are two archdeaconries in this vast area under Bishop Baddeley (I) that of Southern Melanesia, which includes the New Hebrides and The Banks Islands. The normal missionary staff consists of 15 clergy, of whom 12 are natives, and four women workers. (II) The Archdeaconry of the Solomons, which includes 44 priests and twenty-three deacons, six laymen and sixteen women, of whom half a dozen are sisters of the Community of the Cross. Of the clergy, three-fourths are natives. In addition, there are over a hundred and fifty Melanesians, in ten diocesan centers, preparing as lay evangelists to assist in spreading the Church throughout the vast number of islands. Incidentally, it is interesting to know that in New Zealand there is a native Maori Bishop, a Polynesian, the Rt. Rev. Frederick Augustus Bennett, assistant Bishop of Aotearoa, consecrated in 1828, whose work centers at Kohupatiki Clive.

It is no wonder that the church has taken a strong hold upon the island peoples of the South West Pacific. It is carried on largely by native leaders and it has had steady unbroken progress for nearly a hundred years. And it is found in most unexpected places. I end with an incident from a recent issue of the New York Times, which tells of an unexpected outcome in connection with the tragic fate of an American airman. It is written by Walter L. Stewart, USA: "Lt. Bruce G. Brackett, USNR, found gallant death waiting upon Savo—upon a wild lump of island lifted from the Pacific a few miles north of Guadalcanal. With the engine of his ship lashed by Japanese fire, and spluttering sleepily, Lt. Brackett nosed into the jungle, and final darkness. The black men of Savo lifted him tenderly from the plane's bewildered wreckage and carried him across the island to its southern shore which faces the hump-backed blue of Guadalcanal. . . . They buried Lieutenant Brackett with Christian rites and honest prayers. They raised a cross above his head, and built a neat bamboo fence. They planted flowers about the grave, with its tall, clean palm trees. . . . . It is a fitting requiem for one who died so valiantly."

ABOUT CHURCH UNITY

proves to be a concession which we cannot decline to make either for practical reasons or on Catholic grounds. We are asked to concede that confirmation may be administered either by a bishop or by a "duly authorized presbyter." Practically it is very desirable that the bishop be not required to confirm twice as many people as he does now, and to confirm at the moment of reunion a great multitude which no man can number. He would never get through with it, and the worst of it is that he would be regarded, more than he is now, as essentially the person whose business it is to confirm us. On Catholic grounds it cannot be refused, seeing that confirmation by a presbyter is the universal rule in the Orthodox Churches and a common practice in the Church of Rome. St. Jerome's rhetorical question, "What does the bishop do that the presbyter cannot do, except to ordain?" is conclusive for the custom which prevailed in the sixth century.

THE LAST SECTION of the report of our Commission is entitled "Cooperative Suggestions," a term which seems to imply a plurality but is followed by only one proposition. It is a proposal, I am glad to say, which is very congenial to me. I wonder that it has not attracted the favorable attention of all Catholics, for it shows the willingness of the Presbyterians to stress the priestly aspect of the pastoral ministry. It is rather ironical that by the form of "supplemental ordination" here proposed the Presbyterian minister has a chance to receive from a bishop express ordination to a priesthood, whereas we were only ordained as presbyters, that being the meaning of the word "priest" in the Prayer Book, as Pope Leo III affirmed, and as every candid scholar must admit. It is true that we commonly use the word "priest" in a sacerdotal sense, and I for one regret that the English Reformers did not use in this sense the word presbyter writ small—any more than Luther did when he retained the word Priester, or the Romans do when they say prete—although of course it would be embarrassing to exclude the bishop from the sacerdotal order, as he seems to be excluded when he is distinguished from priests as well as from deacons. In this section of the report the declaration and the prayer which are suggested seem to me excellent. The only pity is that what is here described as supplemental ordination is not explained or illuminated by the consideration that from the beginning of Christ's religion public recognition was regarded as one of the principal effects of ordination. This perception emerged in the Lambeth Conference of 1920 and was attributable, as I supposed, to Dr. Turner. I hailed it with delight, but it was stillborn. It seems that few in our Communion knew enough about early Catholicism to appreciate the pertinence of this notion to our situation today. Barnabas and Paul, so far as we know, were not ordained, but it was a matter of immense importance that from James and Cephas and John, who were recognized as "pillars," they received the right hands of fellowship. The Archbishop of Canterbury, the highest dignitary in the Anglican Communion, has recently admonished us that the medieval doctrine of the grace of orders must not be insisted upon when we are seeking Church unity. Fortunately, in this approach it is neither mentioned nor implied.

IF IT IS TRUE that upon the basic principles of the Christian faith we already are in agreement with the Presbyterians, and that the cooperative arrangements now proposed are all that we have ever asked, then we cannot reject this overture or slight it without retracting our favorite boast that ours is a "bridge Church." What sort of a bridge would that be by which men can pass over to us only in single file, one by one, by individual submissions?

It may be thought presumptuous of me, who am only a private person and can claim to represent no party or faction, that I press these considerations upon the deputies to the General Convention. I do it in this form only because my paper was written so late and was protracted to such length that none of our Church periodicals could find room to publish it until after the Convention. Truly I am loath to intervene at all in any ecclesiastical dispute, which in the nature of the case must have a quasi-political character. But I am told that what I have to say is not likely to be heard from any other source. That is quite likely, for I have the distinction—not an enjoyable distinction, for it is attributable to a dolorous fact—the singular distinction, I will say, of being the only man now living, in our Communion at least, whether here or in Great Britain, who, so far as I know, has written seriously (first forty years ago, and again twenty) upon the historical questions which underlie the problems of Church unity. Whether many of the representatives of the two Churches in question have read seriously

Conveniton News To Be Broadcast

Presiding Bishop Will Open Series of Nation-wide Broadcasts Sunday, October 3.

Cleveland, Ohio.—The 54th General Convention will be described and explained by frequent radio broadcasts from Cleveland stations. Details of radio programs will appear in the newspapers from day to day.

The Presiding Bishop will open the series of nation-wide broadcasts in the Episcopal Church of the Air of the Columbia Broadcasting System from Station WGAR, Cleveland, Sunday morning, October 3, from 9:00 to 9:30 Cleveland time (Eastern Standard Time). This will be a keynote address as the Convention begins its sessions.

The Rev. Dr. Walter W. Van Kirk will make two broadcasts from Cleveland, originating with National Broadcasting Company's Station WTAM, and on a nation-wide hookup. The first will be on Friday evening, October 8, 9:45 to 10:00 when Dr. Van Kirk will summarize Convention activities. The second broadcast will be Saturday, October 9, from 5:30 to 5:45 P. M., which is the regular waekly "Religion in the News" fetaure conducted by Dr. Van Kirk for the National Broadcasting Company and the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America in cooperation. The hours are Cleveland time.

Arrangements are being made for the distribution of news of the Convention for the purposes of all periodic news broadcasts originating in Cleveland.

Personal Report to Be Brought Churches After Convention

New York, N. Y.—A personal report to the Church will follow General Convention promptly, according to announcement from the Presiding Bishop's Office. Bishop Tucker suggested to the diocesan bishops that immediately after General Convention, sectional or convocational meetings for clergy and selected lay leaders, men and women, be held. He emphasized that laymen invited should include Every Member Canvass chairmen. At these meetings a representative of the Presiding Bishop will bring a message and report on the Church's Program.

Already sixty of the dioceses and districts have accepted the plan enthusiastically, and the special "Representatives", most of them bishops, will spend three to five days in the dioceses assigned to them, attending the meetings arranged for them, and telling of the Convention, the new Program, the outlook for the Church's work locally and nationally, and latest information about opportunities growing out of the war.

PUERTO RICO TO HAVE EPISCOPAL CHURCH OF THE AIR

New York, N. Y.—Bishop Charles B. Colmore, now in the United States to attend General Convention, reports that at the time he left Puerto Rico, the "Episcopal Hour of the Air" was to be started as a regular feature of the Mayaguez radio station. It will be broadcast every other Sunday from 2:30 to 3:00 P. M.

The choir of St. Andrew's Church will introduce each program with a regular theme, a Praetorius coupled with the St. Andrew's Hymn, all sung in four parts a capella. Then will follow a short sermon by the Rev. Lorenzo Alvarez; then a question and answer period, informal; ending with the musical theme again and the fadeout.

The Rev. Charles F. Boynton of St. Andrew's, has developed the a capella choir into one of the outstanding features of that mission. It has 25 voices, and reports have come from many sources certifying to the fine quality of music rendered..

Work Is Never Done

And That Guy Is the Chaplain!

Pearl Harbor, T. H.—"The Chaplain is one guy whose work is never done," comments Staff Sergeant Gene Ward, a Marine Corps Combat officer, whose home is in Jackson Heights, Long Island, N. Y.

Sergeant Ward writes about Chaplain William S. Brown, USNR, who was, before entering the service, rector of St. Paul's Parish, Toledo, Ohio.

"In addition to his biggest job," says the Sergeant, "providing for the spiritual needs of his men, Chaplain Brown is counselor, sick-bed visitor and chief personal problem solver for his men.

"After taking all this in his stride, he took an extra-curricular plunge into the Post athletic program to such a depth that he found himself out on the basketball court as referee of the rough-and-tough battles in the current intercompany hoop tourney."

Not that basketball is new to the Chaplain. He starred on the team at Feen College, Cleveland, Ohio, where he graduated with his B. A. degree in 1938.

"When a Post newspaper was started recently, Chaplain Brown displayed another talent, for his column, 'The Chaplain Speaks,' has become a regular feature. In it he discusses religion, the latest books, gives out with the newest in war gags.

"But writing is no novelty to him either, as his articles on coin collecting, his pet hobby, have appeared in a number of journals. He is a member of the American Numismatic Association and his coin collection has been appraised at over $2,000.

"There's more, too. When the urge is on him, Chaplain Brown plays as mean a set of drums as you'd want to hear and the Post Band is thinking of drafting him any day.

"All of which leads Marines around here to wonder just what their 'hustling Chaplain' will be up to next."

The Chaplain is a Bexley Hall graduate, and took his Navy training at Norfolk, Va.

Increased Cooperation Is Notable

Interdenominational Canvass of Permanent Value

Detroit, Mich.—St. Joseph's Church regards the United Church Canvass as a creator of permanent values. Increased interdenominational and interfaith cooperation are notable. Growing out of this first cooperation in the Canvass, came a Day Camp for children of war workers, held in a nearby church, with other churches participating in leadership and equipment. In addition a series of Sunday evening union services are to be conducted this fall and winter with all churches taking part. The plan promotes a community consciousness of understanding and fellowship in the North Woodward area of Detroit.

The Rev. William Conrad Hamm, rector of St. Joseph's, says that his parish provided leadership for the various churches in setting up a community project of publicity and advertising in Detroit newspapers. Quarter-page space was used, with attractive copy and illustration. The bodies which shared in the advertising included Congregational, Baptist, Christian, Episcopal, Methodist and Presbyterian Churches, and the Jewish Synagogue Temple Beth El.

In St. Joseph's parish, Mr. Hamm says, the Every Member Canvass is conducted every year, with a steady growth of pledges and number of givers. At present some 440 families support the budget of the church, and the average pledge is nearly $50 per year. "Laymen who have headed the Every Member Canvass Committees," Mr. Hamm says, "believe thoroughly in the steps of preparation, training, canvassing and follow-up. As a result, these men are in demand for diocesan leadership."

LEGACY MAKES POSSIBLE HOSPITAL ADDITION

Salt Lake City, Utah.—Ground has been broken for a new wing of St. Marks' Hospital, Salt Lake City. Bishop Moulton advises that a large legacy to the hospital made possible the present plans for a much needed addition, which he believes can be completed in six months.

St. Mark's will be with the new wing, the largest hospital in its area. Bishop Moulton turned the first spade of earth on 10:30 A. M. September 8.

SCHOOL BOY SENDS EARNINGS TO CHINA

Englewood, N. J.—A sixteen-year-old boy has given $20 to Mrs. Lloyd R. Craighill for Church work in China, and particularly for the work of Bishop Robin Chen. The money was earned this summer by work in an electric power plant. He rooms at boarding school with the son of Bishop and Mrs Craighill, and through them became intensely interested in China and the Church's mission there.

The Christian Church's Opportunity

To Show the World How to Live Together

Petersburg, Va.—Christian Education, its purpose, its scope, its methods were uppermost in the thinking of local churchmen during the week-end of September 18-20, which the Rev. D. A. McGregor, secretary of the Department of Christian Education, National Council, and Miss Charlotte Tompkins, field worker, spent at Saint Paul's Church.

"I am confident that the Church School will do its job," Dr. McGregor told the Sunday morning congregation, "those who have fallen down and are continuing to fail are you, the adult churchmen. It is a mistake to assume as many do, that Christian Education is for children only."

"The Christian Church," he went on to say, "has an opportunity today for the second time in history (the first was during the early centuries of the Christian era in the Roman Empire) to show the world, thrown as it is in close proximity, how to live together. This cannot, will not, be done unless her members are informed as well as consecrated. 'Behold I give unto you a kingdom,' says the Master. The kingdom must be understood as best we can if we are to be in any way fit to receive such a divine legacy."

At that same service the Church School teachers and officers came forward to the chancel rail and publicly dedicated themselves to their task.

Sunday evening the Church School staff met with Dr. McGregor and discussed their aims. The group decided that they would consider they had done a good job if the following things were true of their pupils at the end of the year: a relationship to Jesus Christ, Christian practice in daily life (ethics), a sense of being a part of the Church, a clearer knowledge of the Christian story, an expressive Christian life (witness), and a deeper relationship to God.

Monday afternoon the members of the staff met with Miss Tompkins to discuss materials and teaching methods.

The two days was climaxed by a dinner for the Church School staff, a committee of parents, several visiting clergy and members of other congregations.

"Our responsibility toward the Church's youth is to create a living trust in God and a spirit glad to taste the joy of loving helpfulness to others," Dr. McGregor said in speaking to them. "Do you want anything better for your children? There isn't anything better. Knit youth's life into the fellowship of the Church for she is the most powerful force in our world."

SPEND WEEK-ENDS IN CHURCH WORK

New York, N. Y.—Two young Church people, Mr. and Mrs. Newton H. Ketcham, both employed during the week, felt that they wanted to spend their week-ends in some kind of Church work. They joined the camp staff of the Sheltering Arms, a New York institution for the care of children. Every week-end while the camps were open, Mr. Ketcham taught the boys craft, especially photography, including how to make their own cameras, while Mrs. Ketcham had a religious education program for the girls.

Holy Trinity Rector Resigns

The Rev. Robert E. Roe Gives Up Position Due to Ill Health

Greensboro, N. C.—The resignation of Rev. Robert E. Roe as rector of Holy Trinity Parish, due to his health, and the acceptance of his resignation by the vestry, were announced at the service September 19.

The Rev. Mr. Roe, who has been on leave since last December at Patrick Springs, Va., where he went in an effort to regain his health after developing a heart ailment, served Holy Trinity Church twice—the first time from 1914 to 1922 and later from January 1, 1932, to the present.

The vestry has accepted Rev. Mr. Roe's resignation with much reluctance and has elected him rector emeritus of the parish.

Rev. Mr. Roe and Mrs. Roe will continue to reside in Greensboro where, as he wrote in his letter, "the personal ties may be maintained which have come to mean so much to me through the years."

The Rev. Mr. Roe is a native of the eastern shore of Maryland. He attended General Theological Seminary in New York City and for a period of approximately a decade in his early ministry was a missionary to Alaska. After serving as rector of various parishes he came here in 1914 for his first rectorship at Holy Trinity. In 1922 he received a call to an Episcopal Church in Vineland, N. J., where he remained until accepting the call to return here in 1932.

It was announced that no successor to Rev. Mr. Roe has been secured. For the present, services at Holy Trinity are being conducted by Maj. Harrison A. Brann, Episcopal chaplain at Basic Training Center No. 10.

Consecration Sermon By Bishop Quin

Bishop of Texas Preaches at Consecration of the Rev. Everett Jones on September 24

San Antonio, Texas—Describing "the kind of people who alone can stop war" by his text (Acts 15:25-26), "It seemed good unto us . . . to send chosen men unto you with our beloved Barnabas and Paul, men that have hazarded their lives for the name of our Lord Jesus Christ," Bishop Clinton S. Quin, in his sermon at the consecration of the Rev. Everett H. Jones as Bishop of West Texas, September 24, said, "Might and numbers are necessary to overcome might and numbers, but after all, war comes to an end and peace is in the offing, only when the lesser might is exhausted and overcome, and people, not guns, made in the image of God, sit down around a table and terms are drawn. We must have the kind of people our text refers to if we are to have peace; men who have deep religious convictions, who believe man is akin to God."

"Man's only hope of a decent world to live in, and of the Peace which Jesus Christ promised," Bishop Quin declared, "is to live and build in partnership with God. We ordain clergy in the Church because we believe them qualified to make this fact plain to people. We consecrate Bishops and set them apart as overseers because we also believe them to be experienced and qualified to direct and lead people in wider areas; but the real test of such a policy on the part of the Church and of leadership on the part of the individual who is thus ordained and consecrated depends on whether or not the man selected is the type who will hazard his life for Jesus Christ."

Bishop Quin said that a bishop may be lazy; he may become engrossed in details of administration; he can be aloof from people in need; "he may be an isolationist and justify his exclusiveness on the grounds of necessary enterprise at his home base—the Church will still go on, but lag, and first in his own diocese." "He can be an ecclesiastic and hold his office by right of historical precedent but all he might have left is his See, and what he 'sees' will not be much.

"The time is on us," Bishop Quin asserted, "when the bishop may no longer coast along with the crowd preaching pious platitudes when the world is on fire, and the people want to know how to put the fire out, and they have a right to know what he means and what the Church means by this peace which Jesus Christ promised, as distinguished from the peace which the world can give. This may not be done by preaching alone; it must be supplemented and exampled by the actual living."

The Bishop listed vital present-day issues on which the Church must speak, among them Race Relationships, the Jewish problem, Japanese, Latin American neighbors, employee and employer relationships, Christian education in or in connection with the public schools, Church unity, all of them "to be settled in the post-war period, and on all of which we should speak our minds as Christians, not as experts in political science, but certainly from the platform of God and man in partnership and say so even to Russia."

"The bishop has a chief part in setting the missionary policy of his Church," Bishop Quin continued. "A bishop may not straddle such issues. He is a shepherd; the shepherd leads his flock. He will never lead anyone nearer to God than he himself is. The public has a right to know where a bishop stands on such issues,—or if he merely sits."

In conclusion, Bishop Quin addressed Bishop-elect Jones directly, saying, "I was disappointed when you did not accept your election to Honolulu, but I had enough confidence in you to believe that your decision was made from conviction in prayer. I am happy at the prospect of having you as my nearest neighbor bishop. You have been able to observe many mistakes I have made in my 25 years as a bishop, and I hope you may profit from what you know.

"Throw yourself into the lives of your people. Know your sheep. Keep close to your clergy. Hold fast to your custom of an ordered period each day to get spiritual undergirding. Begin a native ministry in your diocese. Do not be lured by flattery or appeal away from your diocese too much of the time by the calls that will come to you to preach or conduct missions. After ten years you could accept a few of these invitations. Avoid the appearance of busyness. When we seem so busy we frighten the sheep we are expected to lead. Be loyal to the whole Church's program, to those with administrative responsibilities. If you do not like them, or think them misfits for their jobs, say so, but for God's sake be loyal to the Church's appointed way of caring for the whole Church, and regardless of what you get or what it costs, be known to your people and the world as a person who is willing to hazard his life for Jesus Christ."

U. S. O. CALLS ON GIRLS' FRIENDLY SOCIETY

New York.—"The wartime picture of adolescent girls is not the peacetime school girl picture. War has affected the routine of their lives as well as that of their brothers." So says the U. S. O. in a bulletin just released on Community Planning for Adolescent Girls.

The Girls' Friendly Society was one of six national organizations asked by the U. S. O. to help prepare this bulletin that will have a nationwide use wherever the work with young girls is important. It is significant that the U. S. O. should call upon The Girls' Friendly Society to cooperate with such organizations as the Girl Scouts, the Girl Reserves and the Camp Fire Girls in sponsoring this bulletin. The Church —in this case represented by The Girls' Friendly Society—must take its place in facing new situations and using its resources and influence for the welfare of all young people.

In its guides for Community Youth Programs, the bulletin lists 14 points, such as: flexible programs for employed girls and boys, planning for the boy who has not gone into service to guard against loss of self-esteem, competing with undesirable commercial recreation by providing more attractive and sophisticated programs than those formerly considered adequate for the teen age. It ends: "An adequate program, such as outlined above, should be developed for all girls and boys, regardless of race, creed or background, so that all groups have an equal opportunity to develop into responsible citizenship. Left to stumble through this chaotic period, adolescents can create an extremely uncomfortable world, but properly guided through these conflicting times, they can take their rightful place in the world. THIS IS THE CHALLENGE FOR EVERY COMMUNITY."

BISHOP LONGLEY PRESENTS RESIGNATION

New York, N. Y.—The Presiding Bishop has received the resignation of the Rt. Rev. Harry S. Longley, bishop of Iowa, for action at General Convention. He wishes the resignation to be effective November 1.

Bishop Longley is 75 years old, and has suffered considerably from a bronchial ailment. "I feel that it is time for me to step aside and allow a younger man to take up the burden of the diocese," he told his Standing Committee. Bishop Longley plans to move to Charleston, W. Va., where his son, the Rev. Harry S. Longley, Jr., is rector of St. John's Church.

If Bishop Longley's resignation is accepted by the House of Bishops, it is probable that a special diocesan convention will be held in December, to elect his successor. November 1 will mark the completion of 31 years as Bishop of Iowa by Bishop Longley.

Seventh Bishop Of Jerusalem

Consecration of Archdeacon Stewart Took Place in Westminster Abbey

New York, N. Y.—Through the Jerusalem and the East Mission, the Presiding Bishop was informed that the consecration of Archdeacon W. H. Stewart as Bishop in Jerusalem took place as planned, September 21, as "The Archdeacon arrived safely in England after an inexpressibly protracted and tedious journey." The consecration was in Westminster Abbey, with the Archbishop of Canterbury as Consecrator. Archdeacon Stewart was presented by the Bishops of London and Gloucester, and the sermon was preached by the Archdeacon of Lincoln, the Ven. K. C. H. Warner.

American Chaplain Charles T. Bridgeman, who is intimately acquainted with the Bishop-elect, says, "There is no one better fitted by general training and special experience to continue the work so unexpectedly laid down by his predecessor. He had been in Palestine only two years when, in 1928, the late Bishop MacInnes installed him as Archdeacon of Palestine, Syria and Transjordan. Since then his work as Archdeacon has brought him into intimate contact with every phase of the varied work here. He has been the trusted advisor of two Bishops, and has carried the full responsibility of the administration for long periods when the Ordinary has been away or the See vacant. More than this, it has fallen to him to reside for considerable periods as the Bishop's representative in Cyprus and Iraq, as well as act as British Chaplain in Syria, Haifa and Jerusalem, and to serve as Chaplain General of the Christian Missionary Council, Editor of 'Lines of Communication,' Examining Chaplain to the Bishop, etc. These phases of his work are well known, but not so widely his hobbies, namely, 17th Century Anglican Divines, of whose works he has a splendid collection of original editions; ecclesiastical stained glass and Church architecture, though something of his good judgment might have been surmised from his contribution to the redecoration of the east end of the Cathedral and the new All Saints' Church in Beirut."

"One great asset of a Bishop in Jerusalem," Canon Bridgeman concludes, "is that he shall be able to conduct a service tolerably well in Arabic; and it was therefore good to hear the Archdeacon end Evensong in the Cathedral on the day his appointment was made public, with prayer in Arabic as well as in English.

"The confidence which the Archdeacon has inspired continues with him in his new and greater responsibilities as the Seventh Anglican Bishop in Jerusalem, and we can assure him of the loyal support which he should have and of the prayers for which he has asked."

ST. PAUL'S INSTITUTE OPENS WITH RECORD ENROLLMENT

Lawrenceville, Va.—The 56th Session of St. Paul's Polytechnic Institute opened Tuesday, September 14, 1943, with a record enrollment. With many more to come, over 800 have registered, representing fifteen States and Panama.

As in almost all other schools throughout the country, the male enrollment is very small. The female enrollment, however, is so large that the dormitories are more than crowded and the Institution is confronted with the problem of trying to comfortably accommodate the overflow. The students seem a fine intelligent lot filled with vision, ambition and determination. It is encouraging to know that so many of our young Negroes are too far-seeing and wise to be lured from the path of education and training by the very high wages being paid now in "temporary defense work."

This year marks the first of the full four-year college at St. Paul's and the administration is looking forward with great pride and anticipation toward the granting of the first degrees on May 31, 1944.

Personal Notes Of Interest

The Rev. Dr. Charles W. Lowry has resigned his professorship at the Virginia Theological Seminary in order to accept the rectorship of All Saints' Church, Chevy Chase, in the Diocese of Washington.

Dr. Lowry will continue to offer his Senior course in Systematic Theology. Apologetics will be given by Canon Wedel, Warden of the College of Preachers, and the History of Christian Thought will be taught by the Rev. Howard A. Johnson of St. John's Church, Washington. ### Unity Within

Mr. Editor:

Writing as a layman who frequently reads Church papers representing various schools of thought or persuasion within the Protestant Episcopal Church, I am struck by one feature which is highlighted by many articles and letters pro and con the proposed Concordat with Presbyterians. This is the deep-rooted and sometimes disturbingly acrimonious nature of the disunity within the ranks of our own Church.

By way of background to these evidences of disagreement, I recall having read explanations or justifications of such a state of affairs—written some years ago, before the Concordat became a current topic. These explanations presented the existence of such freely-aired differences of viewpoint as evidence of the breadth and balance of the Anglican Communion, and as illustrating the contention that our Church is a potential bridge between the extremes of Roman Catholicism and out-and-out Protestantism. However, it seems to me that the debates and printed commentaries on the Concordat have brought this disunity even more clearly into relief, and the light in which it now appears must surely make the "bridge" look rickety, to say the least.

I am, in fact, surprised and frequently pained by the uncharitable, sarcastic and even bitter attitude which characterizes some of the references made by members of one group or "party" in the Protestant Episcopal Church about the beliefs, practices or statements of the other. These "digs" are not confined, of course, to the discussions on the Concordat, but they appear to have been given added stimulus thereby.

I should like to make this suggestion—that General Convention be asked to consider the appointment of a Commission on Approaches to Unity within the Protestant Episcopal Church—not with a view to enforcing a regimented behaviorism but rather aimed at a broader and more charitable understanding among the members of our own Church Family.

Prominent Presbyterians have already stated their desire that efforts be made to mend the open organizational breaches between the several branches of Presbyterianism in the United States, before proceeding further toward organic union with the Episcopalians.

No less necessary, it seems to me, is the clearing of the air and the promulgation of a closer Christian Brotherhood among Episcopalians, as a preliminary to any possible Concordat with any other church.

I know that there are wonderful Christians to be found in all these divergent Episcopal groups. These men and women of good will can make a real start toward "unity and Godly love" in our own Communion—a goal worthy of much of the energy now being otherwise spent.

Yours faithfully,
Edgar P. H. James,
Captain, Air Corps.

On September 20, the Church Divinity School of the Pacific opened its 51st year, with eighteen students in residence. In spite of the restrictions on civilian and theological study, three new students have been received under existing law. An innovation of the first week was a series of informal periods on the devotional life. On four successive mornings, Dean Shires, Dr. Randolph Miller, the Rev. Everett Bosshard, and Dr. Pierson Parker spoke on different aspects of private religious living. Classes began on September 27. Peter Boes, a middler student, was ordained to the diaconate on September 27 by Bishop Porter of Sacramento. Prof. Miller is giving the course in philosophy of religion for the students at the Pacific School of Religion.

BISHOP SHERRILL VISITING ARMED SERVICES IN ALASKA

The Rt. Rev. Henry Knox Sherrill, bishop of the Diocese of Massachusetts and vice chairman of the General Commission on Army and Navy Chaplains, is now in the Alaska area visiting Protestant chaplains and service men as a representative of the Protestant Churches in the United States.

Bishop Sherrill is expected to visit Army and Navy establishments at Kodiak, Adak and Dutch Harbor.

His mission in the Alaskan area is similar to that of Dr. William Barrow Pugh of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, in Europe. Doctor Pugh, who is chairman of the General Commission on Army and Navy Chaplains and who is Stated Clerk of the Presbyterian General Assembly, at Philadelphia, is contacting the Protestant chaplains, studying their problems and assuring them of support of home churches.

The General Commission on Army and Navy Chaplains represents a majority of the Protestant churches in the United States in furnishing chaplains for both the Army and Navy.

Bishop Sherrill is a veteran of the first World War, having served as a chaplain with Headquarters of the First Army at Base Hospital Number 5, American Expeditionary Force, from 1917 to 1919.

Hymn Sung at the Presentation of the United Thank Offering

HAIL TO the Lord's Anointed,
Great David's greater son!
Hail, in the time appointed,
His reign on earth begun!
He comes to break oppression,
To set the captive free;
To take away transgression,
And rule in equity.

He comes with succour speedy
To those who suffer wrong,
To help the poor and needy,
And bid the weak be strong;
To give them songs for sighing,
Their darkness turn to light,
Whose souls, condemned and dying
Were precious in His sight.

He shall come down like showers
Upon the fruitful earth,
And love, joy, hope, like flowers,
Spring in His path to birth:
Before Him on the mountains
Shall peace, the herald go;
And righteousness in fountains
From hill to valley flow.

Kings shall bow down before Him
And gold and incense bring;
All nations shall adore Him,
His praise all people sing;
To Him shall prayer unceasing
And daily vows ascend;
His kingdom still increasing,
A kingdom without end.

O'er every foe victorious,
He on His throne shall rest;
From age to age more glorious,
All-blessing and all-blest:
The tide of time shall never
His covenant remove;
His name shall stand for ever,
His changeless Name of Love.

PART OF A LETTER

From a Soldier of Alexandria, Va., to His Rector

I HAVE BEEN driving a tank. Now they are sending me to another Camp that is about 50 miles away, where I am to teach Machine Gun School. I want to meet the boys I am going to teach. They have just come in the Army and I am sorry for them. They are so young. Some of them do not look like they can fire a machine gun. But I guess the Army knows what it is about. I am trying to make friends with all of them. There are 450 in all. Today is Sunday and I have just come back from Church. I took 45 of them to Church with me. They all seem like fine boys. The job the Captain gave me is a big job, and it is kind of on my mind. These boys depend on me to teach them and I am going to teach them everything I know about it, and God will do the rest. If we trust Him I know we all will come home safe. I have not missed a Sunday going to Church and it helps me a lot. By going it puts my mind at rest. There are some very fine people here. They treat you just as if you were their own sons, and I think the USO is doing a fine job for the boys in the Service. Home gets on my mind once in a while, but I go to town and talk to the people or go and have a talk with the Chaplain and he sets me right with the things I have on my mind. I pray every night for the day this war will end so I can come home to my people and friends once more. The cooks are getting ready to call us to eat. Say Hello to my friends and keep on writing to me. It helps me to hear from people back home.

Note: This man (in his twenties) was not at all a Parson's pet before his induction a few months ago and at first he was miserably homesick in the Army and "nothing was right".

HAVEN . . .

By J. W. KENNEDY

A JACK-IN-THE-BOX is a toy for children. I have had many of them. The chief joy of them, as I remember, seems to be a bit of dread over what we know will appear when we release the catch. The inside jumps out so quickly and is so close to us that we are frightened by it. There is a kind of boogey-man fear of these boxes, and it takes a lot of childish courage to slip that catch loose, even though a gleeful laugh follows the jack's jump out of the box. This is a pretty good figure for use in describing the reasons for our neglect in releasing that catch on the jacks in the many boxes of our souls, and letting out that which has been pressed down and locked up for a long time. It is the childish dread of opening hidden things because we know that what is tightly closed within is going to jump out and we are not sure whether it will startle and frighten us or not. When we finally get around to releasing the catch and letting the jack out of the box we are free indeed, for the inanimate creature (made potentially animate only by our stuffing it into the box, attempting to keep it out of sight) can no longer jump out at us unless we force him back in again.

When there is that jack-in-the-box feeling about something within, waste no time about slipping aside the catch and letting the penny dreadful fear have its moment and then die. One box that is continually being sprung and refilled is our attitude toward others. We have that feeling of something hidden, and we think we know what it is, but we hesitate to open the latch and let it out. We are fearful lest it be a monster and not the queer looking little jack at all. The longer we hesitate the more monstrous the contents becomes and the less desirous we are of letting them out. Be assured that there is only one difficult moment in the entire process of the release of pent-up feelings of guilt or suspicion or other things, and that is the actual moment when the jack jumps out. From that very instant there is no more harm left in the jack or in the box. For those who seek to release that which is cooped up and hidden and is a nagging, uncomfortable sense of uncertainty always in feeling distance, it is well to remember that the experience is not half so terrible as we have imagined. I cannot prove it unless you try it, and tomorrow is much later than today. Try it with resentment, or misunderstanding, or barriers of one kind or another, or long hidden guilt and the like.

THINKING ALONG such lines of release, a phrase of Kirkegaarde, the great theologian, neglected until quite recently, whose life work is now making itself felt on the soul-life of the world, comes to mind: "Truth is only truth when it is truth to me." This applies in like measure to almost everything; until we are identified with whatever it is, we can have no part in it.

It is easy to preach, "Christ died for thee!" but there will be no saving of anyone until "Christ died for me" is upon our lips. How wholesome is the contrast between two toy shops. In one the jacks are all stacked up in little black boxes, waiting to jump out at us and scare us. In the other the boxes are open and the jacks are swinging over the sides in grotesque positions but with all the frightening quality gone out of them. When we fully realize the truth of a condition and that a part of that truth is for us, it will make many of us go ahead and release the catches on our own boxes and let out the inner spring jacks. Do not

A Challenge to Christianity

By FREDERICK W. NEVE

I REMEMBER very well, in my last year at Oxford, hearing a sermon by Dr. Pusey preached, however, by Cannon Liddon, as his doctor advised him not to preach it himself for he was then ninety years of age. This sermon made a deep impression on my mind, which has deepened with the years that have elapsed since then. Its main teaching was to the effect that the Church and Natural Science should work independently of each other, each carrying on its own work on its own lines. With the exception of a temporary excursion into the Modernist Movement, which failed to satisfy me, I have followed the line suggested by Dr. Pusey.

Going Forward on the Spiritual Plane

For a number of years I have felt that the great work of Natural Science constitutes a challenge to the Church to carry out a similar work along spiritual lines by seeking to develop the resources of the spiritual world, for the benefit of mankind, just as Natural Science has been developing the resources of nature for the same purpose. For some years I was able to go no further because I did not know how this work was to be carried on. The first great war—1914-1918—however, made me feel that after the war the great work of reconstruction would have to take place and that an entirely new order of things would have to be created. I, therefore, determined to prepare myself to take part in this work of reconstruction when it should take place. It seemed to me that it afforded an opportunity to make a great venture of faith along the lines suggested above in relation to the development of the resources of the spiritual world.

The Order of the Thousandfold

Therefore, at the beginning of the year 1917, I began to pray to be made a thousandfold more useful, in order that I might be equipped for such an addition of spiritual power as would enable me to make a worthwhile contribution to the great work which lay ahead. The story of what followed is, I believe, familiar to most of those who will read this article, namely the incident of the little child coming in to Church with her doll to help make my noon-day prayer service more effective. The widespread interest aroused by this incident encouraged me to found the Order of the Thousandfold, whose members were invited to join with me, wherever they might be in praying for a thousandfold increase in usefulness. The Order, in spite of the fact that it has no organization and no financial support, has spread far and wide, not only throughout this country but to the ends of the earth and it is impossible to say what is the full extent of its influence.

The Development of the Spiritual Resources

We may now return to a further elucidation of the idea underlying the Order of the Thousandfold. It represents an attempt to draw from the resources of the spiritual world the power needed to meet the emergency which confronts Christianity in our own time and generation. It does not mean that a single individual can accomplish this, but it does mean that if Christians generally can only be led to take a larger conception of the vast possibilities of the Christian life their united efforts would not only meet the present emergency but would go a long way towards the bringing in of the Kingdom of God upon earth, for the accomplishment of which we Christians are collectively responsible.

The Real Meaning of God's Purpose

Taking into account the fact that the Christian Church and her members have been praying, in the Lord's Prayer, that God would bring in His Kingdom, for nearly two thousand years, and that this petition has not been answered, we may, I think, take it for granted that it has never been God's purpose to do this Himself but that it is the special work of His Church, and that when she and her members really set about it in earnest, He will provide all the power needed to bring it to pass. Our Lord Himself gave this commission to His disciples: "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature," and this blessed assurance, "Lo I am with you alway even unto the end of the world." If the great missionary work, carried on in the First Century had been continued with the same zeal and tenacity of purpose the whole world would have been brought into the Christian Church long ago and the present state of human affairs could never have been.

What Is The World For?

The evangelization of the non-Christian world at the present time is impracticable on account of the war, but it should be the first concern of the Christian Church after the war is over, as it is only such a great spiritual enterprise that can awaken the Church to a full consciousness of what it is really in the world for, and that any further delay in carrying out the divine purpose may entail still greater disasters than those which we have already experienced. It may be said that plans have already been made for the improvement of social conditions among our own people and those affected by the war. But that has reference more especially to the mere surface of things and not to the spiritual regeneration of mankind.

The Great Christian Priority

Christ has laid down this principle which has a priority over all others, "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness and all these things shall be added unto you." The secular governments can attend to the first in their own interests but if such social improvements are to be permanent they must be based upon spiritual foundations. It is heartening to know that our Presiding Bishop has set forth a challenge to the members of our own Church to enter upon a great missionary enterprise at the end of the war to carry the Gospel to such parts of the heathen world as present the best opportunities for doing so, specially India and China. It is to be hoped that other Christian bodies will follow his leadership in this magnificent endeavor.

Opening Address of General Convention

Abstract of sermon preached by the Presiding Bishop at Trinity Cathedral, Cleveland, Ohio, Sunday morning, October 13, 1943

"WAR IS A REAPING of that which man himself has sown," the Rt. Rev. Henry St. George Tucker, Presiding Bishop of the Episcopal Church, declared in his address at the opening service of the 54th Triennial General Convention of the Church, in Trinity Cathedral Sunday morning, October 3. Bishop Tucker asserted that "the consequences which follow man's misuse of the divine gift of freedom are used by God as solemn warning to our conscience. In so far as we interpret this war as God's judgment upon sin, we must also recognize it as an opportunity for redemption."

"The tragedy of war is a judgment not only upon the evil of those who were defeated, but it is a warning to victors and vanquished alike of the terrible consequences of sin. As Christians we must interpret the war as a reminder of our own faithlessness and inefficiency. If victory means that God gives us another and a greater opportunity to assist Him in carrying forward the work of redemption, the very fact that this opportunity comes only through the evil of war points out to us the imperative need for repentance.

REPENTANCE MEANS a recognition of our own unworthiness and incapacity. It is the realization that our only hope of deliverance from the bondage of corruption lies in reconciliation with God. There is a real danger that the enthusiasm for high moral ideals engendered by the war may lead to a mistaken trust in our own ability to live up to them.

"The very fact that it required such an evil activity as war to awaken us to the danger that threatened freedom, to summon us to a united effort to improve and extend it, is a clear indication that the task that lies before us partakes of the nature of redemption, and therefore requires Divine aid.

REDEMPTION MEANS primarily that God who gave us freedom does not abandon us when we use His gift to oppose His Will and thus bring ruin on ourselves. Because of His love for us He takes upon Himself the responsibility of repairing the damage done by our sin to Him, to our fellowmen, and to ourselves. To those who have lost their freedom and forfeited any right to consideration, at great cost to himself, He restores the opportunity and the capacity to choose freely. This assurance of redemption through Our Lord Jesus Christ is the heart of the Christian Gospel."

Demanding that Christians work for "a new and better world," Bishop Tucker insisted that the war would be fought in vain unless victory is recognized as providing the opportunity for such a world. "By a new and better world, we mean one in which peace, freedom, justice, righteousness and love will prevail. Plans for political, social and economic reconstruction with a view to promoting and maintaining these ideals are being widely discussed. Earnest consideration of such plans is highly important. Our Lord warned us of the folly of putting new wine in old bottles. But in our enthusiasm for the provision of new bottles, let us not forget the problem of producing the new wine. By new wine is meant a radical change in the characters and capacities of the people who are to live under the new world order.

"It is obvious that, important as it is for Christian men and women to use their expert technical knowledge and their understanding of Christian moral principles in drawing up plans for a better world, the primary responsibility of the Church is to cooperate with God in producing the new and better men and women, without whom such plans are doomed to failure. Free institutions are workable only by those who have the inner freedom that is made possible by the indwelling of the Holy Spirit.

THIS WAR HAS focussed our attention upon multitudes of people, both at home and abroad, who were previously outside the range of our consideration. We are being led to appreciate as never before the practical implications of the Christian belief that God has made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on the face of the whole earth. This general acknowledgement of the brotherhood of man does not arouse in us a sense of responsibility strong enough to impel us to make the effort and sacrifice required for its fulfillment. When, however, we look at these long-neglected brothers with a vision that has been illumined by the light of Divine love, we see stamped upon every brow the sign of the Cross. This marks even the most degraded, unattractive and apparently hopeless as 'a purchased possession of Christ.' He is one for whom Christ died and whom he has marked as a selected subject for redemption.

"Do not the signs of the times constitute a clear call from Christ to His Church to reclaim these possessions," the Bishop concluded, "to help Him make effective in them the redemption which He guaranteed by His death? Is there any loyal follower of Christ, any one whose own redemption has been bought with a price, that will fail to respond to such a call? By answering it, we will both show our gratitude to Christ and at the same time make an indispensable contribution to the cause for which we claim to be fighting. Those whom we help Christ deliver from the bondage of corruption will be duly qualified for citizenship in that free world for which we pray and strive."

One of the most persuasive of England's agnostic philosophers has discovered that agnosticism does not work in an evil world, and so he has changed his mind. In this clear, exciting, and yet not quite satisfactory confession of his change of view, Professor Joad gives his reasons for belief in God and his reservations concerning the Christian tradition, especially his doubts about the Church's doctrines concerning Christ, predestination, and other such unphilosophic tenets of the faith. It is helpful primarily as philosophic and religious autobiography.

Keynote to General Convention

Statement to the Joint Session of General Convention, Cleveland, O., October 3, 1943, by Presiding Bishop Henry St. George Tucker

AROUSED INTEREST, increased support, preparation for advance in every field of the Church's work are absolutely essential if the Christian Church is to play its proper part in the post-war world, Presiding Bishop Henry St. George Tucker told a Joint Session of the General Convention in session here, Sunday afternoon.

"Victory in this war," Bishop Tucker declared, will bring about a condition of opportunity and need that is worldwide. Everywhere there will be a strong feeling of dissatisfaction with what is or has been, and a reaching out after all available ways and means of realizing aspirations for something better. We shall have a secularized version of those attitudes which in religion we call repentence and faith. As Christians we recognize in such a situation both danger and opportunity. The danger is that the reconstruction prompted by secularized repentance and faith will inevitably result disastrously. Victory in this war will bring about a world wide condition of opportunity and need. Man's faith in the efficacy of his own efforts is hard to destroy.

"The imminence of this danger should be a challenge to the Church, not only to present Christian ideals as the goals toward which the world should aspire, but still more urgently to present faith in God as the only means by which our hopes can be realized. Victory in this war will open us an unparalelled opportunity for making actual in the life of mankind that redemption which was made possible by the sacrifice of Christ. The effort and sacrifice made in a war to secure freedom partake of the nature of redemption. Yet this sacrifice is an utterly inadequate price to pay for the real freedom of mankind. When the world's freedom was in imminent danger, no other means of averting the danger than war presented itself. If then, by bad means we cannot reach a good end, man finds himself in the tragic situation of being able to see and to attempt to follow the good without any possibility of attaining it unaided by God.

THE CALL TO worldwide service in the post war would prove not only an opportunity to fulfill our obligations as Christians and to show our gratitude to our Redeemer, but also by a means by which the corporate life of the Church will approach nearer to the perfection of its Founder, thus making its own life an 'earnest' of the achievement of His purpose to transform human society into the Kingdom of God.

"We have in our own country large areas that lie largely outside of the limits of existing parishers. I have in mind particularly the rural sections. At present the number of unchurched adults and of children to whom no opportunity for religious training or education is given is proportionately greater than in urban centers.

"There are also in this country racial groups whose religious needs demand much more attention than has been given them in the past. Our own branch of the Church has indeed for a long time shown considerable interest in work among the Indians.

"One of the reasons why our proposed budget for the next Triennium deserves the title of Forward in Service is that it represents the beginning of a real endeavor to give adequate attention to the religious needs of our largest racial group, that is, our Negro brother.

"Our overseas evangelistic effort is global in scope, but wise strategy calls for concentration of effort in any given period upon those sections which present the maximum of need and opportunity. We must go forward in all our mission fields, but if we ask where today shall we find the maximum of evangelization of China will be made through the Chinese Church to be used by it in carrying out plans drawn up by its own leaders.

WHEN WE CONSIDER God's call to apply His redemptive purpose to the postwar world, one major and immediate problem will be the provision of physical relief for the suffering and destitution which the war has either caused or brought to our attention. Relief done for Christ in the spirit of His love, is the first indispensable step in manifesting His love and in bringing men to Him. Relief that is prompted by the love of Christ will be so guided by the Divine wisdom as to avoid the danger that so often attends secularized philanthropy, namely the pauperization of the recipients. We can doubtless presume that in our own country, the Government agency that is charged with the responsibility of administering emergency relief will be fully aware of the existing dangers, and will endeavor to make it a means of helping people to help themselves. If these people are to be qualified to take their place in a world of freedom, peace and righteousness, spiritual and moral rehabilitation is no less essential than physical. This is a sphere in which government agencies are inhibited from giving much help. In many of the European countries, war conditions have had as disastrous an effect upon organized religion as upon secular activities. The Church in these countries will as it were be 'flat on its back' or at least seriously handicapped by lack of material resources just at a time when its influence and ministrations are most needed. This problem has been studied by representatives of a large number of our American Churches. The conclusion is that the most useful contribution that the Churches in this country can make to the rehabilitation in Europe will be to assist the already existing religious bodies there to get on their feet, so they can adequately minister to the spiritual needs of their own people. Our own Church has for several years been helping the Church of England maintain its widespread missionary activities. Plans will be presented to this Convention to widen the scope of this effort by assuming responsibility for helping the Orthodox Church in some European Country to rehabilitate its work. It is thought that Greece would be an appropriate field for this kind of assistance. Conferences with the leaders of the Greek Church are planned.

ONE INDIRECT BUT exceedingly important contribution that the Church must make to world relief is to keep alive the deepened and enlarged sense of obligation that has been developed under war conditions. War with all of its evils is in some respects a moral stimulant. It stirs up both the baser and the nobler sides of our nature. Unfortunately the stimulus which it gives to the selfish aggressive impulses has greater survival value than the moral idealism which it arouses. We cannot safely assume that a people who have given strenuous and sacrificial support to a cause in which their own national welfare was involved, will continue that support when the threat to their own well-being has been averted and they are asked to show equal concern for the welfare of others. As a general proposition the Christian teaching that nations are members one of another, and that when one member suffers, all suffer, may be accepted and acted upon in times of emergency. When we return to our normal routine, it is likely that it will be given scant attention. National altruism as a rule of expediency is a poor rival to our innate selfishness and worldly prudence.

"World evangelism," Bishop Tucker concluded, "as a means to world fellowship must be the aim of every parish, every diocesan and every General Church program. Humanly it may seem an unattainable goal. We live in a world for which Christ died. That means a world in which Christ has made possible the redemption of every single human being. It is our privilege to help Christ make what is possible actual."

Abstract of Address to Joint Session on Sunday Afternoon

By HAROLD L. TRIGG

President Elizabeth City State Teachers' College, Elizabeth City, North Carolina.

ADDRESSING the Joint Session of the 54th General Convention on Sunday afternoon, October 3, Dr. Harold L. Trigg, President of Elizabeth City State Teachers' College, Elizabeth City, N. C., a distinguished leader of the Negro race, stated needs and opportunities among Negro people for the ministrations of the Episcopal Church.

Dr. Trigg, fifty-year-old educator, who is a graduate of Morgan College, Baltimore, and Syracuse University, with postgraduate work at Teachers' College, Columbia University, and the degree of Doctor of Education from Morgan College, has been an instructor at Bennett College, Greensboro, N. C.; a professor at Slater Normal School, Winston Salem, N. C., New Orleans College, New Orleans, La., and Principal, Wake County Training School, Method, N. C., was also Supervisor at Columbian Heights Schools, Winston Salem. He is the first colored layman ever to be invited to address the General Convention.

Speaking as a layman of the Episcopal Church, Dr. Trigg declared Negro people lack the ministration of a sufficient number of adequately trained clergy, with a high percentage of them receiving no religious ministration at all. He stated that there are nearly seven million of the thirteen million Negroes in the United States who have no Church affiliation whatsoever. "Many of these people," the speaker said, "are looking for a spiritual anchor, the formula for harmonious community living 'the peace of God which passeth understanding.' You, who received them at Jamestown in the early days of the Western colonization, are under the watchful gaze of the Master Chaplain who stood on the sands and gave them courage to stick to it until they could stand on this platform in me, and beseech you to take up and carry on."

POST WAR adjustment will find thousands of young Negroes uprooted from their native soil, living in new places, seeking new affiliation, ready and anxious for the spiritual leadership which this Church can offer,' the speaker declared.

Offering a realistic picture of the Episcopal Church work with the Negro people, Dr. Trigg stated that there is "a distressing lack of trained Negro leaders; too much work for those that we have; an almost total absence of service to rural areas; a far too limited service to the regions where the largest number of Negroes live, and finally, over half the Negroes of the United States yet untouched by us or any other communion." He pleaded for "an effective evangelistic program; a guiding principle for work with Negroes; new and widened activity in every phase of work in this great home missionary field."

A negro layman, studying his Church, Dr. Trigg, looks to that Church for: First, The acceptance of a point of view, a principle or set of principles by which its missionary program for Negroes may be guided. "The Great Teacher graduated His class in three years, taking His early disciples from the status of Servant, to that of Friend. He conferred upon them the degree, 'Friend.' In the time they had been under His tutelage, they had learned all the things that He had heard of His Father, the principles of Christian living—Brotherhood, Justice, the wise stewardship of property, Service to Humanity, Neighborly Love. It is the principle of growth from servant to friend. They had grown in self direction and were able to go out and make Friends of other men. Any program of evangelism must provide for growth into self direction in light of the principles of Christian living within the organization of the Church, not into independence of the Church.

WORLD NATIONS use the interim between wars to make friends, but the frame of reference is not the friendship with Christ. There are these two systems of friendship, in the one, the strong, direct growth of the weak to the point where the two are united in the basic principles of living together in peace and harmony, in self-respect and mutual respect; the weak are made strong in intelligent friendship. The other is that of Hitler's super-race which maintains the chasm between servant and friend and forces cooperation from men of divergent ideas and interests in destruction of others. The next interim is the crucial one for these two systems. We look to the Christian Church to take the lead in making friends of the world, and this Church can start now and here with the Negro in her midst with an exemplary program of directed growth into Christian friendship, self-directing friendship."

The second thing that the Negro layman expects of his Church, Dr. Trigg stated as "The provision of an adequate supply of leaders in quantity and quality, men and women." The third: "a forward-looking, adequately supported virile missionary program based on the principle of growth, and for the necessary modifications in present organizations to make this effective." His fourth point was: "A special effort in rural areas where Negro youth is yearning for an enlightened and consistent leadership; in the southern territory where the majority of American Negroes live, and in all regions of the country where men are thirsting for guidance into the life of positive and happy effort."

Still another thing for which the layman may look to his Church, Dr. Trigg stated to be "At least as much opportunity to participate in policy forming and supervisory activities for ourselves as secular organizations permit." Here the speaker commended the recent action of the Episcopal Church in setting up the office of a Secretary for Negro Work in its Home Department, and the appointment of the Rev. Bravid W. Harris, to fill that new position.

DR. TRIGG URGED that plans be laid with consideration of methods of increasing self-support among Negro parishes, and this is affected, he said, by "the prevailing practice in this country, of paying the Negro ten to fifty per cent less for the same quantity and quality of work that is paid to other men. Then at intervals all or a part of this differential is returned to him as a magnanimous dole. This is not charity; it is withheld margin that would support our churches and provide for proportionate support of the general Church Program." "This is the margin of health and security and self respect," Dr. Trigg declared. "This margin would eliminate the dole. We want no retreat for mendicants."

In closing, Dr. Trigg said, "The layman looks to his Church to draw up in all her strength and might, and accept this challenge to a great mission. The time is ripe, the harvest is great. Lift the spiritual ceiling within the Church for the growth in the fullness of Christian living. Lift the economic ceiling without the Church for growth into self-support. Lead the world to the true understanding of the meaning of missions, and as men—grow with you into oneness with the principles of Christian living, crown their achevement, as the Master did, with the promotion to Friendship."

Sunday, Joint Session Day at G. C.

Speech of Rev. Dr. James Thayer Addison, Vice President of the National Council

WHEN CHRISTIANS are able to think of alien races as real people the chief intellectual barrier to a zeal for foreign missions is removed," the Rev. Dr. James Thayer Addison, vice president of the National Council of the Protestant Episcopal Church, said in his address to the Joint Session of the 53rd triennial General Convention.

Greater missionary opportunities in foreign fields than have existed for many years were envisioned by Dr. Addison as one of the results of the present world situation. He referred specifically to opportunities and needs in China, Liberia, Alaska and the Philippines.

"The sordid and selfish years which preceded the war with their confusion of thought and their fatally wrong answers to vital questions, were the latest example of man's effort to solve his problems and to find his way apart from God and in defiance of God's purposes revealed in Christ. Men and nations will emerge from the long and bloody struggle, suffering and weary, hoping and longing for better days, for security, for confidence. Perhaps with their hopes and longing there will be mingled a measure of genuine repentance. In the midst of world disorder, the Church will have the greatest chance in her long-lifetime to bring to bear upon the lacerated fabric of international society the healing touch of Christ, and with new boldness to prove to men that the Church has no rival as a divine force for reconciliation, for reconstruction and for re-invigoration."

REFERRING TO the Chinese situation, he said, "During the last six years of China's tragic suffering, the Chinese people have won the hearts of Americans, and no cause beyond our borders will command a response so ready and generous as the cause of service to the Chinese. There we are met by all the old problems and the familiar wants, and in addition all the calls for physical and social and spiritual healing and reconstruction made necessary by years of literally poisonous Japanese occupation. It is the testimony of every missionary and of every Chinese Christian leader that never before were the people so ready for what the Church of Christ can give. The inspiring leadership of Chiang Kai-Shek and his wife is symbolic of what the Chinese can do with Christianity when they embrace it. And that example is reinforced by the influence of the three and a quarter million other Chinese Christians.

"As we look forward to the coming days of peace and face with open eyes all the opportunities and obligations which the Church will then meet in the mission field the choice before us is clear. There is one aim which physically and morally is impossible, especially in the Far East. We cannot cautiously and carefully reconstruct the exact situation as it was ten years ago. The real choice before us, as a great branch of the Church of Christ, is a slow and timid retreat in the face of difficulties and dangers to which we are unequal or else a wholehearted and inspiring advance."

Influence of Christianity In China Unmistakable

The Rt. Rev. Andrew Y. Y. Tsu, Ph. D., Bishop of Kunming and Southwest China, Addresses Convention

National leadership out of all proportion to the numerical strength of the Chinese Christian community in the total population has been given to China during the war, the Rt. Rev. Andrew Y. Y. Tsu, Ph. D., Bishop of Kunming and Southwest China, told the joint session of the General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church tonight. "The influence of Christianity in China's social regeneration is unmistakable," he said.

Bishop of a missionary jurisdiction which has been opened up by the Chinese Church (Anglican) in the middle of the war, Dr. Tsu viewed the establishment of work in Kunming and Southwest China as evidence that the Chinese Christian community, instead of being disheartened by the suffering of the war, is going ahead. "Before the war, the southwestern provinces were a neglected region, neglected by the Central government, by the people in the prosperous coastal cities and by the church. But the invasion changed this attitude. Millions of people fleeing from the invaders have poured in and settled there. Several of the national universities have moved in with their thousands of students and faculty members and their families. The Church heard the call to go west, and in 1940 it sent the first missionary bishop to open up the newest mission field of our Church.

"The young Church of China is acting upon the wise saying that Heaven helps those who help themselves. If we ask your help, if we ask for more missionary reinforcements, it is not that thereby we would shirk our own responsibility. We will carry our own load, but it is a task so great and the time is so urgent that we need you in the Lord's vineyard with us."

Bishop Tsu referred to the fact that the United States and China are allies in arms. . . . "We do not rejoice over the fact that your country also has been plunged into the holocaust of war, but we do rejoice over the fact that whereas we were fighting a lone war for a cause greater than mere self-preservation, we now have America with all its strength and its resources making common cause with us for human decency and freedom. This new phase of our united front and collaboration has been brought vividly to the eyes of our people by the presence of your magnificent air fighters in our country—those splendid looking young men, tall, handsome, friendly, democratic and such magnificent fighters."

Bishop Tsu told the convention that he knew many American airmen personally and had been asked to deliver messages for them to their families in this country.

SQUIRRELS TO THE RESCUE

The little gray squirrels that scamper up and down our telephone wires have done us a real service. One particularly capable looking chap led the project, and his dozens of cousins were on the job with him.

They carried on the work in the large oak tree standing in our front yard. A number of years ago this oak tree began suffering from a strange disease. Swellings and bumps the size of a walnut formed on many of its smaller branches, and these sections of the tree began to die off.

This trouble progressed slowly at first, but finally it became quite serious. Yet no one seemed to know what the trouble was or what to do about it. Then one day, on examining a branch all covered with these bumps, I noticed a hole in it. So I got a hammer and cracked it open. The firm hard swelling was tough, but several blows did the trick. And there inside were a number of chambers, and in each chamber was what looked like a small wasp.

We then learned from the Department of Agriculture that the tree was the victim of gall-wasps, a rare thing, apparently, especially in New England. The only suggestion was that we prune the affected parts, almost an impossible job. But we tried it for a couple of years, until last year we were unable to do it.

Early in the summer last year as I sat on the porch I heard a great chattering and scolding in our oak tree. I looked and saw things falling out of it. An army of squirrels was having a picnic. True enough, these swellings looked quite like nuts along the branches. And they might have tasted like nuts, or maybe they were even better. Anyhow, I do know that the squirrels ate them. They feasted all summer.

I used to watch them. With their sharp little teeth they'd cut off a branch full of bumps, cut off the leafy part. then holding the rest like an ear of corn they would go after the bugs. The cobs were tossed on the ground, and new branches were cut off for eating.

Every day I'd go out with a bushel basket and clean up after the squirrels. Along about the end of the summer I felt I'd picked up most of the oak tree, basket by basket. After the job was done the squirrels left. They are nowhere to be seen this summer, but as I look at the oak tree, quite free from its trouble, I note what a fine job that clean-up squad did. Yes, wise old Mother Nature called on the right department when she sent out her force of little gray squirrels.—Catherine Barr, in Our Dumb Animals.

THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD

On the highest mountain overlooking the City of Rio there is a magnificent statue of Christ with arms outstretched so that the sun cast a shadow of a cross on the mountain below it. The statue was completed in 1932. Floodlights on the mountain at the base of the statue make it look at night like an angel suspended in air. This statue is the pride of the Brazilians.

On a Sunday morning soon after the floodlights were thrown on the statue for the first time, a teacher asked her class of boys and girls in Sunday School what was the difference between the Christ on the Corcovado mountain and the Christ we know. One of the children replied after a few moments of thought, "I know. The Christ on the mountain has to be lighted with electricity and the Christ we know said, 'I am the Light of the World.' "—Ex.

THE SPIRIT OF CHRIST

Jesus, He loves one and all,
Jesus, He loves children small,
Their souls are waiting round His feet,
On High, before His mercy-seat.

While He wandered here below
Children small to Him did go.
At His feet they knelt and prayed,
On their heads His hands He laid.

Came a Spirit on them then
Better than of mighty men;
A Spirit faithful, pure and mild,
A Spirit fit for King and Child.

Oh! that Spirit give to me,
Jesus, Lord, where'er I be!

A STRANGE ANIMAL

A Chinese traveller, many years ago, on returning to his own country after a journey in Europe, wrote this description of a piano:

"The Europeans keep a large four-legged animal which they can make to sing at will. A man, or frequently a woman, or even a feeble girl, sits down in front of the animal, and steps on its tail, at the same time striking its white teeth with his or her fingers, when the creature begins to sing. The singing, though much louder than a bird's, is pleasant to listen to. The animal does not bite, nor does it move, though it is not tied."

House of Bishops

Twelve New Members Presented at Opening Session—Archbishop of Canterbury Cables Greetings

Cleveland, Ohio—Twelve new members of the House of Bishops were presented at the opening session of the House at General Convention at 10 A. M., October 2. Presiding Bishop Tucker welcomed them, emphasizing the seriousness of the days ahead, and the need for Christian leadership in world affairs.

The new Bishops, consecrated since the sessions of General Convention three years ago in Kansas City, are Bishops Stoney, of New Mexico and Southwest Texas; Rhea, of Idaho; DeWolfe, of Long Island; Lewis, of Nevada; Mason, Suffragan of Virginia; Walker, of Atlanta; Hart, of Pennsylvania; Page, of Northern Michigan; Gray, of Mississippi; Heistand, Coadjutor of Harrisburg; Roth, of Erie, and Jones, of West Texas.

The Archbishop of Canterbury cabled his greetings to General Convention, and proposed closer cooperation in the consideration of social reconstruction.

The report of the General Convention's Joint Commission on Social Reconstruction had been carried to the Archbishop by Dr. Spencer Miller.

"I heartily welcome this report," cabled the Archbishop, "and if agreeable to you, I propose to appoint with the Archbishop of York a committee to keep contact with the Commission."

Among the resolutions referred to the committees of the House of Bishops this morning was one denouncing the Immigration Law discriminating against the Chinese, and calling on the President and Congress to revise the law.

Consideration of the question of the administration of the Holy Communion through instruction, or one kind was postponed by action of the House of Bishops until the subject had been considered by Lambeth Conference. Lambeth Conference is the meeting every ten years of Bishops of the Anglican communion throughout the world.

A resolution to this effect was introduced by Bishop Perry, of Rhode Island, and passed without debate.

Church in Australia Sends Greetings

Greetings from the Anglican Church in Australia were brought to General Convention by Bishop John S. Moyes, of Armidale.

"We love your General MacArthur, a member of your Church, and consider it a privilege to have such a leader with us," he said. Bishop Moyes stated that Australians were expecting to lose part of their country through invasion of the Japanese, and gave credit to the American forces for holding the enemy from Australian shores.

The Australian Bishop also spoke appreciatively of the work of the Forward Movement, stating that the force of its work is being felt in the various dioceses.

Affectionate greetings to the Church in Australia, and prayers for a just and lasting peace, were sent by the House of Bishops on motion of Bishop Manning, of New York.

Bishop Sherrill, of Boston, Massachusetts, was elected vice-chairman, the Rev. John H. Fitzgerald, secretary, and the Rev. Richard A. D. Beaty, assistant secretary of the House of Bishops.

The Rev. Dr. E. Clowes Chorley was elected historiographer, Dr. John H. Fitzgerald, registrar, and the Rev. Dr. John W. Suter, Jr., Boston, custodian of the Book of Common Prayer.

Bishop Davis, of Western New York, is chairman of the committee on dispatch of business.

To expedite the program during this session of General Convention, shortened because of war-time conditions, the House of Bishops decided to receive no new business for consideration after Tuesday, and moved to limit debate.

Legislation on Age Limit

Legislation requiring that bishops submit their resignation on reaching the age of 72 received final passage in the House of Bishops Saturday afternoon and now only needs concurrence of the House of Deputies of General Convention to become effective.

The proposed Constitutional amendment to this effect was passed three years ago at the General Convention in Kansas City. Approval by this session of General Convention was necessary to make it effective.

Belief was expressed in the House of Bishops that this amendment would not be retroactive, and that bishops already over 72 years of age would not be required to submit their resignation.

The House of Bishops also approved a proposed Constitutional amendment giving suffragan bishops the right to vote. At present they have seats in the House of Bishops, but no voting privileges.

This amendment also was approved by the General Convention in Kansas City, and now needs only approval by the House of Deputies to be in effect.

The proposed amendment providing for resignation of bishops at the age of 72 was adopted by the House of Bishops with a vote of 73 to 17. The proposed amendment giving voting privileges to suffragan bishops was adopted 72 to 4.

Revision of Prayer Book Defeated

Proposed revision of the Prayer Book was defeated by the House of Bishops when it rejected a suggestion of the Liturgical Commission that it be empowered to make a systematic revision of the Prayer Book and submit it to the General Convention of 1949 for action.

The Revised Lectionary Was Approved

Bishop Parsons, in presenting the revision suggestion, stated that a systematic approach would be more effective.

Bishop Manning, of New York, spoke against the proposed revision, declaring that it would have a very unsettling effect on the Church, to undertake such a revision at this time.

House of Deputies

Dr. Phillips Osgood Elected President of House

The House convened at 10:35, called to order by its Secretary, the Rev. Dr. Franklin J. Clark, of New York. Prayers were offered for the Convention, for world peace, for our Nation, and for Church Unity.

Dr. Clark announced the first order of business to be the election of a President of the House, to succeed the late Very Rev. Z. B. T. Phillips, of Washington, who died since last Convention. Nominations were received: The Rev. Dr. Phillips Osgood, Emmanuel Church, Boston; the Very Rev. Claude Sprouse, Grace and Holy Trinity Cathedral, Kansas City, Missouri; the Rev. Frederic Fleming, Trinity Parish, New York City, and the Rev. Don Frank Fenn, St. Michael's and All Angels, Baltimore. On the second ballot Dr. Osgood was elected. The vote: Osgood, 264; Sprouse, 241; Fleming, 16; Fenn having withdrawn his name.

The Rev. Dr. Franklin J. Clark was re-elected secretary of the House and assistant secretaries, the Rev. Canon C. Rankin Barnes, Mrs. J. M. Lally, were also re-elected. Mr. Anson T. McCook was re-elected chairman of the Committee on Dispatch of Business.

Announcement was made of the appointment of House Committees.

Resolution Passed Concerning the Holy Orthodox Church

A resolution concerning the Holy Orthodox Church was presented by the Rev. Walter H. Stowe, of New Brunswick, N. J., and ordered placed on the calendar. Text of resolution follows:

Whereas, the Holy Orthodox Church in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics is experiencing a resurgence of its life and work;

And whereas all friends of this ancient Catholic and Apostolic Church rejoice greatly over the new day which lies before it;

And whereas the Anglican Communion in general and that autonomous branch of the same known as the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America, in particular, have consistently, in good times and bad, manifested friendship and goodwill toward the Holy Orthodox Church of Russia, and have refused to proselytize among the latter's members or to set themselves up in competition with it;

THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED, the House of Bishops concurring, That the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America, in General Convention assembled, hereby extends cordial greetings to the Holy Orthodox Church in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and earnestly prays God's highest blessings may rest upon it.

AND BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED, That the House of Bishops respectfully be requested to designate and authorize one or more of its members to convey in person to the Patriarch of the Russian Orthodox Church the contents of this resolution.

Unanimous commendation was given by the House to the work of the Commission on the Revision of the Hymnal, with special reference to the effectiveness of the service given by the Rev. C. Winfred Douglas. Thanks were voted to the Church Hymnal Corporation for having paid the expenses of the Commission.

CAPACITY CONGREGATION GREETS NEW MINISTER

Charlotte, N. C.—The Rev. M. George Henry, rector of Christ Church mission, opened his rectorate September 19 by conducting the morning prayer service and preaching before a congregation that completely filled the chapel.

Mr. Henry, speaking on the nature of church organization, said that the general idea of the formation of a church was a group of people who gather together seeking God. But that, he said, is not the traditional Christian concept of a church, which is that God calls together a group of people to receive from Him the Holy Spirit and to disseminate it among men. They become, therefore, the chosen agents of God in spreading the Holy Spirit.

The speaker cited examples of such selections and told how God first chose Abraham and set him apart as His emissary; later came the chosen people, and from among them the two chosen tribes. Carrying the analogy further, he pointed out that Christ chose the twelve apostles from the multitude, and from the twelve a selected three were trusted with the most important duties.

So the church, Mr. Henry concluded, is the chosen agency of God in spreading His word.

Applying the theme to the individual, the rector said that each Christian is called to serve God in his own personality, not in imitation of any saint—in short, to be himself. But in being himself, the Christian must also be forgetful of self. For example, the person who is hesitant to join in singing of hymns because he is afraid people near him will notice that he is singing off key, is thinking more of himself than of the service. He must do his Christian duty through living his own life, but must carry out this mission with self-abnegation.

An unusual and moving touch was given to the close of the service when, as the offering was presented at the altar, the congregation rose and sang the Doxology and followed it immediately with the last stanza of "America"—the stanza which might be called the national prayer of the United States, and which, Mr. Henry pointed out, is singularly appropriate in this time of crisis.

MEMORIAL SERVICE FOR MISS EVA COREY

Boston, Mass.—The first autumn meeting of the Women's Division of the Church Service League on September 15 was preceded by a Corporate Communion service in memory of the late Eva D. Corey by the members of the Women's Board in the Chapel of the Diocesan House. The celebrant was the Rev. Malcolm Taylor, who read Hymn 222 from the New Hymnal. Those participating were all closely connected with Miss Corey's work in the diocese.

Triennial Woman's Auxiliary

Report of National Executive Board

Cleveland—One of the first events on the Triennial program is the report of the past three years' work of the National Executive Board, twenty women who represent the Triennial between meetings. Mrs. Charles P. Deems, Minneapolis, board chairman for 1943, reviewed the board's action on a number of matters referred by the 1940 Triennial and summarized the financial appropriations made through the board.

"We agree with Mrs. Miniver," Mrs. Deems said in closing. "She observed that in motoring, one's success as a driver involves keeping an eye on a mirrored image of the road behind while one speeds ahead, a practice which she said is advisable in other aspects of life. It certainly is in our task. Through reports we see to what point the womanhood of the Church has moved. Through the picture of a world in deep need, we see toward what further point the womanhood of the Church must move. . . . There is a serious breakdown in channeling from the National Board to parish groups and hence to the individual, in and out of the Church. We would agree that plans, no matter how excellent, are ineffective till they operate locally and individually. Better ways must be speedily found for every woman within the reach of the Church to be presented with the opportunity to share in the Church's whole program."

Report of the Executive Secretary, Miss Margaret I. Marston

"Encouraged but not content" was the keynote of the triennial report presented by Miss Margaret I. Marston, executive secretary of the Women's Auxiliary. Summarizing information received from the dioceses, Miss Marston noted certain trends, the most marked being the attempt to unify and coordinate the work of women in parishes, in a unified parish program. Increased participation in interdenominational activities was mentioned; also maintenance of financial support notwithstanding war appeals, and increase in the number of women contributing. Voluntary services in civilian defense have profited by the leadership of Church women, but "in spite of fear that such services would become a substitute for the regular long-range tasks of the Church", Miss Marston added, "reports indicate that those women and those groups that have through the years given the work of the Church first place still continue to do so."

Miss Marston paid a high tribute to missionaries in the Church abroad, quoting also a letter from a Japanese Churchwoman who was present at the 1940 Triennial Meeting and who wrote just before the war, "You will always be my best friends, no matter what happens".

Looking to the future, Miss Marston said, "Judged in the light of the opportunities for service and the need for leadership; measured by the purpose of God for His Church and the potential power of His followers, we cannot be content. So long as we are reaching only a small fraction of the women of the Church, not to mention the unchurched; so long as there is one woman who thinks of the Church in less than world terms; so long as we make study a substitute for action, or action a substitute for thinking, or both study and action a substitute for worship, we cannot rest upon our achievements."

More than 125 women will be at work on committees during the week. Most of the committees have nine members, one from each of the Church's eight provinces and one from overseas.

Joint Session

Endorsement of an enlarged missionary program for the Church was pledged by Mrs. John E. Hill, representing the Woman's Auxiliary at the Joint Session of General Convention, Sunday afternoon.

"We approve an enlarged missionary program at this time because it answers the need of the world," she stated.

"We believe the world needs the Four Freedoms yet we fear it might have the Four Freedoms and still not be the kind of world we would want to live in and pass on to our children.

"The world needs Jesus. This is not a task for political leaders, social reformers, or economic experts. It is the task of the Christian Church which is facing tremendous opportunities.

"The women will not fail the Church in her planning for a greater missionary program to meet the needs of this day. We will keep step with the Church as she goes forward in response to our Lord's command. We pledge ourselves, our gifts, our prayers, and joyful service to the Master's command to make His Message known to all the world."

Get Down to Business

With officers and committee members chosen in advance, the Triennial Meeting of the women of the Episcopal Church, assembled in the ballroom of the Hotel Statler, went to work with no loss of time today at 10 A. M. after an early celebration of the Holy Communion in Trinity Cathedral.

The presiding officer, Mrs. Edwin Allen Stebbins, of Rochester, N. Y., who presided over the Triennial Meetings of 1937 and 1940, has for her assistant Mr. W. L. Van Schaick, of La Jolla, Calif. Chairman of dispatch of business is Mrs. Donald C. Stevenson, of Grosse Point, Michigan.

Roll call by dioceses showed most of the hundred-odd delegations present with a complete membership of five from each diocese. The final count is expected to be slightly smaller than usual since in order to cut down travel and hotel requirements the customary alternates were not elected this year. Delegates in 1934, '37 and '40 totaled 439, 469 and 460. They represent every part of the United States and also countries abroad where the Episcopal Church has missions. Several colored delegates from the South are present.

Evacuation of missionaries from occupied China makes possible an unusually large number from that country, among them several whose husbands have been interned and are now, it is hoped, en route to the United States by the repatrician ship Gripsholm. The Philippines are represented by women who formerly lived there. Normally the Church in Japan would be represented, but shortly before the war the Japanese discontinued the official connection. Miss Elonora de Jongh comes from Camaguey, Cuba.

Treasurer's Report

By Lewis B. Franklin, Treasurer of the National Council

In the Triennial Report of the National Council to this Convention and in the Annual Reports for the past three years, the financial condition and operations of your Missionary Society have been presented in considerable detail.

During the triennium your Council has continued to operate under the Pay-As-You-Go Plan, and in each year expenditures have been fully covered by receipts. Under the plan adopted by the General Convention of 1934, one-half or more of the principal of the undesignated legacies currently received, has been devoted to a reduction of the deficit incurred in the years 1933 and 1934. Balances in the operating budgets have been applied to the same account. Thus the deficit, originally amounting to $852,739.73 has been reduced by the end of the year 1942 to $513,924.78. The reduction in the past three years has been $132,810.50. A further substantial reduction is indicated during the current year.

Trust Funds Increase in Value

The endowment funds of the Society showed an increase in book value during the triennium of $473,191.44 with a further addition during the first six months of this year in the amount of $206,490.66. As of July 1, 1943, the total book value was $12,916,698.17. About one-third of this fund is invested in real estate mortgages and real estate upon which there has been no attempt to place a market valuation. The balance of the fund is invested in government, public utility, and railroad bonds, and in stocks. These securities had a book value on July 1, 1943, of $8,222,206 and a market value of $8,702,703, an excess of market over book value of $480,497.

In the Profit and Loss Account there was at that date a credit balance of $355,751.06, which represents realized profits less losses taken. During the year 1943 the average rate of return on all investments was approximately 3.65%.

Missionary work at home and in non-war areas overseas has been more adequately financed than for some time past. For overseas missionaries, except those in enemy-occupied territory, a new pay-table has been adopted which removes inequalities which had developed as a result of many partial adjustments, and grants much needed increases in several areas. A partial elimination of the reductions in the salaries of the clerical staff at the Church Missions House has been effected. Some debts in the mission fields have been paid, mostly out of designated legacies. The largest of such appropriations amounted to nearly $40,000 for the final payment of a debt incurred in the purchase of new property for Iolani School, Honolulu. The remaining debts on property in the mission fields are in trivial amounts.

Missionary Giving Static

This favorable report must not blind our eyes to the fact that these results have been achieved, not by an increase in the support given to the missionary program by the members of our Church, but by a forced withdrawal of foreign aid to the Church in Japan. In the year 1940 our budget for work in that land amounted to $226,664. This entire sum has now been reappropriated to other fields, notably for the work in war industry areas, domestic missions, and Latin America, and for college work and the American Church Institute for Negroes. The total of the budgets for these two years, 1940 and 1943, remains practically the same except for an item of $47,868 for British Missions, which represents the gifts for this purpose from those dioceses which elected to include such gifts in their budget giving. Excluding this item the budget for 1943 is well below that adopted by General Convention for 1941 and nearly $150,000 below the budget suggested for 1943.

The Giving of the Church toward the missionary budget reached an all-time high record of $3,028,983 in the year 1926. In the next ten years such giving was reduced to less than one-half, the low point being reached in 1935 with only $1,355,643 credited on expectations. The estimate of such gifts in 1943 is $1,430,465, an increase of only $74,822. In the same period the total contributions of the people of the Church for all purposes have increased by $5,000,000.

Since 1920 the communicant strength of the Church has increased by 40%, and the giving of the general Church budget has decreased by 52%. In 1920 the per communicant giving was $2.73 per annum, while in 1943 it will be about 94 cents per annum. In 1920, out of every dollar reported as given for all Church purposes, 8½ cents was designated for the general budget, while today only four cents out of each dollar given is available for the work for which your National Council and this General Convention is responsible.

The Situation Analyzed

Why has this decline in missionary giving occurred? An easy answer is the economic depression which started in 1929, yet that answer is not one that is complete. It does not explain why, with a large increase in earnings and a large increase in the total gifts to the Church, there has been no material increase in the giving to the general budget.

In the opinion of your Treasurer there are several reasons for this condition. With a moderate recovery in business the attention of Church members was first directed to parochial needs of a pressing character. The rector's salary has been reduced and must be restored, a debt had been accumulated and should be paid, the fabric of the church needed attention. In the dioceses similar conditions existed, and the first effort was directed toward meeting these imperative needs.

In the meantime the National Council, after incurring a large deficit for two years, has succeeded in balancing its yearly budget and keeping it balanced year after year. It was not easy to keep before the people in a vivid way the fact that this balancing of budgets was only possible by cutting the meager salaries of missionary workers, by neglecting to fill vacancies in the missionary staff, by postponing the seizure of new opportunities in many fields, and by using the principal of legacies currently received, to fill the final gap between receipts and expenditures. For so long a time had our minds been focused upon personal, community, parochial, and diocesan problems of a financial nature that it was difficult for us to realize that similar problems existed in more distant places. Just at this time came our withdrawal from Japan and the release of the large appropriation heretofore made to our mission there. This eased the situation in other fields, but only added to the feeling of complacency as to the work of the general Church.

Need for a Christian Offensive

Today all this is changed. We are at war and millions of our people have been uprooted from their homes, some to serve in the armed forces, some in new war industry areas. Problems of social and economic readjustment are all around us. Under the impact of a global war we have become world-minded. The little British mission in New Guinea is no longer a matter of no importance, but the haven which has given comfort to our boys lost in the jungle. Greece is no longer in our thoughts as a land of ancient glory but a land of present heroic suffering. Liberia, that little Negro republic which is the site of our oldest mission, is now a stop in the air ferry to the East. Alaska, Panama and Hawaii teem with soldiers and sailors and their civilian auxiliaries. Latin America is to us less a group of small foreign nations and more and more a part of the American family.

Above all there is China. For six long years this great nation has withstood the military might of Japan in spite of the invasion of her most fertile territory, the occupation of her largest cities, and the murder of millions of her people. Here has been the largest mission of our Church with a glorious history of more than one hundred years. In spite of the ravages of war and the evacuation of many of the missionaries, the Christian work goes on under the leadership of well-trained and able Chinese. In Free China, to which many of our workers have gone, new opportunities for the preaching of the Gospel are opening in every direction. At the head of the nation stands Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek, a Christian, and at his side his glorious Christian wife. Because of this leadership and because of the sacrifices made by Christian missionaries who scorned the way of safety, the attitude of the Chinese people toward Christianity is thoroughly favorable. At long last the gates of opportunity are wide open in this land which is destined to be the great power of the East, the land where more than one-fifth of the people of the world dwell.

In the missionary program for the next triennium which the National Council now presents to this Convention, these new needs and new opportunities are recognized. Not only must the work financed by the 1943 budget be pursued with unremitting zeal, but the call of these new opportunities must be heeded.

The work now being carried on in Free China needs far stronger support because of the rising costs in a war economy, and provision is made in the program for such support and for an increased staff. To the areas now occupied by the enemy we must return our best workers and send others to take the places of those retiring. From India comes an earnest plea for an enlargement of our pitifully small work in the Diocese of Dornakal.

The Churches in ravaged Europe must be helped in the work of re-organization if Europe is to be preserved as a center of Christian influence. The work with the American Negro is of vital importance and of late has been sadly neglected. The new program looks forward to new life in this field.

Advance in Giving Needed

All this new work calls for financial support far in excess of the sums now being given. The proposed budget for 1944 is $229,205 larger than the budget for 1943, but the increase in giving asked from the Church for 1944 is $430,571. It is to be remembered that this 1943 budget was balanced only by appropriating for operating expenses more than $100,000 of the principal of legacies not otherwise designated by the testator or by instructions of General Convention. An allowance of $70,000 was also made for lapsed balances. In 1944 the interest rate on investments will be lower.

In 1944 the Church should take care of the new budget without using the principal of legacies and should not estimate in advance the amount of lapsed balances, but should reserve this item as a margin of safety.

Your National Council is convinced that the Church will be aided in the achievement of this enlarged budget by the apportionment by this Convention to each diocese and missionary district of a specific share in the cost of meeting the budget. This seems to be the clear intent of the provisions of Canon 62. The General Convention of 1940 adopted a resolution as to a plan of apportionment as follows:

Resolved, That the current expenses of each Diocese and District for a six-year period shall be the primary basis for determining its apportionment upon the system of mathematical calculation adopted by General Convention of 1928. This mathematical calculation may be modified by the following factors:

(a) Communicant strength of each Diocese and District.

(b) Its past six-year record of giving to the General Church Program.

(c) Local conditions such as indebtedness, endowments, economic status, etc.

The National Council now submits to General Convention a suggested table of apportionments for 1944, which has been prepared in accordance with the principles set forth in the above resolution.

The meeting of these apportionments will require an advance in giving on the part of every diocese and domestic missionary district. From those which have been giving far in excess of their mathematical share the increase requested is moderate. Those whose giving has fallen far below their former records and far below their mathematical share are asked to make a strong step forward. For none will the task be easy. For some dioceses its accomplishments will require a revision of action already taken in setting objectives for 1944 below the new quota figure and a revision of quotas already allocated to parishes and missions. For many it will mean that what will be pledged in the Every Member Canvass this fall must be supplemented by individual gifts made to the diocese by those who are able to give more than is represented by their share of a parish quota. For all success will require confident leadership, faith in God and faith that the members of the Church will meet their responsibility when it is presented to them. Above all, it will require fervent prayer to God that His Holy Spirit may direct and rule our hearts, that we may perceive and know what things we ought to do and may have grace and power faithfully to fulfill the same.

Let this Convention, therefore, approach its task with boldness, conscious of the crying need of the world for the healing Gospel of Christ, conscious of its responsibility to do its full part in meeting that need and conscious that God will give us strength to perform the work that is set before us.

He explained that a copyright had been obtained on the Church Flag to see that it was properly made, and not to discourage any parish from making its own flag. The copyright has been assigned to the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society of the Church.

The House of Bishops adopted recommendations of the Domestic Missions Committee that it elect a Bishop for the Missionary District of Salina, and also a Bishop for the Missionary District of San Joaquin.

A suggestion that seminaries provide more courses on rural work was made on receipt of the report of the Commission on Theological Education; Bishop Strider, of West Virginia, presented the report of this Commission.

The National Council was requested by the House of Bishops to investigate the possibility of a national training center for deaconesses and other women who were interested in Church work.

There is a great need for more consecrated young women to give life service to the Church, stated Bishop Randall, Suffragan Bishop of Chicago, in presenting the report of the Commission on the Work of Deaconesses.

An original proposal that the National Council be instructed to secure and finance a National Training Center was rejected.

Committee on International Appointed

The Presiding Bishop announced the appointment of Bishop Oldham, of Albany; Bishop Dagwell, of Oregon, and Bishop Maxon, of Tennessee on the Joint Commission on International Relations.

John, the beloved disciple, in Revelations, chapter 21, verses 19, 20, endeavors to express in human language the most transcendant spiritual beauty and permanence of the heavenly city—the everlasting city. "The name of Jesus has been not so much written as ploughed into the history of the world."

Word of the Living God,
Thou true and glorious Son;
Without Thee how could earth be trod
Or heaven itself be won?

Jesus does not mock men by telling them to save themselves. He calls them to follow Him, that He may make them like Himself. He is Himself the Way to the Father's heart and the Father's home for every wandering prodigal, or lonely soul. —Sel.

"The best way out of a difficulty is through."

Each person is a coin made in God's mint and stamped with His likeness. We possess immortal souls and minds, which can understand the workings of the stars. We are the sons of God. Let us not underestimate ourselves. —Sel.

"When night comes and I turn
From my shop where I earn
Daily bread, let me see
Those hard Hands, know that He Shared my lot, every bit:
Was a Man, every whit."

The love which the great Sacrament embodies is fundamental; and if Christians had kept that love fresh they would have found some way to avoid division. If they love enough today, they will find a path to unity. —Dr. E. L. Parsons.

Do we believe that Jesus died for Himself alone? Or was His death unto God, for man, and for me? If the former, we are left with the memory of a Galilean carpenter, who is dead. If our answer is the latter, we are known of God, loved by God, found by God, with the good news which reveals to us the meaning of the Crucifixion, the meaning of life, the meaning of history. —Sherwood Eddy.

In proportion as a man is fully developed and integrated, so will his religious experience be free from distortion. —Sel.

Sinai proclaimed the moral law of the universe. The Ten Commandments were not yet ready to be repealed! They had as much authority today as when they were first proclaimed. But while Sinai proclaimed the law, Calvary proclaimed the love by which alone that law could be fulfilled. God acts on Calvary; He only spoke on Sinai. Sinai has no place for sinners; Calvary had no place for anybody else. —Dr. I. H. Dixon.

When we share our bread, we have less for ourselves, but when we share spiritual truths or experiences, our own is deepened and increased.

I dared not hope that Thou wouldst deign to come
And make this lowly heart of mine Thy home,
That Thou wouldst deign, O King of kings, to be Even for one hour a sojourner in me.
Yet art Thou always here to help and bless,
And lift the load of toil and weariness. —Adapted.

Over Million Dolar Budget Adopted

Cleveland.—The more-than-a-million-dolar ($1,149,878.91) budget of the United Thank Offering was adopted unanimously this afternoon by delegates of the Triennial Convention of the Woman's Auxiliary. The budget, prepared tentatively during the year by the national executive board of the Auxiliary, was given final form after the total amount was known and presented by the Triennial's United Thank Offering committee of eleven members, Mrs. Wm. R. Taliaferro, Pittsburgh, chairman, and Mrs. Richard Kinkead of Tutwiler, Miss., vice-chairman. The budget as appropriated includes an estimated $30,000 interest added to the sum given, which was $1,119,878.91.

In three sections, the budget in Section I adds $100,000 to the pension fund now being built up for retired women missionaries. Section II continues the training, support, and medical care of women missionaries; provides for some increase in numbers; and gives $15,000 for British missions. Section III includes new buildings in mission fields, to be selected later by the executive board; several projects overseas and at home carried on in cooperation with other communions, and sums for War Prisoners' Aid, the American Bible Society, the production of Christian literature.

The proposed disposition of the United Thank Offering of 1943 as presented in this report is a result of the thoughtful deliberations of the delegates to this Triennial Meeting. The items in the Budget reflect a growth in vision and in thinking on the part of the women of the Church which has kept pace with the growth of the offering itself. This report, if adopted, also will show a determination on the part of the delegates to this Triennial to meet the Presiding Bishop's challenge that the "Church launch a Christian offensive designed to take advantage of some of the tremendous opportunities resulting from the war."

Resolutions

BE IT RESOLVED: That lapsed balances on the items included in the budget of the National Council shall be distributed for budget purposes at the close of each year with the exception of items for new appointments and training which shall be carried through the Triennium, and at the end of the Triennium distributed by the National Council for budget purposes.

WHEREAS, The National Council budget receives from the United Thank Offering $738,000 in addition to the income from the Ida W. Soule Pension Fund, towards the training, salaries, allowances and pensions of women workers, and

WHEREAS, In the past the National Executive Board has approved only those women workers under the United Thank Offering, and

WHEREAS, The United Thank Offering sharing in the support of all women workers would give the National Executive Board the privilege of approving all appointments of women workers, therefore

BE IT RESOLVED: That the designation "United Thank Offering Worker" be eliminated, and that the United Thank Offering go toward the support of all women workers.

RESOLVED: That the National Executive Board of the Woman's Auxiliary be requested to prepare a suggested budget for the disposition of the United Thank Offering of 1946.

Notes on the Budget

The offering of 1943 is the largest offering ever presented by the women of the Church.

I. This brings the capital account of the Ida W. Soule Pension Fund to $806,238.39.

II. Included in the budget of the National Council

A. For support of women workers.

1. Salaries:

This item helps to support women employed by the National Council for service in this country and overseas. This is a decrease from 1940 because of necessary withdrawal of missionaries from many fields.

2. This item covers new appointments and includes approximately $25,000 for adjustment of missionary salaries now at subsistence level.

3. Scholarships and training centers:

Scholarships are given to selected young women for graduate study in preparation for work in the Church. Windham House, the national training center in New York is supported from this item.

4. Allowances:

These amounts help to provide for travel to the field, and medical and dental care of women missionaries.

5. Allowances for Pensions:

This amount supplements the income from the Ida W. Soule Pension Fund, in providing retiring allowances for women missionaries.

B. Expenses for administration of investments:

This fund takes care of the expenses arising in connection with the investment of the United Thank Offering.

C. Missionary projects at home and overseas:

This item will be used for such purposes as work in industrial defense areas; Negro work; for Churches in Europe, the Far East, and elsewhere.

D. British Missions:

This item aids the National Council in its appropriation for British Missions in the diocese of Dornakal, India; Southwestern Free China; Egypt; Southern Rhodesia; the West Indies; and the nine Missionary societies other than S. P. G. and C. M. S.

III. Specials

A. Equipment for women workers:

This item provides for tools not obtainable with limited budget allowances. Examples—printing, books, travel, translating, secretarial help, office and medical equipment.

B. Repairs and Equipment for Buildings:

All repair items are passed upon by the National Executive Board upon recommendation of the Home and Overseas Department.

C. New Buildings:

The National Executive Board will choose such buildings as may be erected, from a list approved by the Home and Overseas Departments.

D. Missionary projects:

Women's Christian College, Madras, India

From the United Thank Offering salary item a grant is made toward the support of a teacher, Dr. Eleanor Mason at the Women's Christian College, Madras, India. This contribution is thus contingent upon the continuance of her appointment. By transferring this item from salaries to specials continued support to the college is assured.

Ginling College, Chengtu, China

A grant is made from the salary item of the United Thank Offering toward the salary of a teacher, Miss Mary Lamberton at Ginling College, China. This contribution is contingent upon her appointment. By transferring this item from salaries to specials continued support to the college is assured.

Work with migrants and share croppers

These amounts replace the token gifts previously made by the National Executive Board to the Home Missions Council, from the general funds of the Woman's Auxiliary.

E. Orphaned Missions:

By J. W. KENNEDY

WE HAVE ALL heard of bedlam. But few of us have felt we could endure it. Many of the so-called "hyssies" produced by conditions of bedlam could have been prevented. I offer the results of an experience which requires only two prerequisites to make: one is a sense of humor; the other is enough faith in God to trust Him with our minds. This experiment was forced on me and involves a baby, a boy, and a maidless household. The baby is new, the boy is inquisitive, the household is large. The incident occurred during a long crying spell of the baby, a long noise-producing and mischief-getting-into spell of the boy, and a general let down in the household. My hands were full in one direction and they were needed in all directions. At first there was tension, and then easy irritation, and then a feeling of panic and the inability to cope with the situation. At this point the first impulse was to throw up the sponge and blubber a bit over the old sentimental ditty, "this is too much for my soul to bear." Before the jitters and madness set in, however, two things happened: the first was the realization that I held a responsibility which for the moment no one else could take; the second was the remembrance that I had not yet asked God a single thing about what to do. When God came to the forefront of my mind the thoughts of frantic bedlam were calmed and I was led along this pathway of thought: it came quite clear to concentrate on the most important job in hand and to take the other jobs or situations to be dealt with in the order of their importance or seriousness—I realized that bedlam was the result of the tendency of the mind to fly off in all directions at once which if continued long enough will explode the mind to bits of jigsaw puzzle pieces that do not fit. I did concentrate then on the baby first and the other tasks in their proper order, without further fret or feeling of "life's crushing burdens weigh too heavily upon me." The next clear thought had to do with a sense of humor. I saw for the first time how the old gag about being as busy as a one-armed paper hanger with the itch made me smile. It must seem ludicrous to one apart from the self-centered helpless misery of it and the Rube Goldberg cartoon methods of dealing with the situation and the running around in circles of it. I began to detach myself and that is what I saw, too. The same sense of strain had by now disappeared and I found myself doing the job in hand rapidly and well, devoid of nervousness and fumbling uncertainty. The next thought to etch itself for clear-cut seeing was this one: never fail again in the beginning to trust your mind to God and let him have a hand in keeping your thoughts intact and working along alert and wise lines of action. For the moment, when bedlam was on the verge of turning a home into a miniature madhouse, I had forgotten God.

WHEN ALMOST every day hedges us around with situations and problems that tend to produce the soul-destroying condition of bedlam which, when or if it comes, we put the blame on our "nerves" or another's this, that or the other; but rarely ever on our failure to hold our minds upon God and to seek for his guiding wisdom and strength. When people "go to pieces," something else other than the immediate incident is usually the real flaw. When a person has a "hyssie" and life becomes an "unbearable" hunk of misery, we can trace a part of it to too little and too infrequent contact with God. Another part of the underlying cause might be to see a doctor for physical contributory cause.

No man can deal with life unless he is in full possession of his right mind, unless his mind is braced by God's Holy Spirit of wisdom and truth. We might as well admit it and work to get it before another tantrum comes our way. Bedlam is a man-produced state of mind. Calmness is a God-produced state of soul. Our prayer should be: O God control our minds and possess our souls that life may be lived this day and every day at the high level of our quiet time with Thee. Amen.

Impressions of the House of Bishops from One Who Sat There

IT IS UNBELIEVABLY exciting sitting in the House of Bishops. Even in routine matters there is such a dignity and so many unexpected moments of charm and humor and intense emotion that it does not grow dull. The Presiding Bishop is responsible for much of this. His droll remarks and complete innocence are impossible to cope with and his broad smile has prevented any serious flare-up of feelings thus far. Bishop Tucker has a remarkable knack for getting things done in a way which seems to please everyone. I would not mind being a "dear bishop" under him at all. You know they are not a bad lot. They are pretty much like the rest of us. There are quick witted ones and slow witted ones, distinguished and undistinguished, those "hepped" on subjects and those who are not. You will read all of the important happenings elsewhere in this paper, but let me give you a peek into some of the things you would never hear had some one not been there to tell you. I hear off the record tidbits from the sessions of the House of Bishop and the joint sessions of both houses.

I have misplaced my notes on the entire first day's proceedings and cannot find them anywhere. Oh well, nothing much happened except the brief flashes of repartee and humor caught and jotted down but not too well remembered. For example, the unexpected debate which developed over the report concerning the training of women workers in the church. After some discussion Bishop Manning made the motion to refer the matter to the National Council for study and action. Bishop Parsons, usually at the opposite pole of opinion, seconded the motion, whereupon the Bishop of New York in his own ecclesiastically dignified manner gave hearty thanks that at last he had made a motion the Bishop of California could second.

Sunday was the big day of the convention, the first big day. The Presiding Bishop set the tone of the convention with two sermons and one address; one sermon over a nation-wide network, the other at the beautiful Trinity Cathedral, and the address to the joint session in the afternoon. Two words stand out in the great challenge he has given to the church, no there are three such words: opportunity, responsibility and offensive. These words echoed like a refrain through all of Bishop Tucker's utterances on this day, even to the final dramatic climax in the evening, when he identified himself with the Japanese nation that would rise out of the war because of the Christian opportunities, responsibilities, and offensive from within and from without that would redeem her in the eyes of the world. In a letter I received from Bishop Tucker just prior to the convention, in response to my query about what he wanted emphasized in this new year of forward in service, he gave this remarkable summary of the theme of the convention and of the coming triennium: "What I hope the General Convention will do is to devote much of its time to the problem of how the Church can fulfill its responsibilities in the present situation, and make a real contribution towards the building of a better world." The Forward-in-Service-Budget presented Sunday afternoon gave proof of the seriousness of his intent in actual dollars and cents, a great forward looking program of seizing some of these opportunities now and at war's end. Be prepared for the full sharing of this wise and vital program of world evangelism. Bishop Tucker gave us a slogan for the year at the evening session: "Through world evangelism to world fellowship in Christ."

There were three other great utterances during the day. Dr. Trigg's remarkable address on the Negro work of the Church seen through the eyes of a distinguished Negro layman which you may have read in this paper, and which stirred the convention to an ovation at the close; the quiet yet thrilling report of Dr. Tsu concerning the work in China and the tremendous work yet to be done, with the heart of his remarks given in his quotation from Generalissimo Chiang kai Shek: "Without faith we could not have gone through these critical years;" and Bishop Moyes' closing remarks of the evening, the young and vigorous Anglican Bishop from the Eastern part of Australia, whose report was fittingly closed with these words: "May you in all of your deliberations find the will of God and see all of your business through the eyes of Christ." I interviewed this bishop earlier in the evening and was astounded at the enthusiasm and gratitude he had for his own work and for the possible future cooperation of the missionary work of both our church and his. He bore witness to the influence of our Forward Movement upon the devotional and study life of his people, both clergy and laity.

One felt after listening to this missionary record and vision that we have literally stepped across all the barriers in the world and have linked hands with the Christian Movement everywhere to help restore and enlarge the stupendous gaps made by the war. One also felt that the note was clear that if we (the Christian Churches of America) did not, it would not be done and the long roll of drums heralding the Christian advance would die into silence.

There is not time for much more in this first summary. Two important items remain, however, from Monday's session which must be squeezed in: the Report of the Commission on Approaches to Unity and the Report of the Army and Navy Commission. We must not forget to mention also the Report of the Com-

EDITORIALS

Convention Side Lights

We are not in the mood to editorialize. That is an accrued benefit for you. We thought it might be interesting to you to give just a few impressions gathered here and there relative to General Convention. When one sits in Convention in the dual capacity of deputy and editor, there arises a conflict of emotions. First is one's responsibility to the diocese which has honored him by election as their representative. Then, as an editor, one is tempted to be very critical of all speeches, and all proposed legislation. We trust that we can keep our balance.

Since the Convention has only been in session two days, it is too soon to note any definite characteristics. There is one thing that we are sure will interest you. The sessions are being held in the Euclid Avenue Baptist Church. Since we are considering proposals for organic unity with the Presbyterians, is this an omen of the happy outcome of our negotiations? Episcopalians meeting in a Baptist Church and discussing re-union with Presbyterians. We trust that it is a good sign.

The Reverend Dr. E. Phillips Osgood of Emmanuel Church, Boston, was elected President of the House of Deputies, on the second ballot. He succeeds Dr. ZeBarney Phillips of Epiphany Church, Washington, D. C., who died in 1942. Dr. Osgood is an Evangelical Churchman. This may or may not be indicative of the temper of this Convention. Personally, we feel that it is an indication that there is a liberal spirit prevalent.

At the first joint session held on Sunday afternoon, the report of the National Council was presented. An increase of over two hundred thousand dollars in the budget for 1944 is recommended. This is as it should be. If the Christian Church is to begin an offensive, that offensive cannot be commenced on a reduced budget. It means this in the final analysis that it comes back to you as an individual. Do you believe that the Christian Church has a program which can meet the plaintive pleas of a distraught and war ravished human kind? If you do, then you are going to back that offensive by sacrificial giving.

One of the high lights of the first joint session was a report made by a Negro layman, Dr. Trigg of North Carolina. He thrilled the audience by the sincerity of his appeal, and the forthrightness of his application of the rights of his race not for a dole, but for their right of admission into the fellowship of Christian friend-ship. We speak of minorities in the other countries of the world; we are prone to forget the grievances of the minority within our midst.

The Convention moves ahead. In next week's issue we hope to be able to give you more accurate information as to the trends this Convention has taken.

Remember, we asked you not to depend merely upon secular reports, but to listen to the voice of the Church press.

Through the arrangements committee it was my privilege to preach in the First Presbyterian Church of Wooster, Ohio, on this Sunday morning.

FINALE ON GLIMPSES OF GENERAL CONVENTION BY AN EYE-WITNESS

Marriage and divorce occupied most of the time of the House of Deputies for two days, while the Bishops leisured along. The usual results obtained finally in both houses: nothing doing. However, the tendency in this convention is the most liberal yet and may effect the action to be taken three years hence in San Francisco. Three remaining highlights must be commented on briefly with a postscript. The first is the magnificent address made to the Joint Session by the Moderator of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. Dr. Coffin, known and loved all over the country by all Protestants, is also President of Union Theological Seminary in the City of New York, and to my mind one of the great Christian voices and leaders of America. His address was received with acclaim and enthusiasm. At least we know that the majority of us desire and are working for organic unity with the Presbyterians. Dr. Coffin's whole theme can be summarized in the words of John Calvin which he quoted: "Increase your exertions until something be accomplished." He warned us that "any advance with the Presbyterians will be along the general lines of Basic Principles." One quotation from Colossians, which he gave first in Greek, I shall not soon forget: "In Him all things hold together."

The second highlight was my contact with Walter Van Kirk, who broadcasts Religion in the News each week over N.B.C. for the Federal Council of Churches. He gave two broadcasts at General Convention. A man so keenly alive to the happenings around the world and in Christendom, and who presents them in laymanese with positive enthusiasm, is a great asset to the Protestant forces of America. I wanted to learn more about him but found he always did the pumping.

I might bring in my postscript here about radio at General Convention. Since radio is one of the most important mediums for reaching the American people —the other is the magazine and newspaper—this phase of the Church's life is one of the most important and the most neglected. Dr. Hobbs does a fine job with the resources at his command. We should have at least $50,000 to spend on broadcasts alone. Even so we managed for several nationwide net-work broadcasts and many local presentations that reached a wide audience. The general tenor of the broadcasts was devotional both in the early morning and at night. The Division of Radio is trying to encourage the widespread use of local stations for daily devotional spots of five minutes each, such as is conducted in Richmond, Va.

An Account of the Laying of the Cornerstone

October 10, 1843

By ELIZABETH WRIGHT WEDDELL

OCTOBER 10TH, 1943, is a memorable date in the history of St. Paul's Church, Richmond, Virginia, for it marks the 100th anniversary of the laying of the cornerstone of an edifice destined to become, through its association with leaders in church, state, and the Confederacy, one of the most renowned in the country, and in a city boasting many historic buildings of an earlier period. Here for nearly a century the word of God has been preached—the fires on the altar of the living God kept burning—witness that Jesus Christ was Himself the chief cornerstone.

Someone asks "How came this church to be built?" To answer this question, we must go back in imagination to the Monumental Church, which was the spiritual home until 1845 of the congregation which built St. Paul's.

The former Church was intended as a monument to commemorate a tragic event in the history of Richmond and the State. It was erected on the site of the Richmond Theatre which burned December 11th, 1811, when seventy-two persons (including the Governor, George W. Smith) perished, and the charred bodies of most of them were buried on the spot.

In 1814, the Right Reverend Richard Channing Moore, D.D., of New York, came, on his consecration, to be the first rector of the Monumental, and contemporaneously the Bishop of the Diocese. His arrival marked an epoch in the life of the church in this Diocese, for this man of God revived the church which was indeed at a low ebb.

In the Convention which called him to the Episcopate there were only seven members and when he died, there were ninety-five clergy in the Diocese.

For twenty-seven years, until his earthly life ended at the age of seventy-nine, Bishop Moore held the two offices and was beloved and revered by all classes.

His assistant for the last ten years of his rectorship was the Rev. William Norwood, a young clergyman from Hillsborough, North Carolina, a son of Judge Norwood. Mr. Norwood did most of the parochial work, and he was widely known in the congregation and a welcome visitor in every home. Bishop Moore, in his report of the Church to the Convention of 1840, spoke in these high terms of him:

"The rector takes great pleasure in mentioning to the convention (Council is the term now given to this body) the debt of gratitude he owes his heavenly Father, in blessing him in his old age with an assistant in his congregation, not only highly qualified for the ministerial office, but as willing as he is qualified to advance the interest of the church, and to promote the piety and devotion of the flock in whose behalf he industriously labors."

From the day that Mr. Norwood was present at his first Virginia Convention, when he was elected (as was William H. Macfarland, lay delegate from Monumental) to the Standing Committee, his leadership, administrative ability and missionary zeal were recognized; and as the years passed, he became one of the leading clergymen in the Diocese and delegate (as Mr. Macfarland was, also), to General Conventions.

THE FOLLOWING EXTRACT is from an unsigned tribute to Dr. Norwood which appeared in an early number of St. Paul's Parish Register:

"We here in Richmond think, and have reason to believe, that (1841-1845) was the most glorious time of his ministry. Full of zeal and strength and power, admirably fitted for the genius and disposition of his people, he acquired an influence rarely reached over young and old, exerted the wholesome power of a Christian preacher, pastor, and friend. But the exertion of voice (he never knew how to rest his voice in his impulsive earnestness of his preaching) in filling a church so large and so singularly constructed, had produced some bronchial trouble, and, as many of the congregation had removed from the vicinity of the Monumental Church, the congregation was easily induced to build a new church. This determination resulted in the erection of St. Paul's, which was occupied and consecrated November 11th, 1845.

"It was no doubt his interest and exposure during the building of this church, the great object of his desire, that increased his bronchial trouble."

As far back as 1837, Bishop Moore had said in his annual report of the Church:

"We have not pews sufficient for the supply of applicants, and the Sunday School is larger and increasing in numbers."

Dr. Norwood succeeded Bishop Moore as rector, at his death, and Bishop Meade became Bishop of the Diocese.

It was not long after these changes that plans were made for a church "updown," where many old Episcopal residents were moving, and new ones settling.

From my book, St. Paul's Church, Richmond, Virginia: Its Historic Years and Memorials, the following extracts are taken, throwing further light on the subject.

For several years, prior to the death of Bishop Moore, there existed a feeling among the larger proportion of the congregation that "another church building, higher uptown, was necessary to their comfort and convenience. This thought of his congregation abandoning the Monumental Church was not friendly to the Bishop and in deference to his feelings, no definite action was taken during his life."

It was not long after Dr. Norwood's rectorship began, however, "that the dormant undercurrent of feeling in the matter assumed definite shape." Friends of the movement held several meetings, and in the Richmond Whig of May 4, 1843, appeared the following notice:

"A meeting of the gentlemen who have given their bonds for the purpose of securing the erection of a new church for the Monumental congregation is invited by the Vestry to be held in the Monumental Church on this (Thursday) afternoon at 5 O'clock.

St. Paul's Church, Richmond, Virginia, as it stands today
Illustration from St. Paul's Church, Richmond, Va., by Elizabeth Wright Weddell

The object of the meeting is to appoint a building committee.

By order of the Vestry."

"Mr. William C. Bentley, Senior Warden of St. Paul's Church . . . says that 'the bond referred to above was given by sixty-four male and three female members of the Monumental congregation, aggregating $32,290, and these heads of families doubtless really represented 300 to 350 persons in all engaged in this contemplated move.' "

From the Richmond Whig, of Wednesday, April 5th, 1843, is taken the following:

"Building Lot Wanted—Wanted a Building Lot, not less than 80 feet front by 120 deep, within the portion of the city bounded on the east by Governor Street, on the west by 5th street, north by H. street and on the south by E. street. Apply with a description of the property and terms to

David Walker
Dr. Haxall, or William Williams."

AFTER ADVERTISING for a suitable lot, on May 31st, 1843, the following gentlemen—the Rev. William Norwood and Messrs. William H. Macfarland, William Williams, and William Mitchell, Jr., had deeded to them, in trust for the St. Paul's Church, the lot 'fronting eighty-five feet on "G," now Grace Street, commencing at the corner of Ninth and running back to an alley, on Ninth for a southern boundary,' for the purpose of building thereon a Protestant Episcopal Church, etc. On December 1st, 1845, the trustees of St. Paul's Church also bought from Adolph Dill and his wife 'ten feet or more of ground on "G" Street, adjoining the above on the west side of and running back to said alley, for $1,075, making the total front on "G" or Grace Street ninety-five feet.' "

"The following notice appeared in the Richmond Whig of June 4th, 1843: 'The subscribers to the new Episcopal church, about to be erected at the corner of "G" and Ninth Streets, are requested to pay into the Farmers' Bank of Virginia, to the credit of the Building Committee, 25 per cent on the amount of their bonds, before the 10th instant, on which day payment is to be made for the site they have purchased. By order of the Building Committee.'

"Later, on June 10th, 1843, the Building Committee, composed of the Rev. William Norwood, William H. Macfarland, William Williams, William Mitchell, Jr., and A. F. D. Gifford, gave a draft on the Farmers' Bank signed by them to Isaac A. Goddin for $6,000, in full payment for the said original purchase of eighty-five feet.

"An additional bond was executed on July 6th, 1843, by thirty-eight members of the Monumental congregation who stipulated 'that they would pay pro rata, as called for, the money necessary to build and complete the church, agreeing to take their chances for reimbursement from the proceeds of the sale of pews after the completion of the new church.' This was on the 26th of July, 1843, 'in testing whereof they have hereunto set their hands and seals this day,' says the record and then follow the signatures. . . ."

"The report of the Building Committee to the congregation of St. Paul's Church, who had not severed their connection with the Monumental Church, sets forth that 'a committee of their own body was deputed to visit the churches in Northern cities, . . . and that after examining various churches, that of St. Luke's in Philadelphia was selected as a model. . . . The architect of the model church (Thomas S. Stewart) was finally selected, not alone because of his ability and from a pecuniary point of view, but he came to them with the highest recommendations; and having the models of all the ornamental work ready made, could execute that part of the work cheaper. . . . Your committee have it not in their power as yet to furnish an exact account of the cost, but they think it will not exceed $53,500, including everything except the organ, which will be provided for in another way, etc.' "

"The following simple account of the actual physical beginnings of a church that is today known on both sides of the Atlantic, we find in Christian's Richmond —Her Past and Present: 'The cornerstone of a new Episcopal Church, corner Grace and Ninth streets, opposite the Washington Tavern, was laid by Bishop Johns Tuesday, October 10th. The church was to be called St. Paul's . . .'' The Richmond Enquirer for Friday, October 13th, 1843, gives the following account of the ceremony: ''New Protestant Episcopal Church.''

''A large concourse of citizens of every religious denomination assembled on Tuesday afternoon to witness the solemn ceremony of the laying ofthe cornerstone of St. Paul's Church, a new and handsome edifice about to be erected at the corner of 'G' and 9th streets. Bishop Johns conducted the imposing services.

''In an address of half an hour's duration, he traced in clear and chaste and eloquent language, the origin and the principles of the Protestant Episcopal Church, for whose service in the worship of God, this noble house was to be consecrated. In explaining the designation of a Protestant Church, he briefly, but strikingly alluded to the new Oxford doctrine, known as Puseyism, which both in England and in this country, had been engrafted on the pure principles of the Church and he feelingly and strongly congratulated the clergy and the people that in Virginia the Church was sound and free from the pernicious influences of the Oxford School and he prayed to Heaven that she would always continue so. We were struck with one beautiful figure in the Bishop's closing remarks. He pointed to the State Capitol (in full view) around which so many churches of all denominations were clustering, claiming and enjoying alike the protection of the Government. He wound up by enforcing in fervent language the mutual dependence of Religion and Government; the former looking to the laws for its protection and the latter deriving from the holy fount of Religion those sound principles of morality, without which no Government could flourish. Eloquent as the Bishop always is, on this occasion he was eminently successful. His rich and melodious voice rang through the open air with thrilling effect, and his graceful elocution conveyed the full force of his sentiments, and fixed them on the hearts of his hearers.''

BISHOP JOHNS, of Maryland, who one year before, had been consecrated in the Monumental Church Bishop Meade's assistant, and had become a resident of Richmond, was a personal friend of Dr. Norwood, and well known among the Vestry and congregation. Owing to his ill health, the rector was not present at the Conventions of 1843-44, and for the same reason, was often absent from the city. Hence we find in the annual reports of the Monumental Church frequent mention of ministerial services performed by Bishop Johns. It seemed appropriate that he should be the preacher on the occasion of the cornerstone laying for these reasons. As years went on he officiated when St. Paul's was without a rector, but refused any salary. Until Bishop Johns became President of William and Mary College (1849) he continued a close association with the congregation and was always a welcome figure in the chancel.

John Johns, Assistant Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church of Va. The funds for the erection were furnished by those members of the Monumental Church Congregation and others, whose names are herein deposited.

Descendants of the ''contributors'' are living in all parts of the country and abroad, the names of many of them are very familiar—leaders in the Church and prominent in Richmond. Others directly descended, but not bearing the names are, too, affiliated with St. Paul's carrying on the work started by their forefathers and are well known in the community.

The Right Reverend Dr. Henshaw of Rhode Island, in his Memoir of Bishop Moore, said:

''The congregation of the Monumental Church comprehended probably a larger amount of intelligence and refinement, and a greater proportion of men distinguished for talent and influence, than any congregation in the Union.''

The colony which had gone from this Church in 1838 and built St. James, and the congregation which built St. Paul's (while deaths among the older members had occurred) were practically the same as described by Bishop Henshaw.

Today, St. Paul's has for its neighbors three buildings which were there to welcome her—the Capitol, the Executive Mansion, and St. Peter's Church. The many homes built about the same period as the Church, in that once fashionable neighborhood, have long since given way to business. The hospitable, comfortable rectory first occupied by Dr. Norwood, and by other rectors, until used as a Parish House, has on its site St. Paul's Parish House. One of the old houses is left, but occupied by the Virginia Historical Society. During the War Between the States General Lee's family lived here. It was owned by Daniel Stewart, a brother of John Stewart. When possible, the General was there, and attended with his family, St. Paul's. The pew in which they sat is marked with a plate bearing the General's name.

The generations privileged to worship in this beautiful church, have regarded it as a sacred and priceless heritage, and been conscious of the obligation they were under, and the debt of gratitude they owed to the founders who, with vision and generosity erected the edifice.

Under the leadership today, of the rector, the Rev. Vincent C. Franks, D. D., assistant minister, the Rev. Robert E. Davis, this great downtown church, which will mark a century of its occupation and consecration in 1945, is going forward with freshened enthusiasm into its field of service for the Master.

The service on Sunday morning, October 10, was a most inspiring one. The Church was thronged, many present were descendants of the founders, though no longer associated with the St. Paul's of today. Dr. Frank's stirring sermon had for its text: Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God;

And are built upon the foundation of the Apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ Himself being the chief corner stone—Ephesians 2:19-20.

The large choir marched up the main isle as was done in former years singing Onward Chirstian Soldiers—The recessional was The Church's One Foundation.

Editor's Note: The Presiding Bishop, on his return from serving as Bishop of Japan, was installed as Bishop of the Diocese of Virginia in St. Paul's Church. His brother, the Rt. Rev. Beverley Tucker, Bishop of Ohio and host of the General Convention, was then rector of the Church, and their father, the Rt. Rev. Beverley Dandridge Tucker, late Bishop of Southern Virginia, preached the sermon.

mission on Social Reconstruction which did not receive the attention it deserved, especially since the convention received a cable from the Archbishop of Canterbury congratulating us on the work of this body and offering to appoint a similar commission to work jointly with them. More will be heard in the years ahead of the vital job they are doing. The restrained, yet highly emotional presentation of the Commission on Unity report by Bishop Parsons was a high note of the day. One sensed the unanimity of feeling as the Bishop talked, and the resolutions presented were about all that could be expected or desired now from such a tangled and complicated and high tension problem, namely approval and continuation of the work already begun with the end of organic unity as the goal and with the belief that it can and will be reached. Only a few scattered "Noes" came out in the voting. The work of the Army and Navy Commission has been splendid and adequate for keeping our chaplains supplied with material and morale for their difficult task. First hand information disclosed the hunger of our boys for religion and the vital aid to them of the letters and Prayer Books and War Crosses and the other things which come from the parish church to let them know they have not been forgotten. As we care for these boys through our chaplains we are holding them to the church and giving them something more precious than life, to which they shall give their continued allegiance.

There were many spots of humor, especially when Bishop Tucker would cover up some lapse of his own with a funny story, like when he introduced the Mayor of Cleveland as the Mayor of Detroit and replied to the roar of laughter which greeted the mistake that he was born in Virginia and the rest of the world seemed comparatively unimportant anyway.

GLIMPSES OF GENERAL CONVENTION

The third and last highlight is the Bishops' Pastoral Address, heard read for the first time in Joint Session late Sunday afternoon. It would not be fair to tell more about it since you will hear it read soon from the pulpit of your own parish church. I urge you to wait for it and listen to it with complete attention. It is a document that makes you proud of the far-seeing and quick-acting leadership of the Episcopal Church in the affairs of the world.

Dr. Wm. Morison's Christian World Order

TO ESTABLISH a Christian world order, the place for Christians to start is with individuals," Dr. Wu Yi-fang, Ph. D., president of Ginling College, Chengtu, China, and one of that country's leading citizens, told the Triennial Meeting of women in Cleveland in her address on Christians and World Order. New emphasis, she urged, must be placed on the dignity of the individual human being.

"In the midst of the horrible destruction of the war," Dr. Wu continued, "Christians are thankful to find political leaders realizing that material force, armaments and treaties, are unable to secure safety or peace. The mounting chaos in society results from the loss of moral values, disregarding moral purposes, separating the material means of life from its spiritual ends and aims. Christians were once assumed to be too idealistic but now, through sheer experience and necessity, political leaders are finding that Christian teachings provide the only effective means to peace. Christians also are thankful at this time for the growing realization that the material sciences cannot fully explain human beings or solve human problems."

In community life, Dr. Wu said, one of the hardest but most important tasks is to get Christian principles practiced by and among vested interests, such corporate groups as governing bodies and blocs, industrial employers, merchant guilds, trade unions.

To play their part in establishing world order, the speaker concluded, Christians need an accurate knowledge of all races and cultures. Only when there is understanding and tolerance between all races and nations can world-wide cooperation follow. In achieving this, Christians must reiterate God's moral purposes for the destiny of man.

Bishop Tucker Remains Presiding Bishop

Vote Continuance of Unity Discussions With Presbyterians

October 4.—Continuance of unity discussions with the Presbyterian Church of the United States of America was voted by the House of Bishops at General Convention today.

Resolutions to this effect were submitted by the Joint Commission on Approaches to Unity as a substitute to the Majority and Minority Reports which strongly differed.

The action was taken on motion of Bishop Oldham of Albany and seconded by Bishop Manning of New York.

Bishop Parsons, Chairman of the Commission, spoke in favor of the resolutions and asked that the House approve them.

Bishop Oldham in moving adoption of the resolutions expressed the hope that "an unpleasant and unedifying discussion" would be avoided, and that any distrust and discord in the Episcopal Church membership would be prevented.

Bishop Sherrill of Massachusetts said he felt it should be emphasized that the Episcopal Church does want to achieve unity with the Presbyterian Church and that "we feel there are some prospects of such unity".

Bishop Manning replied that he felt the resolutions did so express the matter, and called for the question.

Bishop Parsons explained that the desire for such unity was understood, and that it was not reaffirmed more explicitly, because it had been affirmed in 1937, and again in 1940.

The resolutions follow:

1. Resolved, the House of Deputies concurring, that the Joint General Convention receives the report of the Joint Commission on Approaches to Unity and the minority report on the section dealing with the negotiations with the representatives of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America and refers them with other studies to the Church for study.

2. Resolved, the House of Deputies concuring, that the Joint Commission on Approaches to Unity be continued with such changes in membership as may seem advisable, and that it be instructed to continue its negotiations with the representatives of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America looking toward the organic union of the two bodies, and to continue or initiate similar conversations with other Christian bodies, and that in these negotiations it be directed to call upon the services of other theologians in the church for advice and counsel.

3. Resolved, the House of Deputies concurring, that in view of our membership in the Anglican Communion, the Joint Commission on Approaches to Unity is hereby directed to ask, on behalf of General Convention, the counsel of the Lambeth Conference before any commitments are made.

4. Resolved, the House of Deputies concurring, that General Convention hereby expresses its appreciation to the representatives of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America for the generous and open-minded way in which they have met the inquiries and proposals of the Joint Commission on Approaches to Unity.

5. Resolved, the House of Deputies concurring, that the Treasurer of General Convention is directed to provide the sum of $5,000 (five thousand dollars) for the work of the Joint Commission on Approaches to Unity during the forthcoming Triennium.

Clergy Placement

Clergy placement was considered in the House of Bishops with a vote that the Commission, under the leadership of Bishops on motion of Bishop F. A. be continued.

Bishop Huston suggested that development could best come through the setting up of clergy placement committees in dioceses and missionary districts by diocesan authorities.

A greeting to Churchmen in Japanese relocation camps "and our solicitude for them" was voted by the House of Bishops on motion of Bishop F. A. Rhea of Idaho.

A reaffirmation of interest in the Church's work in Latin-America and devotion to its further development was expressed by the House in adoption of a resolution submitted by Bishop Hugo Blankingship of Cuba.

The Commission on Negro work reported progress and stressed the improvement in the work made possible through the employment of a secretary for negro work as an executive of the National Council. The Commission asked to be discharged since the National Council has a committee on Negro work. It was discharged with thanks for its work.

The presidents of the eight provinces were appointed episcopal members of the Committee on nominations for the office of Presiding Bishop.

The relationship of bishops in foreign fields, where there is a native church, or autonomous province, was presented by Bishop J. Dewolf Perry of Rhode Island. A committee was appointed to investigate the subject which was composed of Bishops Fred McElwain, Perry, Shirley H. Nichols, Charles L. Riefsnider, and Edmund P. Dandridge.

"Redemption" Theme Suggested

"Redemption" was suggested by the Presiding Bishop as the theme of the program, which should "first, bring people to Christ, and then, secondly, in Christian fellowship enable Christ to develop the fruits of redemption."

He touched on the relationship between the Negro and white races, stating "until we can establish a real fellowship between the Negro and white races, we cannot fulfill our respons-

Liberalization of Marriage Canon Fails

San Francisco to Be 1946 General Convention City

October 7.—Action to liberalize the church's marriage canon failed of enactment in the House of Deputies by 1¼ votes in the clerical order, thereby leaving the Convention to consider the report of its Joint Commission on Holy Matrimony, for which various substitutes had been offered. The house had previously adopted an amendment to report of its committee on canons which would have liberalized the canon by permitting Bishops to exercise discretionary judgment in granting permission for second marriages to divorced persons after the lapse of a year after the divorce.

In the course of the day's activity, the house first accepted the minority report of the Committee on Canons which would grant the discretionary authority. The vote was—in favor clerical 40, lay 43¾, opposed clerical 30¾, lay 23½, divided clerical 8, lay 8. By a vote of 266 to 264 the house retained a section in the canon which requires automatic excommunication of people marrying outside the law of the church. The House deleted from the canon a provision requiring explicitly that at least one party to a proposed canon be baptized.

In the final vote, the amended canon was rejected by failing to attain a constitutional majority. The final vote was in favor, clerical 38¾, lay 45¼, opposed clerical 31¼, lay 24½, divided clerical 9, lay 4. A constitutional majority means at least 50 per cent of the total vote.

Prolonged Debate on Retiring Age

October 6.—After prolonged debate, the House this afternoon concurred with the House of Bishops in a canonical change raising the retiring age of the Presiding Bishop to 70, his retirement to take place at the General Convention next following his attainment of that age.

An amendment offered by B. Randolph Bias, of West Virginia, to make the change effective after December 1, 1943, was defeated on a voice vote. Such a change would have made the re-election of Bishop Tucker impossible. Speaking against the amendment upon which most of the debate took place, were Stoughton Bell of Cambridge, Massachusetts, Harold C. Gosnell of Lincoln, Nebraska, Col. James Mann of Norfolk, Va., and B. Allston Moore of Charleston, S. C. For the amendment were the Very Rev. A. C. Zabriskie of Alexandria, Va., and Dean Vincent of Portland, Oregon.

The House after defeating the amendment concurred in the original resolution by a rising vote of 365-153.

Reject Report of Commission on Holy Matrimony

October 8.—Two days' debate on the marriage canon in the House of Deputies came to an end this afternoon when on the same parliamentary rule which had decided the defeat of the liberalized canon yesterday prevailed again. In today's vote, the House finally rejected the report of its Commission on Holy Matrimony as amended by insertion of the Phister report section when these favoring it failed to gain a constitutional majority according to the ruling of the chair. The final vote was—in favor: clerical 38, lay 48; against; clerical 32, lay 17¼ divided clerical 9, lay 9. Inasmuch as divided votes were counted in the negative in determining the total vote cast, the measure failed to pass in the clerical order 38 to 41.

The method of counting the votes was challenged, and after debate, a motion to appeal from the ruling of the chair was tabled by a voice vote. A motion by President J. M. Potter of Rochester to suspend the rules and consider the commission's report unamended was lost on a show of hands. The motion of the committee on canons to commend the statement on the doctrine of marriage in Canon A to the Liturgical Commission passed.

Accept San Francisco's Invitation

The house concurred wit hthe Bishops in the first passage of an amendment to Article 10 of the Constitution, confirmed the Woman's Auxiliary nominations of members on the National Council, and voted to accept the invitation of the Bishop of California to hold the next session of convention in San Francisco. The House voted to refer to the National Council the preparation of a booklet for laymen on proper giving.

Permit Two Seats to Missionary Districts

After Col. James Mann of Norfolk, Va., had reported adversely on a resolution amending the constitution to permit two seats in each order to missionary districts, spontaneous reaction from the house resulted in instruction to recommit the resolution to the committee in order to draft such amendment and report it favorably. Action was on a resolution introduced by Dr. John R. Newcomer of Arizona. The Very Rev. Charles E. McAllister, of Spokane, supported Dr. Newcomer, and then the Rev. Churchill Gibson of Richmond, Va., reported the entire Virginia delegation as behind the proposal, and the Rev. Don Frank Fenn, of Baltimore, reported similar support from the entire Maryland delegation.

Announcement of Missionary Bishops Elected

October 9.—Late this afternoon announcement was made in the House of Deputies of the Missionary Bishops elected by the House of Bishops in closed session at Trinity Cathedral this morning.

They are: John Boyd Bentley, for Alaska. Bishop Bentley is now suffragan of Alaska, and will succeed the late Bishop Peter Trimble Rowe, who died last year.

Charles F. Boynton, to be Bishop Coadjutor of Puerto Rico. Mr. Boynton is now in that country, and was formerly in charge of student work of the Episcopal Church at the University of Wisconsin, Madison. He will be one of the youngest bishops to be consecrated, should he accept his election, as he is now 37 years old. He was born in Geneseo, New York, and was ordained to the priesthood just ten years ago.

Harry S. Kennedy, for Honolulu. Mr. Kennedy is now in the Navy as a chaplain. Prior to his military service he was rector of Grace Church, Colorado Springs, Colo. He is a native of Brooklyn, born in 1901. He has served parishes in Colorado and was rector of St. John's, Denver, from 1933 to 1937.

Sumner Francis Dudley Walters, for San Joaquin (Calif.). Mr. Walters is rector of Christ Church there. He was born in Newark, N. J., in 1898.

Charles A. Voegeli, for Haiti. Mr. Voegeli is now dean of the Cathedral of St. Luke and chaplain of the Bella Vista Children's Home, Ancon, Panama Canal Zone. He has been in the Canal Zone since 1938. He was born in Hawthorne, N. J., in 1904.

The House of Bishops also elected a Missionary Bishop for Salina (Kansas) the Rt. Rev. Shirley H. Nichols, now bishop in charge there representing the Presiding Bishop. Bishop Nichols was formerly Bishop of Kyoto, Japan, returning to this country when it became necessary for missionaries to leave that country.

Budget Unanimously Voted

October 9.—Budgets for the next three years' program of the Episcopal Church were unanimously voted this afternoon in the House of Deputies after a series of amendments were defeated. According to this vote the budget for 1944 will be $2,615,382 an increase of $356,000 over that for 1943; the budget for 1945 will be $2,677,132 and that for 1946 will be $2,735,058. Before the budget was put to a vote, the house heard the Hon. Thomas F. Robertson, of Washington, D. C., tell it that if the children raised $333,000 a year in mite box offerings, the laymen of the church ought to do their part, and the Rev. Charles Gomph of Newark declare that in voting for the budget the members of the House were committing themselves to raising it.

The House voted down an amendment from Spencer Irvin of Pennsylvania which would have reduced the Forward in Service appropriation from $35,000 to $10,000. The Rev. James W. F. Carmen of Colorado, and the Rev. Anson P. Stokes, Jr. of Columbus, Ohio, defended the appropriation. An amendment proposed by Thomas F. Cadwalader which would have reduced the appropriation for the department of promotion by 10 per cent was withdrawn after James E. Whitney, assistant treasurer of the National Council, J. M. Feehan of St. Louis, Missouri, and the Rev. Don Frank Fenn of Baltimore had defended it.

After voting the budget the house voted several other resolutions on the general subject. One designated the fields for missionary expansion as China, for which one-half of the sum for that purpose is to be spent, and then Mexico, India, Liberia, Alaska, Central America and South America, with emphasis in the order named. A method for determining diocesan quotas was adopted.

Appointed to Commission on Social Reconstruction

The president appointed to the Commission on Social Reconstruction the following: Rev. Messrs. Arthur C. Lictenberger of Newark; Charles F. Penniman of Wilmington, Delaware; Thomas N. Carruthers of Nashville, Tennessee; Anson P. Stokes, Jr. of Columbus, Ohio; and John S. Higgins of Minneapolis, Minn.; then the following laymen: Harper Sibley of Rochester, Clark G. Kuebler of Chicago, W. Dewey Cooke of Georgia, Milton P. Fuller of Kansas, and Dr. William J. Battle of Texas.

The House passed all the Resolutions of the Committee on Program and Budget, then adopted the report as a whole, authorizing the Commission to make such editorial changes as are necessary.

Compulsory Resignation of Bishops

Saturday, October 10, Final night.—The House considered concurrence with the Bishops in the amendment to the Constitution requiring compulsory resignation by bishops of diocesan jurisdiction at the age of 72. The Rev. Anthony R. Parshley of Bristol, R. I., and John Nicholas Brown, of Providence, R. I., spoke against concurrence, while the Very Rev. Alexander C. Zabriskie of Alexandria, Va., and Lispenard Phister of Cambridge, Mass., spoke in favor. A long report of the reaction of the trustees of the Church Pension Fund was read by Bradford C. Locke, of Princeton, N. J., executive vice-president, which showed that such compulsory retirement might have an effect on the extra benefits paid by the fund.

The final vote was for concurrence.

In clerical order: Yes 60¾. No 16¼. Divided 1.

In Lay Order: Yes 55½. No 11.

Carried in both orders.

Committee on Matter of See

In the closing moments of the night session, announcement was made of a Committee on the matter of a See for the Presiding Bishop: The Rev. Clyde Brown, Washington; the Rev. J. Lindsay Patton, Berkeley, Calif,; the Rev. Herbert A. Donovan, Charlottesville, Va.; Mr. B. Randolph Bias, Williamson, W. Va.; Dr. Henry W. Horn, Wichita, Kansas; Mr. Spencer Ervin, Philadelphia.

Use of Intinction—Communion of One Kind

October 10.—The use of intinction as a means of administering the Holy Communion in the Episcopal Church was brought before the House of Deputies for action this afternoon, even though the Prayer Book committee of the house introduced a resolution deferring all action until after the Lambeth conference. The Rev. Wilbur Ruggles of Kirkwood, Mo., introduced a resolution to amend the committee's report by authorizing intinction communion in one kind, and also authorizing a new rubric to be used when these alternative forms of giving communion are employed. After discussion it was passed by a vote of 245 to 81.

In the debate on intinction, Mr. Ruggles read a report of scientific investigation conducted by Dr. Paul Rutledge, also of Kirkwood. On a vote by orders, the section of the amendment dealing with intinction was passed, as follows: in favor—clerical 45¾. Lay 49¾; opposed—clerical 30 lay 12 3/4; divided—clerical 3, lay 2. The section to amend the Prayer Book rubrics passed on a division 217-116.

The House then turned to the subject of communion in one kind, and after discussion by the Rev. Frederic S. Fleming, rector of Trinity Church, New York; and the Rev. Richard T. Loring, of Baltimore, communion in one kind was authorized. The House then passed the whole of Mr. Ruggles' resolution.

Resolutions Passed

Saturday Night, October 9.—Twenty resolutions presented by the Joint Commission on Strategy and Policy, most of which were passed in the House of Deputies today and tonight, completed six years' work by that body and a resolution to discharge the commission was passed.

Social Problems

Tonight the deputies passed a long resolution on social problems, a resolution permitting the National Council, with permission of bishops and rectors, to encourage persons to contribute directly to the national program of the church over and above their giving through the normal channels, a resolution instructing the Church Historical Society to publish a brochure "The Encouraging Decade, 1930-1940." a resolution that the Church emphasize the Christian standard in business practices, and a resolution that the Church bring to the public consciousness the need of meeting world suffering and distress.

The resolution follows:

Whereas; It is fundamental to any hope of social development and of a new world order which shall be more in keeping with the mind and teaching of Christ that the Church should: (1) Make clear and emphatic declarations of social rights; (2) Create a fundamentally religious passion for national renewal; and (3) Hold constantly before its people the Christian affirmation regarding the nature of man and his responsibilities;

And Whereas; The Christian family can withstand the hazards of total war if its inner life is sustained by a concern to help each person to be always at his best and to fulfill his highest capacities for growth in Christian character, and if its attention is centered and its confidence is placed in the Source of all life:

And, Whereas; The revival of agriculture, which should also mean the re-creation of a way of life, must be based on a recovery of "reverence for the earth and its resources, treating it no longer as a reservoir of potential wealth to be exploited, but as a storehouse of Divine bounty on which we utterly depend;

And Whereas; The following principles must be kept before us as the Christian goal, to-wit: (1) Fellowship is essential to Christian worship; (2) Fellowship is essential for Church administration; (3) High standards must be maintained in every department of our work with the Negro; and (4) It is both the function and the task of the Church to set the spiritual and moral goals for society, and to bear witness to their validity by achieving them in her own life;

Therefore, Be It Resolved, the House of Bishops Concurring, That this Convention commends the foregoing principles of Christian Social Relations to the clergy and laity of this Church as embodying a Christian approach to the New World Order.

bility as God's agents in the world around us."

Plans for an enlarged program at the Bishop Payne Divinity School, were reported by Bishop W. A. Brown, who said that of the 199 Negro clergymen in the United States, 124 are graduates of this School.

All schools of the American Church Institute for Negroes closed the past year with a balanced budget, except one small school reported Bishop Brown.

General Reconstruction Fund

The House concurred with the Deputies on approving of the raising of a General Reconstruction Fund, under direction of the National Council, for rehabilitation of the Church's work and buildings in the Philippines, China, and elsewhere after the war.

Concurrence also was given the House of Deputies' resolution urging donations to the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief.

Appointed to Joint Commission of Church Unity

Bishops, R. E. L. Strider, Goodrich Fenner, Wallace Gardner, J. Ashton Oldham, and Stephen E. Keeler were appointed by the Presiding Bishop members of the Joint Commission of Church Unity.

Forward in Service

Merging of the Forward in Service Commission into the National Council was recommended by the Presiding Bishop at the Tuesday afternoon session of the House of Bishops. The subject was referrred to the Budget and Program Committee.

The Presiding Bishop stated he felt the work could be carried on effectively by the National Council also being the Forward in Service Commission.

He suggested, however, that the production of Forward Movement literature be left in its present semi-independent position, with Canon Gilbert P. Symons of Cincinnati, the editor, and the Ven. Harold J. Weaver of Louisville business manager, responsible to the Presiding Bishop.

Resolutions of appreciation of the work of Canon Symons and Archdeacon Weaver were adopted by the House of Bishops.

Bishop Henry W. Hobson of Southern Ohio was called on by the Presiding Bishop to express his views on the subject of merging the Forward in Service program into the National Council, and expressed his full approval, stating that it was the logical development.

The Rev. Dr. Arthur M. Sherman and the Rev. Dr. C. Avery Mason of the Forward in Service staff reported on the work and were praised by the Presiding Bishop for their accomplishments.

"The Forward in Service program in the years ahead must be in world terms," said the Presiding Bishop.

Intercommunion of Episcopal and Polish Church

Intercommunion has been attained between the Episcopal Church and the Polish National Catholic Church, Bishop John Z. Jasinski stated, in bringing greetings from the Polish National Catholic Church to the House of Bishops on Wednesday.

Bishop Jasinski recounted steps taken to achieve intercommunion between Churches of the Anglican communion and Old Catholic Churches of the Utrecht Union.

Formal ratification of intercommunion will be taken by the General Synod of the Polish National Catholic Church in a session to be called after the war ends.

Bishop Jasinski brought greetings from the Polish National Catholic Church as representative of the Most Rev. Francis Hodur, Prime Bishop of the Polish National Catholic Church.

The Presiding Bishop read a cablegram from the Patriarch of the Russian Orthodox Church expressing appreciation of greetings sent the Russian Church by the Episcopal Church.

Consent to the formation of a new diocese, through the merger of the diocese of Duluth and Minnesota was given by the House of Bishops.

American Bible Society

The American Bible Society report was presented by Bishop Henry W. Hobson of Southern Ohio, who stressed the inadequate support given by this Church to the work of the Society.

The Presiding Bishop and Bishop Hobson told of special instances of aid given by the Bible Society in the foreign mission fields.

"Million of copies of the Scriptures have been made available to men in the service", said Bishop Hobson in stressing the additional demands made on the Bible Society in the war. In addition, he said, more than half a million copies of the Scriptures have been sent to American, British, and Canadian prisoners of war.

"The Episcopal Church stands near the bottom of the list in finacial support of the American Bible Society," he declared.

"We are allowing our missionaries to sponge on the Bible Society because we sit back and do not bear our share of the cost."

Bishop Hobson asked, by resolution, that emphasis be given the Second Sunday in Advent as Bible Sunday, and that the offering in churches on that day be presented to the American Bible Society. The House of Bishops approved the resolution.

Bishop Manning called attention also to the New York Bible and Prayer Book Society and stated that it also needed funds. He emphasized that he did not intend to detract in the least from the work of the American Bible Society.

Rotation of membership of the National Council was approved when the Bishops concurred with the House of Deputies on legislation.

Retirement Age

October 6.—Retirement of bishops at the age of 72 came before the House of Bishops again Wednesday morning, with adoption of a motion expressing the belief of the house that this legislation applied not only to bishops to be consecrated in the future, but also to present members of the House of Bishops.

On enaction of this retirement legislation at this session, personal opinions were expressed that this would not apply to the present bishops over 72.

A resolution expressing the feeling this action was binding on the present members of the House of Bishops was submitted by Bishop E. P. Dandridge, coadjutor of Tennessee.

Bishop William T. Manning, of New York, suggested deferment of action until action on the proposed legislation was taken by the House of Deputies. The Presiding Bishop said he felt the Deputies were awaiting action of the House of Bishops to clarify the matter.

Bishop Henry W. Hobson of Southern Ohio, declared that "I don't want, and I'm sure it is the unanimous opinion of the other members of this house, that we do not want the House of Deputies to feel we have adopted a canon we feel is for the best interest of the Church, but that we don't want it put into effect until all of us are dead!"

Continue Aid to Russian Theological Academy

Continued aid to the Russian Theological Academy through the Good Friday Offering, and other assistance, was voted on motion of Bishop Washburn of Newark, committee on aid to the Russian Church was continued, and Bishops Henry Knox Sherrill of Massachusetts, John D. Wing of South Florida, and James DeWolf Perry of Rhode Island reappointed.

The Prayer Book Committee, through Bishop Campbell Gray of Northern Indiana, reported that it saw no reason why any bishop should not allow observance of the last Sunday in October as the Feast of Christ the King. The report was accepted.

Legislation

October 7.—Legislation to the effect that the Presiding Bishop shall resign his diocesan jurisdiction on assumption of the Presiding Bishopric was considered, not applying to Presiding Bishop Tucker as he already was in office.

---

Appointment of a delegation to visit the Russian Orthodox Church and to confer with the new Patriarch was approved by the House of Bishops, and the Presiding Bishop empowered to appoint bishops to such a delegation.

---

The Presiding Bishop also was authorized to appoint a delegation to visit the mother Church of England and confer with Church authorities on wartime and post-war conditions.

The World Council of Churches, headed by the Archbishop of Canterbury, was requested by the House of Bishops to take such steps as may be necessary to bring to bear Christian principles when the Peace Conference is held.

The Bishops concurred in the report of the Joint Commission on International and Social Reconstruction, as revised by the House of Deputies.

Concurrence also was given action of the Deputies in voting continuance of the Church's Historical Magazine.

The Commission on the Hymnal was authorized to continue and prepare a handbook explaining origins and backgrounds of hymns.

The House of Bishops passed legislation clarifying the canons regarding ordination of clergy received from other Churches. The amendment to the canon now goes to the Deputies.

A resolution expressing satisfaction at the integration of the Forward Movement and Forward in Service programs into the National Council, and provisions of funds for continuance of the work were voted by the bishops.

A resolution calling on Congress to repeal Discriminatory immigration laws, particularly in regard to the Chinese was presented by Bishop G. Ashton Oldham, of Albany, and approved.

A Catholic, Jewish, and Protestant Declaration on World Peace was adopted by the House of Bishops.

Proposed Revision of Marriage Canon

October 9, Morning Session.—Proposed revision of the Church's marriage canon, under debate the past two days in the House of Deputies, came before the House of Bishops on Saturday morning.

Bishop Davis, of Western New York, in presenting the report of the Joint Commission on Holy Matrimony, stated the regular procedure would have been to have awaited conclusion of action by the House of Deputies before consideration. However, the time limitations of the convention were such as to require consideration be begun by the bishops.

An upholding of the standards of Christian Matrimony as an indissoluble union of body and soul, and at the same time provision for relief of justifiable cases was asked by Bishop Davis in presenting the majority report.

"At present, marriage is regarded by canon as a physical union, which may be dissolved by a physical act of infidelity," he said, declaring, "It is the business of the Church to preserve in the canons the idea that Christian marriage is not only a union of two bodies but also of two personalities."

He called on the Church for a realistic approach to the situation, and especially that the Church be prepared to help the victims of hasty marriages.

Opposition to the proposed amendments was expressed by Bishop William T. Manning, of New York.

"We probably all are agreed that we need better legislation than we have," he said, "but in my judgment this proposed revision is not better legislation."

He held that the proposed revision was unworkable, in that it would eliminate any standard of the Church on matrimony, leaving instead as many standards as there are bishops, with each bishop having his own standard.

Chaos whereby a person failing to receive the judgment sought in one diocese would visit the bishop of another diocese and seek favorable judgment was predicted by Bishop Manning.

Retired Bishop's Vote

Retired bishops lose their right to votes in the House of Bishops if a resolution adopted Saturday morning by the House of Bishops is approved by the House of Deputies at this session, and then approved again by both bodies at the next triennium.

The retired bishops would have seats and voices in the House of Bishops, but no vote.

Bishop Kemerer's Resignation Accepted

Resignation of Bishop B. T. Kemerer as Bishop of Duluth was accepted by the House of Bishops, after it had been notified that the House of Deputies had concurred with it in legislation designed to provide for the merger of the Dioceses of Duluth and Minnesota. Bishop Kemerer's resignation is effective December 31, 1943.

Accept San Francisco's Invitation for 1946

San Francisco is to be the General Convention city of 1946.

No Recommendations on Marriage Canon

October 9, Afternoon.—Liberalization of the marriage canon is favored by the House of Bishops of the Episcopal Church, according to an informal vote taken by the House Saturday afternoon while in session as a committee of the whole.

Lengthy discussion on the proposed amendment of the present canon was avoided by House, when it went into session as a committee of the whole, and considered the matter informally.

The committee of the whole was asked by the Joint Commission on Holy Matrimony to express its opinion on the subject rather than leaving the matter in the Commission's hands with no indication of its standing on the matter.

The committee made no recommendations to the joint commission, but merely reported progress.

Bishop W. Scarlett, of Missouri, protesting against the failure of an indication of a stand on the matter, asked that indications be given whether the Bishops favored the Joint Commission proceeding on the "Denver Principle" which was recommended to the Denver session General Convention years ago.

The substance of the "Denver Principle" is that after one year a divorced person, whatever the reason for divorce, could appeal to the Bishop for permission to be remarried in Church.

At present, a strict interpretation would allow only one reason, adultery, as giving the innocent party permission for a second marriage in Church.

Recognition of the fact that no final action on the subject was likely at this session was given by the Presiding Bishop when he called for discussion of the Joint Commission report.

Bishop Scarlett traced the history of the Joint Commission. "The Commission was appointed in New Orleans 18 years ago because of dissatisfaction with the rigid canon then existing," he said. "The Commission reported in Denver, recommending that after one year anyone who had been divorced could appeal to the Bishop for permission to remarry in Church. This was defeated in Denver because the canon was not considered.

"Since then, every Commission appointed has felt the best way to get a solution is by a return to the Denver Principle. In 1940 it seemed the temper of this House that we should return to this principle. A new Commission of 15, with only one dissenting, agrees.

"We tried for years to hold to the rigid principle, but injustices continued and many people left the Church, feeling the Church had failed them.

"Another way was through the avenue of 'annulment', but to the average man this does not represent straight thinking, and our Church does not adopt this subterfuge. There are situations which dissolve a marriage as surely as adultery, and your Commission has attempted to solve the problem.

"Proposed action places the responsibility for decision on the Bishop, but that responsibility on the Bishop existed in the Primitive Church, and so we are really returning to Catholic practice."

Opposition was expressed by Bishop Manning, of New York; Bishop Ivins, of Milwaukee; Bishop Lewis, of Nevada, and Bishop Essex, of Quincy.

"It is up to the Church to uphold the Christian standard of holy matrimony," said Bishop Manning. "We cannot absolve ourselves of the responsibility to uphold the ideal, and the proposed legislation is not in conformity with the ideal. If we are going to make all these changes, then it is logical for us to change the language of the Prayer Book from 'till death do us part' or 'till death us do part, or the Bishop in consultation with a lawyer and a psychiatrist decide otherwise'."

Bishop Sterrett, of Bethlehem, brought the matter to a straw vote, after declaring, "We are all seeking to know the mind of Christ and there is no fundamental difference in our aims.

"We all know it is necessary to uphold the standard of Christian marriage, but I feel that a canon which gives only one provision for grounds for divorce—infidelity—gives neither justice nor mercy. And Christ's hottest words were to those who substituted for love and mercy a cold legalism."

Bishop R. E. L. Strider, of West Virginia, insisted that the Church agrees on the meaning of Christian marriage, but said "there is a problem in holding up the standard, and at the same time dealing with people who aren't able to live up to the standard."

"I don't want a canon which will let society go its way, with the Church trailing along and blessing it," said Bishop Ivins in opposition.

"I have the greatest sympathy in the world for anyone who has gotten into a situation of being in a marriage he regards as intolerable. There are trends in society, and one is that about one marriage out of four or five ends in the divorce court. Is the Church to be swept along with the sentiment of society, or is the Church to act as a brake?

"The Church can do the best service to society and to Christ by standing firmly, rather than saying, 'Society is drifting along, so let's drift with it'."

Christian Education

A report from the Committee on Christian Education, presented by the Rev. Arthur B. Kinsolving, of Baltimore, provoked unexpected debate. The committee recommended the resolution of the Rev. W. F. Moses, of South Florida, establishing a joint committee to study religious education as it applies to church schools, particularly clarifying the responsibilities of the National Council's Department of Religious Education. After the house had voted to establish the new commission, the opposition developed when its functions were being considered. Opposing the whole move were the Rev. Paul A. Kellogg, of Delaware, the Rev. J. Harry Price, of Scarsdale, New York, and the Rev. Beverly Boyd, of Richmond, Va.

New Members of National Council

The House of Bishops elected new members of the National Council. (Deputies must concur for final election.) They included Bishop Charles C. J. Carpenter, of Alabama, and Bishop Malcolm E. Peabody, of Central New York; Dean Elwood L. Haines, of Louisville, and the Rev. John E. Hines, of Houston, and Messrs. J. Taylor Foster, of New York; Jackson A. Dykman, of Long Island; E. Townsend Look, of New Jersey, and Alexander Whiteside, of Massachusetts, all for terms of six years. The Rev. John Heuss, of Chicago, and Mr. W. W. Grant, of Colorado, were elected for terms of three years.

Expansion of Missionary Program—Integration of Christian Principles in Whole Fabric of Life Chief Objectives

October 9.—Suggestions to delegates of the Woman's Auxiliary Triennial Meeting, as to how the ideas worked out in the meeting may be carried out in parishes and dioceses, were discussed by the delegates in their closing session this morning, brought in by the continuation committee, Mrs. Thomas G. Price, of Fort Myers, Fla., chairman.

"Expansion of the missionary program" and "integration of Christian principles in the whole fabric of life" are stated as the two chief objectives. The primary emphases desired, as the women of the church undertake to make the ideas of the Triennial program effective throughout the church, are "to change all un-Christian attitudes, particularly intolerance and lack of understanding of racial groups; to bridge the gap between the stimulation of the Triennial Meeting and the application of its message in parish and mission; and to make concrete preparation to meet the needs of the post-war world, looking toward a just and lasting peace."

"We must begin with ourselves," the statement continues, and adds: "Counseling of youth and sponsoring the Church school are more needed than ever before. The children of today are the church of tomorrow. Their Christian education is imperative.

"Because thousands of mothers, Christian and non-Christian, are engaged in defense and volunteer work and juvenile delinquency in this country has increased alarmingly, the women of the church should endeavor to recall to the womanhood of America that it is the Christian as well as the patriotic duty of every mother to give priority to the care and attention of her home and children over volunteer war work. In cases where defense work is necessary some provision must be made for the care of the children. This offers an opportunity for Christian service which auxiliary groups should grasp."

On missionary expansion the statement comments: "The years of missionary retrogression must end. Churchwomen must assist in reviving and strengthening the program of missionary education and promotion.

"The secularization of education and the industrial revolution separated man's life into compartments, with different codes for each, resulting in the chaos of modern life. We accept the teachings of Jesus in our personal relationship to God—but we must also put them into action and practice in every area of life. In our economic life men must be treated as ends in themselves and not as means to an end.

"Minority, cultural and racial groups must be assisted in developing their capabilities to share in the privileges and responsibilities of citizenship."

Church Leaders Remembered

October 4.—Ten church leaders whose deaths have occurred since the last (1940) Triennial Meeting were remembered at the morning session today. With Miss Elise Dexter, of Boston, as chairman, the committee on memorials paid tribute in resolutions which were adopted by rising vote, to the late Bishops Peter T. Rowe, of Alaska, Frederick B. Bartlett, of Idaho, and Frederick B. Howden, of New Mexico and Southwest Texas; also to four former members of the Woman's Auxiliary national executive board; Miss Margaret Lukens, late of Philadelphia, National President of the Girls' Friendly Society; Mrs. Edwin J. Randall, former President of the Chicago Diocesan Auxiliary; Mrs. John M. Glenn, New York, National President of the Church Mission of Help; and Miss Eva D. Corey, Boston, Massachusetts, Diocesan President and one of the first four women members of the National Council.

The Triennial Meeting also rose to send greetings to Miss Grace Lindley, of New York, who had been present at every Triennial since 1916 as national executive, until her retirement after the last meeting.

Members of Executive Board Elected

October 6.—Election of eight members of the Woman's Auxiliary National Executive Board and of an executive secretary took place with voting by dioceses.

Miss Margaret I. Marston, executive since 1940, was the only nominee and was unanimously re-elected.

The three board members eligible for a second term were re-elected.

Adelaide T. Case, Ph. D., instructor of the Episcopal Theological Seminary, Cambridge, Mass.; Mrs. Roger Kingsland, of Fairmont, West Virginia, now president of the Auxiliary for the third province and former West Virginia diocesan president; Mrs. Donald Carnegie Stevenson, Grosse Pointe, Michigan, chairman of dispatch of business at the 1940 and 1943 Triennials, former president of the Michigan diocesan Auxiliary. Mrs. Stevenson received the highest number of votes cast for any nominee, 90 out of a possible 99.

The remaining five of the necessary eight are:

Mrs. Alfred Chapman, of Washington Crossing, Penn., parliamentarian of the 1943 and 1940 Triennials; for eight years on the board of the New York diocesan Auxiliary.

Mrs. John F. Heard, of Atlanta, former president of the Atlanta diocesan Auxiliary, a continuation conference leader at this session.

Mrs. Wm. P. Roberts, of Shanghai, now of Auburndale, Mass., a delegate from Shanghai to this session (her husband is Bishop of Shanghai); now president of the Massachusetts diocesan Girls' Friendly Society. (Asked about her "activities", she replied, "Mother and cook".)

Mrs. George N. de Man, Helena, Arkansas, president of the Arkansas diocesan Auxiliary, formerly worked in China and India.

Mrs. Roy Hoffman, Oklahoma City, Okla., former president of the Oklahoma diocesan Auxiliary.

The executive board also includes eight members elected, one each, by the Church's eight provinces, which insures an even geographical representation. The eight members at large, elected today, may come from any part of the country.

THOUGHTS FOR THE THOUGHTFUL

The Christian must carry his own cross, but he must lighten the cross of his neighbor. —Nicholas Berdyaev.

I desire no other evidence of the truth of Christianity than the Lord's Prayer. —Madame de Stael.

For the strength that is permanent we have to lean on visions. For immortal hope, we have to trust, not the things that we perceive, but those invisible things that our spirits affirm.
—Selected.

"Time writes no wrinkle on the deed of sacrifice."

When thou prayest to Thy Father thou needest only thy need.

Many voices have offered me a home for my quiet hours. Thou alone hast promised me a covert in my storm.
—Geo. Matteson.

In religion, no less than in other forms of social life, a great living tradition is the noblest of all inheritances.
—Figgis.

It is right to be disquieted on the sea of wrong, but take care that your disquiet comes from the sea, not from some personal hatred that is sleeping in the hold of the ship. —Selected.

Stars fill me with a sense of God. And the heart cannot help feeling grateful when it remembers that the beauty and the wonder of them may be accounted things not to enable us to exist, but gifts of love to make us joyous.
—Archibald Rutledge.

"Would you end War?
Create great Peace.
The Peace that demands all of a man—
His love, his life, his very self."

If they could have believed pledged word, treaty after treaty, the nations of the world could have disarmed long ago and been walking toward the path of real peace. The great need today is for us to begin to write and tell the truth as we know it, no matter what the personal cost.

Let us believe the glad tidings of God to us and go forward in the strength of that faith, following that One Lord, caring nothing about the blame cast on us by men, but with the peace of God in our hearts and the praise of God on our lips. From a letter written by Pastor Niemoeller in his prison cell.

Come, share the road with me, my own,
The Christian life is one of struggle, of spiritual warfare, of defeats as well as victories, of unceasing vigilance against temptation and sin. Sometimes it requires, as some one has said, "the taking of sides against one's self in order to be on God's side." But however difficult such a life may be, we can rest assured in the fact that it is the one way to spiritual victory. The crown of life is not promised to the laggard, to the negligent, to the indifferent, but "to him that overcometh."
—Christian Observer.

GLIMPSES

FROM ONE WHO WAS THERE

We are still covering the House of Bishops chiefly, with occasional visits to the House of Deputies. The contrast is almost appalling. In general the comparative quiet of the Bishops puts to shame the raucous confusion of the Deputies. The atmosphere of the two houses is entirely different. There seems to be a brash determination on the part of the Deputies to have their say and to see to it that the Bishops are duly kept in line upon the important questions the Deputies feel are dealt with too gentlemanly and much too timidly in that house. However, as one sits hour after hour with the Bishops, one finds underneath the outward calm to the casual visitor an almost ceaseless movement and sound, which at times is almost a roar. Many of the Bishops have a habit of ignoring what is happening and carrying on throaty whispering campaigns one with the other. Even the Presiding Bishop's ear is lured away from the business in hand at times. This makes for much rereading and repeating of that which should have been heard the first time. But a grin from the Chair and a loud sound of the gavel restores order for at least five minutes. One or two bishops read their mail and apparently answer it on the spot. More power to them. One feels a bit sorry for the baby bishops stuck in the back where they cannot see or hear very well (they graciously deny this) and where the loud disturbance from the front is added to the scurry and door opening in the rear, making them wish no doubt for their old seats in the House of Deputies or for a more rapid advance in years toward the front seats.

One interesting visit to the Deputies yesterday produced a moment of conversation with the General Chairman of the Convention, Mr. Laurence H. Norton. His family has been long in the service of the Church in Ohio, although this is his first General Convention officially. Mr. Norton was formerly with the diplomatic corps in Paris. He told me of some of the difficulties confronting the committee in arranging for the Convention, which was originally planned in grandiose style, but because of the war curtailed in drastic fashion. No entertainment was planned because every minute was to have been taken with business. However, all evenings have been free, except for the House of Churchwomen, and much private entertaining has been going on. No side shows were to have been held, and it was his ungracious task to tell such groups as the young people, the Negroes and others that they could not come. This was his hardest job, he said. Difficulties were many. The canons had to be changed to have the dates from October 2 to 11. The hotels said the middle of the week was their peak time. That is why two week-ends were scheduled. But the railroads said that the week-ends were their busiest times. The compromise was to put the convention so that travel would not be on a week-end and so that the hotels would not have to give up but one mid-week period. Incidentally 1,200 rooms were reserved in the hotels. A week-end trip to Kenyon College had to be given up and many other interesting things. Another delicate problem came up concerning wives. It was finally decided to reserve one room per delegate and if the wife came along she would have to bunk in with no added space provided. Many wives came.

Several peppery moments came to the Bishops yesterday. One was over the revision of the Canon which would allow Bishop Tucker to serve another term as Presiding Bishop. Cries of personal legislation were heard. This seemed rather useless since all legislation comes out of personalities as well as principles. The Bishops so decided. In presenting his report for Forward in Service Bishop Tucker made a plea for fellowship one with another in the process of redemption, the current note of forward in service. In order to make all the work of the church "world" work, he suggested the National Council take over the work of forward in service. "The mission of the church is a single mission," he said, "and the witness of lives is more important than gifts of money, and, therefore, the move is advantageous to the work of the National Council, which everyone connects up with money. For the next triennium the work of redemption must be effective in the Church."

The other business you will read about elsewhere.

I keep remembering Sunday as I sat at the press table. I could not see the speakers on the platform, that is their faces, but I could see their feet. It was fascinating to see how the position and movement of their feet recorded the effectiveness of the speaker. For example, as Bishop Tucker talked on Forward in Service, there was an impatience about the feet that spelled out desire for action and continued movement, the pledge to march along with him as far as he would go.

While the Bishops sat in executive session one day I visited the House of Deputies in time to hear the unanimous vote of concurrence with the House of Bishops to continue the Commission on Approaches to Unity and to listen to the debate over the Social Reconstruction report, which is an attempt at a "revival of the Church's responsibility in social life". Section A, which was the actual report, dealing in general terms with the Church's responsibility and convictions in international, inter-racial, and economic spheres, and fairly well in tune with the Archbishop of Canterbury's forward looking plans for the post-war world, escaped with but minor objections. Section B, however, with its theological elaboration upon these various themes, and which was not a part of the Commission's report caused a storm of debate, which at last subsided after assurance was given that concurrence with the House of Bishops did not mean approval of this section. Someone could write an interesting article on "The life and death of section B".

I heard also the debate, much longer than anticipated and most confusing, over the advancing of the Presiding Bishop's retirement age limit from 68 to 70. As in the House of Bishop's there were cries of personal legislation and special legislation. This was passed at long last.

One feels most gratified that in Cleveland one can buy a fairly decent street car ride for only .03c—but hamburgers cost 20c.

The resolution which made it possible for Bishop Tucker to continue in office as Presiding Bishop was offered early Thursday morning and was concurred in a short while later by the Deputies. The presentation was very undramatic and almost routine. It came suddenly in the midst of a discussion about the Presiding Bishop's See and the kind of residence and office it should have—a kind of Lambeth Palace in America is envisoned by Bishop Perry (former Presiding Bishop). Bishop Tucker's acceptance was simple and homey. He said, "I cannot understand why you wanted me again unless something said about me in my younger days still holds, that is, as I walked down the street someone commented, 'There goes an ugly, honest looking young man'. Perhaps it is because I have tried to be honest." That was all there was to it. This, to my mind, is the greatest and most significant piece of news that has come out of this fifty-fourth Triennial Convention. Bishop Tucker resigned as Bishop of Virginia as of June 1, 1944.

HAVEN . . .

By J. W. KENNEDY

LONG ago, when it was popular and possible to ride on the observation platform of a pullman car lounge, one could see the scenery with a measure of scope and deliberatness, no matter how fast the train was moving. I remember one such ride over the top of the Rockies in Colorado. Even the dirt and cinders and stinging wind did not spoil the suspended beauty and wonder of it all. The point I am trying to make is that a backward look gives us pause to think in wholeness and perspective far better than the moment by moment vision through a pullman car window of forward movement, as we match the rhythm of our thoughts to the zit, zit, zit of the passing telephone poles. One of the most interesting and helpful of my Monday morning devotional routines is to sit on the observation platform of my imagination and travel the rails of the ticking clock and look at the journey of Sunday passing before my mind's eye as a solid block of memory, like the whole plan of a valley just passed through when observed from the back of the train ascending one of the mountain walls that hems it in. Sunday's journey has its high lights and shadows and there is always much to be done to ease the inner sense of right and wrong. But my greatest joy comes from a game I like to play. You will not be able to play it unless you heard a sermon last Sunday in a church or over the air, or read one in the paper, or had one preached to you privately. I cannot remember when Sunday did not provide me with a sermon as material for my game. I must confess that some of the sermons furnished meagre material for my game of remembrance, but most of the time there was such an abundance of good things I could not use them all. The game goes like this. First I ask the question, What was the sermon about yesterday? I try to recall the subject, the text and in general what the minister was trying to put across—his message—the good news he wanted to impart. Yesterday, for example, the sermon subject was "Up a Tree" and the text was taken from the story of Zacchaeus in Luke 19:1-10. (I remember the reference because when the minister read it as one of the morning lessons he asked us to remember the details.) The real message of the sermon was the method Jesus used to get people down when they were "up a tree"—obviously for us to remember when we were up trees or saw another in that condition. With this material as background I ask another question, what was the most vivid and interesting part of the sermon? This was sometimes a phrase that stuck in my mind or an illustration that revealed a truth and kept it in bold relief for one to remember and ponder. In yesterday's sermon it was the story of a new kind of time bomb that was exploded when it was exposed to a ray of light. The minister likened this to the hidden powers within us that were literally exploded into being by contact with the light which always comes when Jesus is near—a kind of spiritual booby trap. The illustration made it quite clear how persons like Zacchaeus, good for nothing so long, could be changed in the space between sun-up and dusk of a given day. My last question is always personal, what special word was there in that sermon for me, which I can hold to and use this day and through the week? It is usually quite easy to recall the thought which packed the greatest spiritual wallop. For me yesterday it was, "When one is lost Jesus is endlessly searching and seeking in order to find him and save him." This was planted even more deeply last evening when a telephone call brought word of one whom God had finally tracked down and saved, whom I had given up years ago.

The game is never quite finished but keeps in conscious play the good thoughts of my yesterday for the better living of today.

By ANGUS DUN

On Presenting the Report of Unity to The House of Deputies

THE RESPONSIBILITY has been laid upon my brother, the Rev. Francis Bloodgood, and upon me of presenting to this House the report of the Commission on Approaches to Unity. You may be assured that we both come to the task with the prayer that we may speak with just restraint as servants of truth and in brotherly charity.

You know that the report of the Commission as presented includes a majority and minority report, signed respectively by twelve and by three members of the Commission. As printed, the report offered for your consideration two sets of resolutions. Since the opening of this convention, the membership of the Commission has met and agreed to present to the House the one set of resolutions coming over to us from the House of Bishops for our concurrence or non-concurrence. Dr. Bloodgood and myself are therefore joining in the moving of these common resolutions.

These resolutions, briefly summarized, involve the following five items: 1—receiving the majority and minority reports; 2—continuing this Commission "with such changes as may seem advisable" and instructing it to "continue its negotiations with the representatives of the Presbyterian Church of the U. S. A., looking towards the organic union of the two bodies": 3—instructing the Commission to consult the Lambeth Conference before any commitments are made; 4—expressing our appreciation to the representatives of the Presbyterian Church and 5—providing for the expense of the Commission.

IT IS ON THESE RESOLUTIONS that I shall speak, though as one who unashamedly signed the majority report. The resolutions before us do not commit this House to any specific plan of union with the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. They do not specifically commit this House to any particular philosophy or set of assumptions regarding the form such a union should take. This does not mean, however, that these resolutions can be passed irresponsibly and as though they carried no intelligible implications.

They explicitly instruct your Commission to continue its negotiations with the representatives of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. looking towards the organic union of the two bodies. If I understand the English language . . . and I must admit that sometimes in hearing the debate on this matter, I doubt whether I do . . . that means that we are to continue our search for a plan which might bring these two great corporate traditions or streams into a visible community of life. It does not mean that we hope to absorb a large number of baptized persons once called Presbyterians into our household. If any one here does not sincerely desire and cannot remotely imagine anything that could be called a union of these two bodies, it is difficult to see how he could vote for this resolution.

Secondly, it is to be noted that these resolutions provide for continuance of the Commission, "with such changes as may seem advisable." It will fall to the presiding officers of our two houses to determine what changes seem advisable. But a good measure of continuance, not a wholesale replacement, is what is reasonably to be expected. And in that connection, it is proper to remind you that a substantial majority of the Commission has indicated to you the assumptions on which we have approached our difficult task, and some of the issues which we believe the Church must ultimately face.

PERHAPS THE MOST fundamental of the assumptions on which we have worked has been the recognition of the Presbyterian Church as being truly a part of Christ's "Holy Catholic Church" and the acceptance of the Chicago-Lambeth Quadrilateral as furnishing the platform on which we could stand in negotiations for Church union. The recognition of the Presbyterian Church as in a profound sense a part of Christ's Church is absolutely fundamental in the sense that the Presbyterian Church could not consider negotiations on any other terms. The denial of it would be for them the repudiation of the sacred communion with God in Christ which they, and their forefathers, have enjoyed. This presents, in the judgment of the majority of your Commission, an inescapable issue which cannot be dodged on the right hand or the left.

The majority of your Commission, as I have reminded you, takes its stand on the Lambeth Quadrilateral. And taking that stand we have counted it a very great step forward that the Presbyterian communion has declared its readiness to recommend the acceptance of the historic Episcopate. There are those here who do not think the Presbyterian Commission knows what the historic Episcopate is or means. And they are almost equally certain that we of the majority, including the bishops, do not know what Episcopacy is or means. Yet it is this Commission, "with such changes as may seem advisable" to this poor, fallible man on my left, (Dr. Osgood, president of the House—Ed.) that I and my brother are asking you to continue.

THERE ARE THOSE who approached the Convention with a fear that some dreadful thing was about to happen, some schism, some ecclesiastical tumult, some precipitous rushing into untried ways. There were others on the Commission and many outside it who came hoping that we could reach here some clarifying action that would give us a steer and bring to our beloved Church the honor of daring leadership. There are those of us here who are very impatient, with an impatience we believe to be of the Spirit, and very fearful of God's judgment of us in history. I am certainly one of those.

You may ask, then, why I stand here and support such very mild and cautious and uncosting resolutions as these. I do so, with inner distress, because I fear that we are too divided, too confused, too fearful to take bolder action with reasonable unanimity. We know that we have deep differences. Negotiations for unity make explicit these unresolved conflicts. What we must humbly and realistically declare to the world is that we are too divided, too unclear, too afraid of the darkness to move ahead more than a tiny step. Just as we stand today, we are too unsettled to be a

Pastoral Letter from House of Bishops

Brethren:

IN A DAY OF spiritual confusion, and of "distress among nations," we greet you with the inspired assurances by "holy men of old." First, we would like to make our own the Psalmist's prayer: "O God, be merciful unto me; for my soul trusteth in Thee; and under the shadow of Thy wings shall be my refuge, until this tyranny be overpast." We repeat to you and to ourselves, the ringing exhortation of St. Paul to the Ephesian Church: "Be strong in the Lord and in the power of his might." And most heartening of all is the promise of Christ Himself: "In the world ye shall have tribulation: but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world."

We, your Bishops, can begin our message to you in no other way than by a reference to the mercies of God. We confess that our first step towards spiritual competency is an humble admission of our faults to Him who is long-suffering, full of compassion, and of great pity. Our wise Church insists on this. The Confession in the Holy Communion admits: "The burden of our sins is intolerable. Have mercy." The first petition of the Litany cries, "O God the Father, have mercy." This is not approved morbidity nor pious groveling. It is an essential attitude towards God whose gifts to us are limited, if not inhibited, until we open the way for His grace and heavenly benediction by a forthright acknowledgment of our faults.

Our Church must prepare—with all our hearts we believe that the Church is girding herself—to witness to a war-sick world, and then to a post-war world by confessing now her corporate sins which are grievous and, in part, responsible for the darkness that covers the earth. We do not need to prolong the mournful category of our social misdoings in order to feel convicted of our corporate faults. The concentration of wealth in the hands of comparatively few people, a separatist's policy of isolationism that beguiled us into imagining that we were not our brother's keeper, though now we have discovered that our neighbors need us, and that we need our neighbors desperately; social injustices that we have tolerated until they now return to plague us with an ugly breed of antagonisms and tensions that tend to disrupt rather than to unify our economic structure and our body politic; class distinctions that are anything but brotherly; and racial discriminations that are anything but just. These are some of the things that have crept into the life of our day. We confess that they are sin, trusting that He who is faithful and just will forgive us our sins. The most hopeful feature of modern Christianity is its retention of a capacity to criticize itself. The way of repentance is the road to discovery of the will of God. It is the beginning of a convincing witness with authority.

WE SEND AFFECTIONATE greetings to all those who are enlisted in the service of our country. Whenever we speak to you, or about you, our words must be few because our hearts are full. We are aware of the dislocation of your lives which your response to duty has entailed, your broken plans, your hopes deferred. And yet we, not you, are the ones who speak of your sacrifices, for you cheerfully scorn to mention them. We are grateful as generations yet unborn will be grateful, for the priceless gift you are making to the freedom of nations and the peace of the world. Though many of you are removed from our sight, yet in our prayers you are folded deep. At our altars all over this land, we remember you by name and the homes from which you came. We believe that the cause for which you fight is just.

May God bless you and arm you with the Spirit that you may "quit yourselves like men" and "be strong in the power of His might."

WE WISH TO PAY tribute to our Army and Navy Chaplains. We have felt the shock of their loss from our parochial and diocesan fronts. But we rejoice that their leadership has enlisted to march side by side with the spiritual needs of our men in every rank. What a comfort they supply to those who wait at home! For we know that our sons, on whatever ocean or shore they may be, are the personal concern of these gifted and consecrated priests of God who cheerfully share their lot, including danger and privations, and who faithfully provide them with the Sacraments and other ministrations of the Church. We salute these soldiers of the Cross to whom, more than to any other official group, we have entrusted the spiritual welfare of those we love, now absent from us.

We have observed with gratitude the stirring of God's Spirit among the youth of the Church. The growing response of young people to the call of Christ is one of the most significant and encouraging movements of this time. How providential it is that the mobilization of the Church's youth should coincide with a day of serious juvenile delinquency, of national peril and international opportunity! For the overwhelming problems of today and for the vaster issues of tomorrow the Church needs and welcomes the dauntless zeal of clear-eyed youth whose spiritual audacity is essential to any religious offensive. We appeal to this marching army of young disciples to bring to the Church their dreams of a social order wherein dwelleth righteousness and to dedicate their glowing gifts of mind and heart and hand to the hastening of this new day.

THE SCOPE of the Church's ministry of reconciliation and redemption has a close relationship of historical developments. When the fullness of time came, God sent forth His Son. The timing and the placing of our Lord's own ministry were not accidental, but were determined by opportunities and needs growing out of a concrete historical situation. Victory in this war will bring about a world-wide condition of opportunity and need. This means that everywhere there will be a strong feeling of dissatisfaction with what is or has been, and a reaching out after all available ways and means of realizing aspirations for something better. In other words, we shall have a secularized version of those attitudes which in religion we call repentance and faith. As Christians, we recognize in such a situation both danger and opportunity. The danger is that the reconstruction, prompted by secularized repentance and faith, will inevitably suffer the fate described by our Lord in His parable of the house built upon sand. Longing after heavenly ideals is commendable, but faith that they can be realized by human effort, working with material resources is an ancient delusion. The story of the Tower of Babel was told thousands of years ago. In every century, the attempt has been repeated, for man's faith in his own efforts is hard to destroy.

The imminence of this danger should be a challenge to the Church, not only to the present Christian ideals as the goals towards which the world should aspire, but still more urgently, to present faith in God as the only means by which our hope can be realized. We look for a city which hath foundations whose builder and maker is God.

Victory in this war will open up an unparalleled opportunity for making actual in the life of mankind that redemption which was made possible by the sacrifice of Christ. Redemption would seem to be the most suitable religious term to describe the nature of the work that is called for. The primary purpose of the war is to secure to mankind its inalienable rights to freedom. Redemption literally means the price that has to be paid to deliver one who is in bondage. In a very real sense, the effort and the sacrifice made in a war to secure freedom, partake of the nature of redemption. Yet terrible as is the suffering and sacrifice of war, they cannot purchase the freedom of mankind

REDEMPTION, no less than creation, is an act of God. In the development of His creative purpose, God uses our human cooperation. So also He places upon those who are redeemed the responsibility of helping to extend the benefits of redemption to all mankind. Christ died for all that they which live should henceforth live, not unto themselves, but unto Him who died for them. The missionary impulse is the proof of our own redemption. In helping God to redeem others, our own redemption is made complete. We become good, in the Christian sense of the word, only as we give ourselves to the effort of helping others to be good. We are told that the Captain of our salvation was made perfect through suffering. He gives the same privilege to His followers. May not the call to world-wide service in the post-war world prove, not only an opportunity to fulfill our obligations as Christians and to show our gratitude to our Redeemer, but also be a means by which the corporate life of the Church will approach nearer to the perfection of its Founder, thus making its own life an "earnest" of the achievement of His purpose to transform human society into the Kingdom of God.

In conclusion, we speak with deepest sympathy to those to whom this war has brought grief or anxious waiting. May the God of Pity bend tenderly over them, and comfort them with the consolation of His love.

WE BID YOU affectionately to "lift up your hearts," and to walk confidently into an unknown future, without faltering or complaining, nothing doubting. We believe in God Almighty. Wherefore, we hope and labor for the overthrow of every combination of wrong in the individual, in society, in the Church, in the State and in the larger fellowship of nations. Our faith in the invincible Christ, whom the hatreds of the world could not, and cannot defeat, provides us with the assurance that we too may become more than conquerors through the power of Him who died, and rose again. The ground of this confidence is simple faith in God. The Godless man is full of fears, the faithful man is full of hope. In the oppressive darkness of this storm-racked hour, we are like the mariners on St. Paul's battered ship. We "long for the day". And what is more, we know that the day will come. Christian hope is like that. It expects fulfilment. God does not mock us with prospects that can never be attained. All that His character prompts us to require of Him, all that Christ's promises move us to expect from Him:—these blessings and more, He will most surely keep and perform.

In fact we can already see signs of their fulfilment. When we observe the sacrifices that youth is making, the cheerfulness with which people are denying themselves for the sake of a high cause, the bravery with which small congregations, bereft of their leadership, have closed their ranks and pressed forward to new advances for Christ and His Church, when we are aware of a growing trend towards unity and a sense of brotherhood that is widening out to include all races and nations and kindreds and tongues, we seem to hear the cry of the watchman upon the mountain top, calling hopefully to a war-sick world: "Look to the East, the morning cometh."

BOOK NOTES

By the Faculty of the Divinity School of the Pacific—Randolph Crump Miller, Editor

A. T. ROBERTSON, A BIOGRAPHY, by Everett Gill. New York, Macmillan Co. 1943. Pp. xvi-250. $2.50.

This is a rather disappointing biography of the greatest scholar in the field of New Testament Greek that this country has produced. It is filled largely with sentimental and "homey" details of his private life that tend to give a picture of a personnel life that was trivial if not futile. It is difficult, even impossible to believe that this is true of a man whose work has been such a tremendous inspiration to the study of New Testament language and its interpretation. The most satisfactory section deals with his work on the "Big Grammar" (A Grammar of the Greek New Testament in the Light of Historical Research), his most important and influential work. Practically nothing is said about his other 44 books except to list them. I doubt that any other Southern Baptist has had such a great influence upon the religious scholarship of this country, yet the book tells little of this apart from a few quotations from congratulatory letters on his sixtieth birthday. Its point of view is rather narrowly sectarian and wholly inadequate and unworthy of so great a man. One can but hope that a life of A. T. Robertson will be written which will give an adequate evaluation of his great work and its influence on American religious life and teaching.

DR. RUDOLPH BOLLING TEUSLER, by Howard Chandler Robbins and George K. MacNaught, with a foreword by Joseph C. Grew. Scribner's. $2.00.

The biography of Rudolph Bolling Teusler is an excellent piece of writing and a most painstaking record of the life of a great medical missionary. It reveals the extraordinary development in medicine and especially in medical education during the past fifty years. Teusler entered the Medical School of Virginia at Richmond in 1892 at the age of 16. The course was only two years and the second year was a review of the first. During Teusler's time a new teacher was called. He made it a condition that new methods would have to be introduced before he could accept. Included in his requirements was a surgical clinic. It was this clinic that aroused Teusler's interest in surgery and started him on the way to the competence he afterwards acquired.

The early days in Japan were a test of Teusler's patience and vision. That he was able to carry on and create a great institution with such slender resources is, perhaps, the most significant part of the whole record.

In the preparation of the book Mr. MacNaught visited Virginia and Japan, studying records and original sources. The book shows the effect of his careful study as it does the skillful literary gifts of Dr. Robbins. They have produced an outstanding book. Mr. Grew has written a satisfactory introduction from his personal knowledge of Teusler.

The biography will serve as a permanent record of the history and development of St. Luke's International Hospital in Tokyo. Not everything can be put into one book. Perhaps some time the narrative will be continued and will tell of the present situation at St. Luke's and also something of the contribution of Mr. Bergamini, the architect, to the St. Luke's project and its fulfillment.

Some Reflections

The General Convention of 1943 will not go down in history as a great convention. Its one claim to fame is that it proved to be a working convention. This was brought about by a combination of circumstances. The first, of course, was the short period of time alloted for legislative action. Under the able leadership of the Chairman of the Committee on Dispatch of Business, Mr. McCook of Connecticut, the time was adroitly and efficiently used. Another circumstance that made this a working convention, was the absence of all "side-shows," and social frills. In other words, the distractions from work were few.

General Convention of 1943 was a liberal convention. This is encouraging. In spite of failure to adopt the majority report of the Commission on Approaches to Unity, and failure to adopt a more liberal canon on Holy Matrimony, the undertone of the convention was distinctly liberal. The report of the Committee on Strategy and Policy was adopted with some minor changes with very little opposition. While many of the pronouncements in this report are strong, they do not go as far as the Malvern Conference action in England. However, one can feel the influence of Malvern and the Delaware Conference running all through this report.

The budget adopted is a challenging budget. The Presiding Bishop characterized it as a "Forward in Service" Budget. During the discussion of the budget an interesting fact was brought to light. The appropriation for aid to British Missions had been reduced. A deputy questioned why this had been done. Dean Haines of Louisville, Kentucky, who presented the Budget for the Program and Budget Committee, replied that the English Church had increased its missionary giving during the War! Therefore they were able to take care of more of their own work. What a challenge that is to us! This budget asks for approximately a ten per cent increase from the dioceses in quota acceptances. We must meet that challenge.

By changing the age limit from 68 to 70 of Canon 18 Bishop Tucker automatically continued in office as the Presiding Bishop for the next triennium. Some of deputies preferred seeing an election held, but it was the will of the majority that prevailed. Bishop Tucker has given admirable leadership to the Church. He is respected by all parties. It is our prayer that our Heavenly Father will give him the physical strength to "carry on"; we know that he has the spritual strength.

Not a great convention—surely. But a working convention.

"Tucker Quits Virginia"

The Cleveland Press came out with the following headline on the morning after Bishop Tucker's automatic continuance in office:

"Tucker Quits Virginia See, for Higher Office."

Consternation spread through the ranks of the Virginia deputation. Is there a higher office than that of Bishop of Virginia? Was the Bishop climbing the ladder of ecclesiasticism and reaching for a mitre? Would any Tucker ever quit Virginia?

The fears of the Virginians quickly subsided, when in usual characteristic fashion, Bishop Tucker in utter simplicity appeared in the procession at the Cathedral on Sunday afternoon. Sans mitre, sans cope!

"Forward a Very Little Way"

The most outstanding address made at General Convention in our humble opinion, was the address by Dean Angus Dun of the Cambridge Seminary, in presenting the majority report of the Commission on Approaches to Unity. We print it in full in this issue. We hope that every subscriber will read it.

The Southern Churchman has been openly working for unity. It still is. Dean Dun in telling words calls our attention to the tragic dis-unity within our own ranks. There is a paradox here. This class of "uncongenial minds," is both a strength and a weakness. We work as a democratic group. The will of the majority prevails.

We were disappointed that the majority report of the Commission was not adopted. Thirteen members of the commission signed the report, and only three members signed the minority report. The fact is, a compomise was made and the report presented to both houses of General Convention consisted of this compromise report. It was adopted almost unanimously in both houses. As Dean Dun says, we have gone forward a very little way.

There is, however, a saving clause in the resolutions adopted. Here it is verbatim: That the Joint Commission on Approaches to Unity be continued with such changes in membership as may seem advisable, and that it be instructed to continue its negotiations with the representatives of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, looking toward organic union of the two bodies, and to continue or initiate similar conversations with other Christian bodies, and that in these negotiations it be directed to call upon the services of other theologians in the Church for advice and counsel."

If we understand the English language, it is unmistakable as to what this resolution means. We still have a Commission on Approaches to Unity. That Commission is empowered to continue its work for the achieving of organic unity with the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. The next paragraph of the resolution says that the Commission must seek the advice of the Lambeth Conference before any commitments are made. Since Lambeth has been a leader in the ecumenical movement, we have little fear that Lamboth would turn down any reasonable commitments.

Organic Unity is on the way. This paper will continue to work for that goal. We pray that under God's guidance, by 1946 we will be ready to take more than a toddling baby step toward unity.

Address Before a Joint Session of the Fifty-Fourth Triennial General Convention at Cleveland, Ohio

By DR. HENRY SLOANE COFFIN,

Moderator of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America

Chairman of the House of Bishops:
President of the House of Deputies:

I HOLD IN MY HAND the gavel of the General Assembly and I think it is the first time a meeting of a General Convention has been called to order with the gavel of the General Assembly. It came to us as a surprise gift last May from the Dean of Westminster, recalling that this was the three hundredth anniversary of the Assembly of Divines summoned by Parliament in 1643. He had it made in the shops of the Abbey. The stone is from the Chapel of King Henry, VII, where the Assembly met on the first of July and where it continued until cold weather drove them into the Jerusalem Chamber which was the only place in the venerable Abbey where there was a fireplace. The handle is made from the wood of that Chamber. The inscription by the Dean reads: "Presented by the Dean of Westminster to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. on the occasion of the tercentenary of the Westminster Assembly, May, 1943." He accompanied it by a gracious letter in which, writing from that ancient Abbey in which lie the bodies of so many of those who are our common ancestors in church, literary and public affairs. He prayed that the two nations in this crisis might be drawn together in comradeship and that our two Churches (he was speaking here for the Church of England) might be brought into closer fellowship.

Shortly after the gavel arrived the Assembly was visited by Bishop Creighton of Michigan, who came by your Presiding Bishop's appointment to convey the greetings of the Protestant Episcopal Church, which he did in so warm and moving a way that the entire Assembly arose and responded. It was the widely expressed desire in the Assembly that the Moderator should himself convey to your General Convention the greetings of the Presbyterian Church.

NOW BRETHREN, we wish to thank you from the bottom of our hearts for initiating these negotiations. The credit for initiating them is altogether yours. Frankly the Declaration of Purpose came to us as a surprise, but as you know we adopted it in the identical words which you had used. Furthermore we thank you for the recent vote which, I understand, continues the negotiations. Again I thank you for the expression of appreciation of the generous and open-minded way in which we have met your requirements and proposals. Frankly, that was elementary Christianity and I am glad that you recognize that we possess that much.

Our Church is committed by very long tradition to Church unity. Presbyterianism has never attempted to be a sect, but has tried to be the Holy Catholic Church in many lands, in Switzerland, Holland, Huguenot France, Scotland or wherever. In 1552 Thomas Cranmer, Archbishop of Canterbury, grieved over the divisions among the reformed churches, proposed to theologians on the continent of Europe a meeting in Britain. Among those he invited was John Calvin and in the course of his reply Calvin wrote, "The members of the Church being severed, the body lies bleeding. So much does this concern me that could I be of any service I would not begrudge to cross even ten seas. I implore you to increase your exertions until something at least shall have been accomplished. Adieu, very distinguished Archbishop, deserving of my hearty reverence. May the Lord continue to guide you by His Spirit and to bless your labors." Let me repeat to you what Calvin said to Cranmer, "I implore you to increase your exertions until something at least shall have been accomplished."

NOW I AM GOING to be very frank. When your expression of purpose came to our Assembly there were misgivings. These misgivings were not as to the character of the Protestant Episcopal Church as part of the Catholic Church of Christ, but as to whether you really meant what you said in the Declaration of Purpose. You do not always get the mind of an ecclesiastical body by what is said in its resolutions or even in its public utterances. You get more in lobbies and other places. The low down, if I may be permitted to use the vernacular, was that the Episcopalians love to pray about church unity; (they have a very nice prayer about it in their book), they love to hold meetings about it: but they are not going through with it and, therefore, we ought not to waste too much time on it.

I want to thank particularly the majority of your Commission who in their report to you inserted a paragraph concerning our Church which as accurately and exactly expresses the mind of that Church as if we had written it ourselves:

"The Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. is part of the Holy Catholic Church. We have felt that this is the view of the bulk of Anglican thought, and also that it is a necessary implication of the wording of the so-called Declaration of Purpose: 'The two Churches, one in the faith of the Lord Jesus Christ, the Incarnate Word of God, recognizing the Holy Scriptures as the supreme rule of faith, accepting the two Sacraments ordained by Christ, and believing that the visible unity of Christ's Church is the will of God, hereby formally declared their purpose to achieve organic union between their respective Churches.' Furthermore, the Presbyterian Church has always maintained that it is part of the Holy Catholic Church and is unwilling to negotiate on any other basis. To say that the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. is part of the Holy Catholic Church is to say that its ministry is a real ministry of the Word and Sacraments, and that its Sacraments are genuine means of grace."

AS I GO ABOUT from Presbytery to Presbytery I have to answer ministers who are asking, "Do they really recognize us as true ministers of the word and Sacraments? Do they recognize our Sacraments as genuine means of grace?" Let me again be very frank. You are dealing with stubborn folk who have in their make up some of the granite of the Alps of Switzerland, of the mountains of Scotland, and I am throwing in for good measure the Alleghenies of Pennsylvania. That statement in your Commission's report will have a great deal to do in gaining the assent of our Assembly to continue the negotiations with your Church.

Let me hasten to say that there are many things in the Protestant Episcopal Church which we greatly admire. Our Church has sedulously conserved from the primitive Catholic Church the conciliar system, but we have lacked executive leadership. We have introduced make-shift offices such as General Presbyters, Presbyterial Executives, Synodical Superintendents, but none of them has had the dignity and the effectiveness of the historic Episcopate which your best Bishops exemplify. We have the correspondence between a Commission of our Church and a Commission of yours which attempted negotiations in the 1880's and it was on the point of the historic Episcopate that these negotiations broke down. This time I was amazed when my colleagues in our Department of Cooperation and Union unanimously voted to recommend the historic Episcopate to the study of our Presbyteries as worthy to be adopted by our General Assembly as part of the plan of union. If these negotiations are to be continued I am assuming that your vote means that it shall be along the lines of the Basic Principles This does not mean that the details are not still fluid. May I again be very frank. You have made several suggestions: you began with the Concordat. We were not too impressed, but we were willing to regard it as a trifling step forward toward the goal. Then the Editor of the "Living Church" suggested to us a plan of joint ordination. We were not overly enthusiastic, as Presbyterian minds are not much interested in these things, but we were prepared to recommend it to our Church for study. Then the Basic Principles were suggested. I note from one of the pamphlets distributed to this General Convention that the name is criticized. We did not baptize it. This is an Episcopal baptism, but we are not Anabaptists, so we did not take time to re-baptize it, but considered them for what they were. We have toiled some years on these Basic Principles and I am confident that if we are to continue negotiations it will be along these lines. I understand that in voting such continuance you imply that it is to be along these lines.

WHY ARE WE INTERESTED in Church unity? First because we believe it to be the will of God and if it is the will of God we dare not say it is premature. The Christian Church has many sins against its account, but haste in doing the will of God is not one of them. We cannot declare a moratorium on the will of God! We are not interested merely in federation although I especially honor the Federal Council of Churches of which your Presiding Bishop is now president, but we are concerned with organic union, a united church in which the ministers shall everywhere be recognized and in which there shall be complete communion so effectual and absolute that, "We being many are one bread, and one body: for we are all partakers of that one bread." But the will of God is made known to us in the exigencies of contemporary history and I entirely agree with your Commission that "This time of world conflict, of social upheaval, and of earnest hope of a better world to come, is for us the day of the Lord, in which Almighty God is calling this Church to bold and constructive action with regard to Christian unity."

When one thinks of a world in pieces, of economic conflict in our industries, of racial tensions both in our dealings with orientals and with regard to the negroes, we are confronted with a desperate crisis. In racial relations we are on the surface of a volcano below which indignation at economic injustices and white snobbery are about to burst forth.

WE BELIEVE WE HAVE in the gospel of Christ the secret of unity, but how can we presume to preach Christ the Unifier, to a world which can turn and say to us jeeringly, "Why do you not let Him unite His own household of faith?" As St. Paul puts it, "In Him all things hold together." How can we have the face, if I may use the vernacular, to commend Christ to outsiders if we do not let Him draw together those of us who are His own?

It was most unfortunate that in the Tuesday morning "New York Times" the report of your action last Monday appeared in a column headed, "Church Union Deferred"; it should have read "Church Union Continued." It would have been impossible for you to have consummated union here when you had no constitution for a United Church before you to vote upon, but your action certainly should be called "Church Union Continued."

May I conclude by quoting one of the saintliest of Anglican Archbishops, Robert Leighton, who in the latter years of the seventeeth century, plead for just what the Basic Principles contain, the union of Episcopacy and Presbytery? It was a sad time of strife and of low spirituality. Unhappily his plan was rejected in England where it would have included nonconforming Presbyters in the church and equally rejected in Scotland where it would have included the Episcopal Clergy. He saw that the issue was the vitality of the Christian religion itself and said, "The body is torn, the soul of it expires, and we are fighting over the hem of the garment."

FORWARD: A VERY LITTLE WAY

very good mate for the Presbyterians or anyone else.

I cannot stand apart from that situation. We are all in it. We have all helped to make and sustain it.

SO WITH MUCH PERPLEXITY of spirit, I move these resolutions. They mean that we seek to feel our way—slowly, cautiously, deliberately forward. But let me warn you that if we set ourselves to move forward at all in this course we shall move into difficult paths that will strain and perplex us and call some day for the kind of hard decisions we are unready to take today. If we go forward at all, it is because we know God commands us to go forward.

If God asks us, "Why do you go so slowly?", if our children's children ask us, "Why did you go so slowly ", we can only answer: "Because we do not see the way. Because we are afraid. Because we don't quite trust each other. And because we have to hold together." Brothers, let us go forward, if only a very little way, together, following afar off Him who went in paths that men had not travelled before and who broke very precious things and finally His own life in order to unite us in Him.

TUCK THE CHILDREN IN

O Mother, tuck the children in,
And draw the curtains round their heads;
And, Mother, when the storms begin,
Let storms forbear those cradle beds.

And if the sleepers wake too soon,
Say, "Children, 'tis too early yet",
And hush them with a sleepy tune,
And closer draw the coverlet.

O Mother Earth, be good to all
The little sleepers in thy care;
And, when 'tis time to wake them, call
A beam of sun, a breath of air!

DISHES FOR ALL

Attractive dishes for every one became possible because a boy who lived more than two hundred years ago worked with clay and liked to do it. All his life, from 1730 to 1795, sixty-five years, Josiah Wedgwood experimented with pottery to make it beautiful.

He was born in Burslem, a little village in the county of Staffordshire, England. His family were potters. His father and brother worked in the potteries of that district. At that time only brown pottery and the commonest kind of white dishes were made. The fine chinaware that only the rich could buy came from France, Germany and Holland.

Josiah began work when he was only nine years old. At the age of eleven he worked as a thrower in his brother's pottery. To be a thrower meant taking the soft clay on the potter's wheel and molding it into shape by hand as the wheel spun around. Josiah had to give up running the potter's wheel, however, because of disease in his right leg. This trouble at last made it necessary to have the leg amputated below the knee. After that happened he interested himself in making imitations of colored stones, such as jaspers and agates, with different kinds of clay that he combined with metallic oxides to get the effects he desired.

Josiah Wedgwood's ornamental pottery took the fancy of the public so well that he was at last able to start a pottery of his own in the village of Burslem, where he was born. His success encouraged him to try making a finer kind of earthenware than any one had yet made in England. He succeeded so well that he started a second pottery to make white stoneware, and finally a third pottery, where he made a fine cream-colored ware.

Josiah presented some of the finest dishes, including a full dinner service, to Queen Charlotte, who was England's queen at that time. The queen was so well pleased with his gift that she appointed Josiah Wedgwood to be her potter. Of course, this honor insured his popularity with the first people of the nation. The new pottery that had pleased the queen so well was called "Queen's Ware".

Josiah Wedgwood's pottery now became famous not only in his own country, but also in foreign markets. It was acknowledged that the whole country was indebted to him for a vast improvement and extension of the earthenware business. He built a village for his workmen on the banks of the Trent and Mersey Canal near one of his factories and near his own home.

The name "Wedgwood" on beautiful vases, urns, busts, medallions and many other useful and ornamental pieces of pottery finally came to be a stamp that made them sought after by people not only in England, but also in all parts of the world, and brought large sums of money.

Other potters made beautiful dishes during Josiah Wedgwood's lifetime, but he was the first to make attractive dishes that people everywhere could buy, and that was the honor that he most craved. Only love for his work and continual interest in it made his achievement possible.—Harriet Pennell, in Girlhood Days.

MAGPIE ALARM—A TRUE STORY

As a child, my greatest delight was to visit an elderly cousin of my mother's. She had no children, but she and her husband loved pets and were always rescuing some sort of little animal. Their apartment, although in the heart of a city, was almost as good as a pet shop.

One summer when I was ten I spent two weeks with them. There was a large cage containing a talkative black and white magpie, and a still larger cage in which lived six small and mischievous monkeys. In the daytime the cage of the magpie sat near the sunny dining room window and the bird made the most of his opportunity to insult the passers-by. At the same time he could scold the monkeys who at the slightest opportunity reached mischievous hands and pulled the sweeping feathers from his proud tail. At night his cage was placed on top of the monkeys' cage with a cloth thrown over it to quiet his incessant voice.

One night, the household was roused by a series of dreadful shrieks and an excited babble of "Help! Help! Murder! Murder! Help! Help!"

It was the magpie screaming, but the monkeys were cowering and whispering in the farthest corner of their cage, not at all to blame. A sneak-thief had pried off the lock and had entered the dining-room with an eye to the silver, no doubt.

He did not get it. In fact, he was so badly frightened and confused with the racket he had brought down upon his own head, that, as he left the apartment, he ran in the wrong direction. The cries of murder continuing, waked the whole apartment house. Doors flew open and householders came running. The thief was captured before he could locate either the fire escape or the stairs.

Where the magpie had picked up the word, murder, no one ever knew, for he never had used it before and never, while with my cousins, did he use it again.—Our Dumb Animals.

A DUTCH LULLABY

Far over the waters so blue and deep,
The little Dutch babies are going to sleep.
Bright yellow tulips are nodding their heads,
And fluffy young ducks are safe in their beds;
While slowly the windmills go whirling around—
Go whirling around—go whirling around.

Far over the waters the sails are furled,
And the stars peep out on a sleepy world.
The moo-cows moo softly beneath the trees,
And the white sheep drowse in the evening breeze;
While slowly the windmills go whirling around—
Go whirling around—go whirling around.

Far over the waters comes down the night,
Fading and fading the silvery light,
While storks on their nests stand white and tall,
And over the treetops the shadows fall;
While softly the windmills go whirling around—
Go whirling around—go whirling around.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF THE NEWS

What Happened at the General Convention

We print below a summary of the work of the 54th General Convention. It was not a thrilling convention. War time restrictions ruled out all social functions. This was a business convention. The House of Deputies held three night sessions. The report of the Commission on Approaches to Unity, anticipated as a chief source of debate, was passed after an agreed amendment, with little opposition. The most heated debate centered around the report of the Commission on Holy Matrimony. The deputies spent a day and a half debating three proposed new canons. The net result the present Canon 42 remains intact.

Presiding Bishop Tucker remains in office as Presiding Bishop until after the 1946 Convention.

B. M. Boyd.

The following is a summary report of the action of General Convention.

LEGISLATIVE

Convention voted continuance of the Historical Magazine and authorized the Commission on the Hymnal to continue and prepare a handbook explaining origins and backgrounds of hymns, also approved a resolution calling on Congress to repeal discriminatory immigration laws, particularly in regard to the Chinese. The Bishops also approved the recent Catholic, Protestant and Jewish declaration on World Peace.

Proceedings were started to take the vote from retired Bishops, raising the question whether bishops without the responsibility of a jurisdiction should be permitted to vote, the membership in such a group comprising a bloc large enough to control legislation.

Duluth and Minnesota are to be merged into one diocese.

The Bishop approved a resolution urging support of the American Bible Society and observance of the second Sunday in Advent as Bible Sunday with an offering at that time for the Bible Society.

Both Houses approved a plan for rotation of membership in the National Council, and authorized more flexibility as to number of officers of the Council, allowing the Presiding Bishop to have one or more vice-presidents.

After a prolonged debate, the Convention changed the canon fixing the retiring age of the Presiding Bishop, making the age 70, his retirement to take place at the General Convention next following his attainment of that age.

The Deputies wrestled for two whole days with the question of a liberalized canon on Holy Matrimony, and finally voted the proposals down. The Bishops did not attempt to force legislation at this Convention, but expressed their belief that a more liberal canon is needed, and that study and consideration of the matter should continue.

Bishops are required to resign at the age of 72, says an amendment to the Constitution now passed its final reading, and the Lectionary which has been in experimental stage since last General Convention is finally approved.

Suffragan Bishops now have a vote in the House of Bishops, as well as seats, and Missionary Districts may have Bishops Coadjutor, instead of the former restriction to Suffragran Bishops only.

The Presiding Bishop must now resign his diocesan responsibilities according to action of the Convention and Presiding Bishop Tucker formally resigned as Bishop of Virginia, his resignation being accepted by the House of Bishops.

No final action was taken on the matter of a See for the Presiding Bishop, but a committee will continue study of the matter.

Considering problems of the Chinese Church, it was voted to give that Church the right to elect and consecrate its own bishops.

The Convention considered and discussed a long series of resolutions on strategy and policy, aimed principally at wise expansion of missionary work at home and overseas, cooperation with other Churches in lay evangelism, etc.

Intinction, as well as communion in one kind, were approved, by the Deputies, voted down by the Bishops, even though it carried the provision that the advice of the next Lambeth Conference be sought, regarding these methods of administering the Holy Communion.

The Convention approved the inclusion of lay employees of religious bodies in the Federal Social Security Act.

Next convention in 1946 will be in San Francisco, a decision reached by concurrent vote of both Houses.

The Convention adjourned Monday afternoon, October 11, at 3:50 P. M.

Dr. Lewis B. Franklin of New York, was re-elected Treasurer of the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society, and the Rev. Dr. Franklin J. Clark of New York, was re-elected Secretary of the House of Deputies. The Rev. John H. Fitzgerald of Brooklyn, was re-elected Secretary of the House of Bishops.

THE PROGRAM AND BUDGET

The Program and Budget committee presented a budget higher than that proposed by the National Council. The Commission's budget as proposed and adopted is $2,615,382 for 1944, as against $2,488,378 proposed by the National Council. Progressive increases are proposed for 1945 and 1946. Of the increase for 1944, $50,000 is designated for "opportunities for Growth" in the overseas field, with special mention of China, Mexico, Alaska, Liberia, India and Central and South America. The budget for continued aid to British Missions, and the report stresses opportunities at home in work with Negroes, and defense workers. Restoration of salary cuts of continental missionary bishops is provided for, as well as aid in meeting increased living costs for officers and staff of the National Council. It is clearly indicated, however, that increases are subject to the National Council's judgment as to expediency.

The Apportionment Plan and the Partnership Principle are reaffirmed and a plan suggested for determination of apportionment based on a mathematical calculation modified by such factors as communicant strength, past six-year record of giving to the General Church Program and local conditions.

UNITED THANK OFFERING

The Houses of the Convention heard with gratitude and enthusiasm the announcement of the United Thank Offering of the women of the Church, $1,119,878.91, largest in the long history of the Offering.

REPORT OF LAY ACTIVITIES AND ARMY AND NAVY COMMISSION

Mr. Harvey S. Firestone, Jr., reported to both Houses of the Convention on the encouraging progress made by the Presiding Bishop's Committee on Layman's Work, and the Convention on joint session heard the Rt. Rev. Henry K. Sherrill, the Rev. Henry Washburn, and Chaplains Harry Lee Virden, Frank Lash, C. Leslie Glenn and Henry B. Hodgins, tell of the work of the Army and Navy Commission, and its present and future plans for service to the armed forces as the war goes on.

Bishop Sherrill told of his recent trip to the Aleutians, showing that Chaplains are ministering with devotion and effectiveness in that area, and that here he witnessed a practical kind of Church unity, Chaplains of all faiths cooperating together in their efforts to minister to the needs of the man under arms.

Resolutions were adopted expressing to men on all battle fronts, "our great admiration of their heroism and fortitude" and the assurance that "our hearts and our prayers are with them." Greetings to the Church in China on the Chinese National Day, October 10, were ordered sent, with assurance of continued interest, support and prayers.

Conscientious objectors were assured by the House of Bishops of the continued fellowship of the Church with them, and its concern for and care of them. It was revealed that there are 66 Episcopal Church members among the 6,646 men in C. O. camps.

REPORT OF COMMISSION ON APPROACHES TO UNITY

The Convention took no final steps in Approaches to Unity with the Presbyterian Church, but urged continued study, dissemination of information to the people of the Church, and consultation on the subject with the next Lambeth Conference. Bishop Sherrill of Massachusetts seemed to express the feeling of the Convention when he said that the Episcopal Church does want to achieve unity with the Presbyterian Church, and that "we feel that there are some prospects of such unity." The Rev. Dr. Henry Sloane Coffin, Moderator of the Presbyterian General Assembly addressed the Convention analyzing the progress toward unity made thus far, and stated, "we are not interested merely in federation, although I especially honor the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, but we are concerned with organic union, a united Church in which the ministers shall everywhere be recognized and in which there shall be complete communion."

1. Resolved, the Houses concurring, that General Convention receives the report of the Joint Commission on Approaches to Unity and the minority report on the section dealing with the negotiations with the representatives of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, and refers them with other findings to the Church for study.

2. Resolved, the Houses concurring, that the Joint Commission on Approaches to Unity be continued with such changes in membership as may seem advisable, and that it be instructed to continue its negotiations with the representatives of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America looking toward the organic union of the two bodies, and to continue or initiate similar conversations with other Christian bodies, and that in these negotiations it be directed to call upon the services of other theologians in the Church for advice and counsel.

3. Resolved, the Houses concurring, that in view of our membership in the Anglican Communion, the Joint Commission on Approaches to Unity is hereby directed to ask, on behalf of General Convention, the counsel of the Lambeth Conference before any commitments are made.

4. Resolved, the Houses concurring, that General Convention hereby expresses its appreciation to the representatives of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America for the generous and open-minded way in which they have met the inquiries and proposals of the Joint Commission on Approaches to Unity.

5. Resolved, the Houses concurring, that the Treasurer of General Convention is directed to provide the sum of $5,000.00 (five thousand dollars) for the work of the Joint Commission on Approaches to Unity during the forthcoming Triennium.

SOCIAL RECONSTRUCTION AND POST WAR ACTIVITIES

Social reconstruction came to the fore in the deliberations of the Convention through extended discussion of the report of the Commission on that topic, and the passage of principles outlining the religious convictions concerning God's will in the world, and that man finds his true purpose in seeking and serving the Will of God and defining the quest for a more unified world, possessing a world framework within which the Nations may find security and freedom, and within which in peace the Nations set themselves to cooperate for production and distribution. The report which was adopted advocated that the "coming Peace must provide an over-all arrangement for international collaboration in dealing with common world problems; with supervision and control of military establishments and the creation of an international police power, with collaboration in broad world problems of finance and economics, and a renunciation of any policy of isolationism by the United States.

The Convention advocated the raising of a General Reconstruction Fund under the direction of the National Council, for rehabilitation of the Church's work and buildings in the Philippine Islands, China, and elsewhere, after the war—details being left to the Presiding Bishop and the National Council.

The World Council of Churches of which the Episcopal Church is a member, came before the Convention through a resolution that the Presiding Bishop shall appoint representatives to its Assembly, and the Council was asked to take necessary steps to assure that Christian principles are given consideration at the Peace table.

FORWARD IN SERVICE

Forward in Service is now merged with the National Council as advocated by the Presiding Bishop, who said that he feels that "the work can be carried on more effectively than through a continuance of an independent Forward in Service body." Forward Movement literature, however, is to be carried on by a semi-independent group with Canon Gilbert R. Symonds and the Ven. Harold J. Weaver in charge, responsible to the Presiding Bishop.

ON WORLD PEACE

First Joint Statement Issued by American Religious Leaders, Catholic, Jewish and Protestant

1. The moral law must govern world order. The organization of a just peace depends upon practical recognition of the fact that not only individuals but nations, states, and international society are subject to the sovereignty of God and to the moral law which comes from God.
2. The rights of the individual must be assured. The dignity of the human person as the image of God must be set forth in all its essential implications in an international declaration of rights, and be vindicated by the positive action of national governments and international organization. States as well as individuals must repudiate racial, religious, or other discrimination in violation of those rights.
3. The rights of oppressed, weak or colonial peoples must be protected. The rights of all peoples, large and small, subject to the good of the organized world community, must be safeguarded within the framework of collective security. The progress of undeveloped, colonial, or oppressed peoples toward political responsibility must be the object of international concern.
4. The rights of minorities must be secured. National government and international organization must respect and guarantee the rights of ethnic, religious, and cultural minorities to economic livelihood, to equal opportunity for educational and cultural development, and to political equality.
5. International institutions to maintain peace with justice must be organzed. An endurng peace requires the organization of international institutions which will (a) develop a body of international law; (b) guarantee the faithful fulfilment of international obligations, and revise them when necessary; (c) assure collective security by drastic limitation and continuing control of armaments, compulsory arbitration and adjudication of controversies, and the use when necessary of adequate sanctions to enforce the law.
6. International economic cooperation must be developed. International economic collaboration to assist all states to provide an adequate standard of living for their citizens must replace the present economic monopoly and exploitation of natural resources by privileged groups and states.
7. A just social order within each state must be achieved. Since the harmony and well-being of the world community are intimately bound up with the internal equilibrium and social order of the individual states, steps must be taken to provide for the security of the family, the collaboration of all groups and classes in the interest of the common good, a standard of living adequate for self-development and family life, decent conditions of work, and participation by labor in decisions affecting its welfare.

MEMORIAL TO DR. PHILLIPS

The Convention passed resolutions memorializing its late President, the Very Rev. Z. B. T. Phillips, and elected as his successor, the Rev. Phillips Endicott Osgood of Emmanuel Church, Boston.

THE BISHOP'S PASTORAL LETTER

The Pastoral Letter is regarded as a summary of the acts of Convention which point to advance in all phases of the Church's work, stressing needs of a world at war and after war. It pays tribute to Chaplains in the armed forces and greets "all those who are enlisted in the service of our country." The Pastoral points to corporate sin, "concentration of wealth in the hands of comparatively few people; a separatist policy of isolationism, class distinctions and racial discriminations." It notes with gratitude the Forward Movement of the Church's Youth, and expresses sympathy for "those to whom war has brought grief or anxious waiting." It points to dangers that will follow victory in the war, and urges that the Church be ready to seize its opportunity to lead the world to Redemption through Christ.

SUMMARIZING

Summarizing the spirit of the General Convention at its close, the Bishops of the Episcopal Church issued a Pastoral Letter which, according to the law of the Church, must be read to every Episcopal congregation throughout the country on the Sunday next after its receipt by the clergy. The Pastoral was read by Bishop Edwin A. Penick, Bishop of North Carolina, and it recognizes an outpouring of need in a "war-sick world, and then to a post-war world" and the necessity for Christian witness and Christian influences.

Confessing corporate sin, the Pastoral refers to "concentration of wealth in the hands of comparatively few people; a separatist's policy of isolationism that beguiled us into imagining that we were not our brother's keeper; class distinctions that are anything but brotherly and racial discriminations that are anything but just."

The Pastoral sends "affectionate greetings to all those who are enlisted in the service of our country, and pays tribute to the Chaplains in the Army and Navy. It commends also "with gratitude, the stirring of God's Spirit among the youth of the Church and points out that "Victory in this war will bring about a world-wide condition of opportunity and need. This means that everywhere there will be a strong feeling of dissatisfaction with what is or has been, and a reaching out after all available ways and means of realizing aspirations for something better. "Dangers of reconstruction are pointed out and "unparalleled opportunities for making actual in the life of mankind that redemption which was made possible by the sacrifice of Christ" are stressed.

In its closing session, the Pastoral spoke "with deepest sympathy to those to whom this war has brought grief or anxious waiting", and urged steps requisite to the "fulfillment of Christian Hope".

Urged

October 8.—Repeal of the Chinese exclusion laws, the addition of two women members to General Convention's commission on marriage, and further consideration by General Convention of the participation of women in that Convention were urged by delegates to the Woman's Auxiliary Triennial Convention today. The California delegation brought in the action regarding the Chinese exclusion laws, urging that Chinese be put on the quota system and that delegates write or wire their congressional representatives in regard to action now pending. The commission on marriage, the delegates feel, might well have women members inasmuch as women share in the marriage responsibility "at least half", as one delegate said.

Many Chinese Missionaries Among Delegates

China has been well represented at the triennial General Convention. Bishop Y. Y. Tsu, assistant bishop of Hongkong, and the Rev. Newton Chiang, of the Diocese of Anking, now on leave from his position at the Nanking Theological Seminary, Chengtu, were among the most interesting speakers. Others present were: The Rt. Rev. Logan H. Roots, now retired, bishop of Hankow, 1904-37; Mr. and Mrs. Everard P. Miller, now in the United States after thirty years' teaching at Boone Middle School and Hua Chung College, Wuchang; and the Rev.

CLERGYMAN WANTS HOMESTEAD

I have served in the ministry 44 years: 25 of which was in the domestic mission field. I have frequently paid the rent myself on the house in which I lived. When the church was unable to pay the assessments on the Pension Fund it was paid out of my salary. I am very near retirement age and am informed I will receive about thirteen dollars per week with which to keep a shelter over wife and me, and to live on. If I only had a little "homestead" or "old farm" where we could live, perhaps we could get along. Investigation as to the truth of these statements invited. Have you a place to sell me? Address: "S", Southern Churchman.

DEATHS

ELLA BIRCKHEAD BANNING PENDER

Entered into Eternal Life at the summer home of Mr. and Mrs. David Pender at Virginia Beach, on September 17, 1943, in the 90th year of her age, ELLA BIRCKHEAD BANNING PENDER, widow of George L. Pender and daughter of Alexander and Maria Birckhead Banning. Mrs. George Pender was born on the Eastern Shore of Maryland, but had lived the last twenty-six years of her life with her brother and sister, Mr. and Mrs. David Pender of Norfolk, Virginia. Services were conducted in the Norfolk home by Rev. Mr. Jones, Rector of St. Andrews' Church in Norfolk, with burial in the churchyard of Calvary Church, Tarboro, North Carolina.

"Thou hast loved righteousness, and hated iniquity; Therefore God, thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness."

MR. E. LORRAINE RUFFIN

Resolutions

In the death of MR. E. LORRAINE RUFFIN, on July 12, 1943, St. Thomas Church lost one of its most faithful members.

In the year 1908 he and a few other churchmen founded St. Thomas Church. He served as an original Trustee, and was Chairman of the Building Committee. From that time on he served as Vestryman. And for more than twenty years he served as Treasurer of Saint Thomas Church, which office he held at the time of his death. He was also Senior Warden, and previously had served as Junior Warden.

He also held responsible positions in the Diocese of Virginia and for a number of years had served as a member of the Standing Committee on Church Property.

Deeply sensible of the great loss which has come to us, we, the vestry of St. Thomas Church, resolve:

That we express to his family our sympathy in their loss and our grateful appreciation of his long years of faithful service to the cause of Christ in this community.

That copies of this resolution be placed upon the minutes of this parish, be sent to his family, and be published in the Virginia Churchman and the Southern Churchman.

GERVAS S. TAYLOR,
Chairman of Committee,
ELMER, C. PEDRICK.
Rector.

THOMAS BARKWELL LANE

THOMAS BARKWELL LANE, son of Thomas B. Lane, M. D., and Ellen Randolph (Tabb) Lane, his wife, died at the Leigh Memorial Hospital, Norfolk, on Saturday, October 9th, in the 65th year of his age. Mr. Lane, a native of Mathews County, Va., was born at his ancestral home "Woodstock," but had resided in Norfolk for the last forty-seven years. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Gertrude Leonard (Bush) Lane, a brother, Rev. Henry Gardiner Lane, of Berryville, Va., and a sister, Miss Mary Randolph Lane, now residing in Richmond, Va.

A Vestryman of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, Norfolk, his funeral took place from that church the following Monday. Interment in Elmwood Cemetery.

"Behold the upright man, for the end of that man is Peace."

and Mrs. Claude Lee Pickens, of Hankow, particularly interested in work among Moslems.

The Triennial Meeting, held simultaneously, had the rather melancholy good fortune of including among the delegates a number of China missionaries now out of China only by necessity and not from choice. Among them were Mrs. Wm P. Roberts and Mrs. Lloyd R. Craighill, whose husbands, bishops of Shanghai and Anking, respectively, are now interned in Shanghai; Mrs. Hollis S. Smith, of Zangzok; Mrs. P. B. Sullivan, of St. John's University, Shanghai; Mrs. Harry B. Taylor, of Anking; four wives whose husbands are similarly interned in Shanghai; Mrs. Robert A. Kemp, of Hankow, whose husband, after returning to the United States on the Gripsholm in 1942, stayed only until arrangements could be made for him to go to free China He is now en route to the land where he spent more than thirty years, teaching at Boone Middle School, Wuchang, and since 1938, has done heroic work in helping to care for refugees.

Also present were Miss Althea Bremer, head of St. Faith's School, Yangchow; Miss Gertrude Selzer, formerly of Soochow, now on a scholarship to study Mandarin, preparing for an early return to free China, and Deaconess Elsie Riebe, who at her station in Ichang, helped to care for 3,000 refugees on the mission compound, had at least one bomb explode within fifteen feet of her, and picked up shrapnel too hot to hold.

Japan Represented

Recognition of the Japanese Church, which before the war started had become autonomous, with its own Japanese bishops, was provided in the Triennial Meeting by the presence of three "fraternal" delegates, Mrs. Charles S. Reifsnider, whose husband, formerly bishop of North Kwanto, is now in charge of the Episcopal Church's work among Japanese-Americans in the United States; Mrs. Shirley S. Nichols, whose husband, now bishop in charge of Salina (western Kansas), was bishop of Kyoto; and Miss Bernice Jansen, now in western Michigan, who formerly taught in the Diocese of Tohoku.

Other Overseas Delegates

The Philippines were represented at the Triennial by Mrs. G. F. Mosher, whose late husband was bishop of the Philippines for twenty years; the Diocese of Honolulu had as its delegate Mrs. S. Harrington Littell, whose husband recently retired as bishop of that jurisdiction. Another interesting overseas delegate was Miss Elonora de Jongh, of Camaguey, Cuba, national president of the Cuban Woman's Auxiliary.

Admission of Women as Deputies Discussed

Admission of women as deputies to General Convention was discussed this morning by the Triennial Meeting, on presentation of a resolution from the Rochester diocese delegation asking General Convention "to give consideration to legislation which would allow women to be included as deputies to General Convention". After a brief but animated discussion the resolution was recommitted to the committee on reference, Miss Mary Louise Pardee, of New Haven, chairman, which handles all miscellaneous resolutions.

Among speakers for the resolution, Mrs. Norman Livermore, of Ross, California, stated that many younger California clergy favored women as deputies as they feel it would enlist the interest of more young women who now are engaged in every form of secular social and educational work. The loudest applause followed Mrs. Reginald Fisher, of Santa Fe, New Mexico, herself a young woman, who said, "Too few laymen are working for the church now. I fear we should lose more of them if they could say, 'Let the women do it'." Mrs. J. Ralph Jacoby, of New York, with a possible third House for General Convention in mind, offered a substitute resolution which was recommitted with the original.

In planning the program of the Triennial Meeting the national executive board felt that the delegates' study of the Church's mission at home and abroad should be based on a consideration of the spiritual resources available, so the Rev. Stephen Bayne, chaplain of Columbia University, was asked to make four addresses on The Gifts of the Spirit.

THOUGHTS FOR THE THOUGHTFUL

"Duties Never Conflict."

When the tidal waves beat on the coastal cliffs the shale and the slime dissolve in defeat, but the granite rock stands undaunted. —Selected.

"The vision of the mind is reason;
The vision of the conscience is duty;
The vision of the heart is love;
The vision of the soul is faith."

The walls of circumstance can shut us out of many things, but it is well to remember that they only shut us in with God. —C. F. Thomas.

"Dark skies must clear, and when the clouds are past,
One golden day redeems a weary year;
Patient I listen, sure that sweet at last,
Will sound His voice of cheer."

Belief about Christ is not enough. There was a time when Paul believed many things about Christ. Those were the days when he was the persecutor of the Lord. The moment Paul believed in Christ he became a new creature. Then he could say, "I can do all things in Christ."
—Rev. H. T. Sherer.

Surely if God could so give His Son to make the one true and complete sacrifice, that mankind might look upon Him and find salvation, nothing that could happen on the face of the earth can make us doubt that God is indeed love and that it is His will for men that they shall find their way to peace and joy in him. —Dr. Don Fenn.

There are abiding values in God's marval and spiritual universe. There is truth; and beauty, and love. There is a law-abiding universe; goodness is the supreme value; right, and not might, will ultimately prevail. We can be as sure of these things as we are of the stars.

God, make me brave for life!
Let me straighten after pain
As a tree straightens after the rain,
Shining and lovely again.
—Grace Crowell.

To "pray without ceasing" is to have aptitude of prayer. The bird is ready to fly in an instant; so the believer has such a gracious aptitude for this service that he is prepared in an instant to fly for refuge to God.
—Selected.

think that a word was said about the Presbyterian viewpoint.

In the first place the initiative in the matter of the proposed Union between these Churches was not taken by the Presbyterian Church but by the Episcopal Church. The impression conveyed by some of the recent statements would seem to indicate that we Presbyterians were endeavoring to force Union upon a reluctant Episcopal Church. The truth is that they made the first approach and did it in a gracious and kindly Christian spirit. The following communication was received by Executive Officers of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. in 1937:

Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America, Church Missions House, 281 Fourth Ave., New York, N. Y.

December 4th, 1937

The Rev. Dr. L. S. Mudge
Secretary, General Council of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America
The Rev. Dr. J. Ross Stevenson, Chairman of the Presbyterian Assembly's Department of Church Cooperation and Union.

Reverend and Dear Brothers:

The General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church meeting at Cincinnati in October, 1937, made request of the Presiding Bishop that he convey personally to the authorities of the Presbyterian Church the following Resolution and Message.

I take pleasure therefore in presenting to you this information with the hope that it may have favorable action by the General Assembly of your Church. The Resolution reads as follows:

"The General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America, acting with full realization of the significance of its proposal, hereby invites the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America to join with it in accepting the following declaration:

"The two Churches, one in the faith of the Lord Jesus Christ, the Incarnate Word of God, recognizing the Holy Scriptures as the supreme rule of faith, accepting the two Sacraments ordained by Christ, and believing that the visible unity of Christ's Church is the will of God, hereby formally declare their purpose to achieve organic union between their respective churches."

Upon the basis of these agreements it is hoped that the two Churches will take immediate steps toward the framing of plans whereby this end may be achieved.

With prayers for God's blessing upon the efforts made in His Name toward the union of His Church on earth, I am,

Faithfully yours,
(Signed) JAMES DeWOLFE PERRY
Presiding Bishop

WHEN THE EPISCOPALIANS tell us Presbyterians that they have discovered the Will of God, naturally we listen. Conferences between our Department of Church Cooperation and Union and the Episcopal Commission on Approaches to Unity were begun in 1937 and have continued up to the present time. The result has been the formulation of certain Basic Principles which are now available for the purpose of study to the membership of both Churches. They are purely tentative. They have not been formally approved by either Church. I take it that their essential purpose is to serve as a broad outline of the kind of thing that might be hoped for in such a United Church.

These Basic Principles are now under heavy fire from a section of the Protestant Episcopal Church, mainly from those with Anglo-Catholic leanings. They claim that the Form of Order in the Protestant Episcopal Church was established by our Lord and His Apostles and is the true form of Christian Ministry. The obvious implication is that the Presbyterian Ministry, not having historically conformed to the threefold order of bishops, priests and deacons, is not valid. Or at least is not Apostolic.

No informed Presbyterian believes this for a moment, and one discovers that many of the best minds of the Episcopal Church emphatically disagree also with this conclusion. One of these, the late Canon B. H. Streeter of Oxford University, devoted a long period of research to the documents that are concerned with the first century of Christian History. He set forth the result of this study in his book "The Primitive Church". Here is how he summarized his conclusions:

> "But whatever else is disputable, there is, I submit, one result from which there is no escape. In the Primitive Church there was no single system of Church Order laid down by the Apostles. During the first hundred years of Christianity, the Church was an organism alive and growing—changing its organization to meet changing needs. . . . But perhaps the greatest obstacle is the belief—entertained more or less explicitly by most bodies of Christians—that there is some one form of Church Order which alone is primitive, and which, therefore, alone possesses the sanction of Apostolic precedent. Our review of the historical evidence has shown this belief to be an illusion."

Dr. Streeter says that among the different systems of government within the Christian Church were the Independent, the Episcopal, and the Presbyterian.

The Presbyterian Church has always believed that its Ministry is equally valid with any Order in the Christian Church today and it finds in the New Testament and in history ample verification of Apostolic sanction.

In voicing my views on this subject today I am not speaking as the Moderator of the Presbytery of New York but rather as the Pastor of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church.

I would remind you that we are not now facing the question of outright union. Before that moment comes, difficult and delicate negotiations must proceed. The time is not ripe for immediate union. Neither Church is yet ready for it but genuine progress has been made. I am convinced that if the Episcopal Church, after having approached the Presbyterian Church on the subject of unity, were now to slam the door in our faces, the result would be a decisive reverse to the cause of Christian Reunion throughout the world.

MAY I SUGGEST that when all attention is focused on Clerical Orders and Church polity rather than on Jesus Christ, our Lord, Who is

Fasting Communion

Fasting before receiving Communion may be helpful. It may be taught in certain parishes. We know that it is. However, unless we are wrong, there is nothing in the rubrics of the Prayer Book, or the Canons of the Church, that makes it obligatory, or states that the clergy must use it in their instructions to the laity. In fact, we believe that it is not in any sense a widely observed practice of this Church.

In the news columns of our esteemed contemporary, the Living Church, the issue of October 10th, page 16, a special feature writer describes the U. T. O. Presentation Service. The account is excellent. But good reporting does not editorialize. This report does. In her last paragraph, in which she describes the preparation service, she launches out on a virulent attack on the members of the Auxiliary who made no preparation of the body. To quote—"The preparation of the body was not only ignored and shirked, but the delegates were urged to break their fast on various grounds of expediency before the Corporate Communion. Yet one is bound to think that such a suggestion which was published in the Triennial Daily and which is against the conscience of so many Churchwomen should not have been given out under the editorship of members of the National Board." We do not know where the writer got her figures, but to say this was a shock to the consciences of so many Churchwomen, is, we believe, a figment of the writer's own imagination. We challenge that such editorializing is an affront to the thousands of saintly, spiritually minded women of this Church, who never think in terms of fasting communion, and never will be instructed in that way. Then, to add a double affront, this reporter writes, "If it doesn't make any difference, then no preparation of the body makes any difference, whether in its own kind and degree, it's the wedding garment at the King's feast or chastity before Christian marriage". That is very strong language.

We do not presume to speak for the whole Church, as apparently the writer quoted does. We can speak for the Churchwomen of the Diocese of Virginia and most of the other dioceses of this Church, in which a devout, natural and humble approach is held to this great sacrament of the Church.

We believe that the editors of the Living Church owe an apology to the great bulk of the women of this Church for permitting their excoriation by this report, on failure to observe a custom that is only practiced by a small minority of the Church's million and a half communicants.

All Saints' Day

All Saints' Day comes with a poignant appeal this year. As the author of an article in this issue has termed it, "Easter in Autumn". With millions of homes shadowed by the dread of sudden death for loved ones, this tremendous feast of Christian hope wings its words of comfort to these shadowed thresholds.

There is a life beyond. There is a fellowship of those who have entered heaven's portals. There is a fellowship that we here on earth may enjoy with those who are now in the heaven presence of the Living God. The Communion of Saints has a reality today that in easier, softer days we often missed.

One thinks of the prayer, "Almighty God, we entrust all who are near and dear to us to Thy never failing care for this life and the life to come; knowing that Thou art doing for them better than we can desire or pray for; through Jesus Christ our Lord."

God, keep Thy children everywhere in the spirit and fellowship of those who have dared their all for their fellowman and Thee.

Congratulations—Bishop Quin and the Diocese of Texas

The Southern Churchman extends its congratulations to the Diocese of Texas and Bishop Quin, who this month are celebrating a twenty-five year partnership. The writer, having served in the Diocese of Texas, knows first hand the inspiring leadership that Bishop Quin has given and is giving to the Church in Texas. We have no figures before us, but we are certain that statistics would show a marked growth in the Diocese for the past twenty-five years, both in contributions and communicant strength. But cold statistics do not tell the true story of the Christian leadership Bishop Quin has exercised.

If there was ever a Bishop who tried to live up to his consecration now of being a Father-in-God to his people, it is Bishop Quin. This is especially true in his relationship to his clergy. No problem is ever too small to receive a sympathetic hearing from the Bishop. He is a firm task master, but he never asks his clergy to do more than he himself does. A man is willing to give his best for that type of leader.

Standing close by his side is Mrs. Quin. She has shared in all his works and is a source of fine inspiration to every member of the diocese. The family of Quin has made a family of the Diocese of Texas.

So to Bishop Quin our congratulations on his twenty-fifth anniversary. This not merely for his leadership in the Diocese of Texas, but the contribution he has made to the Church at large, especially to the youth of our Church. He is a young people's Bishop. May God bless you, Bishop Quin, with many more years of useful service to your diocese.

To the Diocese of Texas our congratulations on the continued fine work you are doing under the leadership of Clinton S. Quin!

Autumnal Easter

Let's Have a New Celebration of Hallowe'en and All Saints' Day, November 1

By MOULTRIE GUERRY

IN MY CITY and probably in many cities in the land, efforts are being made to break away from the old raucous celebration of Hallowe'en, when mobs are allowed the freedom of downtown areas, streets barred of traffic, save costumed and madcap pedestrians, and excited children galore. City fathers and all good citizens who would discourage, through press and school, a celebration that often tempts to petty lawlessness as well as to a mood unsuited to the seriousness of our days, may be wanting some positive note to strike, a real substitute for hilarious and horrible thoughts of the dead,—when the dead are pressing closely upon our hearts, with thoughts too deep for us to bear, unless supported by faith and hope.

Autumnal Easter is that substitute!

Autumnal Easter leaves no place for a raucous Hallowe'en, nor a gloomy one, but for a joyous one with the kind of joy that is appropriate to Easter; because the season of All Saints'—All Hallows' as the old English has it—it seems to me, is a kind of Eastertide, including All Hallows' eve, or Hallowe'en.

IN THE SPRING the Christian church reaches the height of Christian joy in celebrating her Lord Jesus Christ's resurrection.

> "Mighty victim from the sky,
> Hell's fierce powers beneath thee lie;
> Thou hast conquered in the fight,
> Thou hast brought us life and light:
> Now no more can death appall,
> Now no more the grave enthrall.
> Thou hast opened Paradise,
> And in Thee thy Saints shall rise."

In this Easter hymn, which begins with "At the Lamb's high feast," we note the sequel of His resurrection in the resurrection of the Saints: their new life here and hereafter. Therefore, in the fall, as a sequel to Easter, the church celebrates the feast of All Saints,' All Hallows—what I would call the Autumnal Easter, the harvest time of risen souls.

The characteristics, as we all know, of Hallowe'en celebrations go back to the days of the Druids, and their new year practices and superstitions. November 1 was their new year and the beginning of winter and the cold winds that drove the dead from their graves to haunt the houses and habits of men. Bonfires were built to keep the ghosts warm; food was left on tables for the guests from the dead (this food was often eaten by thieves); evil spirits incarnate in cats and witches and all things mysterious were dreaded on such a night. In the words of Robert Burns:

> Hallowe'en will come, will come,
> Witchcraft will be set agoing,
> Fairies will be at full speed
> Running in every pass.
> Avoid the road, children, children.

The Romans brought to Britain the fall festival of the Godess Pomona, of fruits and gardens, from which comes the practice of apple-bobbing and such like. I suppose the pumpkins carved out in ghoulish faces symbolizes the combinations of the two traditions.

THE SUPERIMPOSING of the Christian feast, with its love of the dead, did away in part with the old dreads, leaving a mixture of mischievous destructiveness and harmless fun.

Even so, many of the spiritual values of All Saints' Day have been pushed aside (like those of Christmas and Easter by extravagance and parade) by Hallowe'en excesses reminiscent of pagan days: night prowling, horror stories and chambers of horrors, and such matters that make the best of us want to say the old English Litany: "From ghoulies and ghosties and leggedy beasties, and things that go bump in the night, Good Lord deliver us!"

Such things have not been conducive to a real "Communion of Saints," to preparation for the Lord's Supper shared in spirit with the "souls of the faithful (who) after they are delivered from the burden of the flesh are in joy and felicity," to any lofty fellowship with that cloud of witnesses who the Scriptures say encompass us about. But the church invites us on All Hallows' Day, November 1, and All Hallows' Eve, wherever we may be, to a celebration of the Resurrection of the Saints, bringing with us the tenderest memories we have in the world, with solemn thanksgiving for those whose "dwelling place is the Paradise of God."

In a world where death touches unnumbered multitudes and danger surrounds our absent ones, Autumnal Easter may bring a comfort, and a courage never so needed or so welcome before, in the church, in the home, in each human heart, made braver in hope and in prayer: Almighty God, we entrust all who are dear to us, and dear to Thee, to Thy neverfailing care and love, for this life and the life to come.

> The ruler with the iron hand holds not
> The reins that govern self; outside he looks
> For worlds to subjugate. Within, a knot
> Of tangled feelings and of mental crooks
> Destroy his peace, and make his heart a stone.
> Force may enslave, but cannot conquer men.
> Allegiance goes to One who dwelt alone,
> Taking the citadel of self, and then
> Teaching the lesson to humanity.

We Must Advance or Perish

By JOHN SUTHERLAND BONNELL

"Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth."

THE MOST DEADLY enemy of the Christian Church is not, as might be supposed, an evil world outside itself. Rather it is the spirit of reactionism within the Church. It was this that called forth the blazing indignation of Jesus. To the Religious Leaders of His day He said:

> ". . . ye shut up the kingdom of heaven against men: for ye neither go in yourselves, neither suffer ye them that are entering to go in."

The trouble with the Church of Jesus' day was that it had become static, rigid, bereft of enthusiasm and vitality. It was

> "Faultily faultless, icily regular, > Splendidly null."

The Apostolic Church on the other hand was dynamic and adventurous. It faced the future with utter fearlessness because it had the Lord's promise that the Holy Spirit would lead it into all truth.

At various times in the history of the Christian Church it has reverted to the spirit of the Jewish Church of the first century. The Middle Ages was one such period. The Church became rich, powerful, intolerant, reactionary. The spiritual organism that had pulsed with vigor and vitality in the Apostolic Age had become hardened into an organization concerned most of all with its own security. That is the reason why it was so insecure.

It was afraid of thought. It lived in dread lest some venturesome thinker might unsettle in the minds of its adherents the dogmas it proclaimed.

The revelations of Copernicus and Galileo and Kepler, the first of modern scientists, threw it into a panic. It dreaded the discovery of truth. It had forgotten the Master's promise that the Spirit of Truth would lead the Church into all truth; that truth by whomsoever discovered is of God.

JUST AS THE CHURCH in the Middle Ages faced the problem of adjusting itself to the knowledge of an expanding universe so in our day the issue of the Reunion of Christendom looms ever larger on the Church's horizon. From the time of the Protestant Reformation, with its rediscovery of the central elements of the Gospel, of necessity emphasis was placed upon individual truths long neglected—submerged under the burden of tradition and sacerdotalism.

Groups of Christians gathered themselves round whatever specific segment of truth most appealed to them. The Methodists emphasized freedom of the will and the universality of the Gospel message; the Baptists, liberty of conscience and a particular mode of Baptism; the Episcopalians exalted the threefold ministry of bishops, priests and deacons; the Presbyterians proclaimed, the august doctrine of the sovereignty of Almighty God.

In America the cleavage in Protestantism was carried to the utmost extremes. The last religious census reported by the Government reveals more than 200 separate and competing churches. At that time there were 18 branches of the Baptist Church, 17 of the Lutheran, 19 of the Methodists and 9 of the Presbyterians. In recent years the number of these divisions has been drastically reduced by unions within the various denominational bodies. Today the Presbyterian Church U. S. A., to which we belong, embraces considerably more than twice the membership of all other Presbyterian bodies.

When we examine the sub-divisions of some of the denominations it is difficult to believe that there is any valid reason why they should remain separate. Take the Baptist Church for instance. Here is a list of some of its separate organizations:

> Duck River and kindred associations
> Independent Baptist Church of America
> The General Six-Principle Baptists
> Seventh-Day Baptists
> United American Freewill Baptists
> Freewill (Bullockite) Baptists
> General Baptists
> Separate Baptists
> Regular Baptists
> Primitive Baptists
> Predestinarian Two-Seed-in-the Spirit Baptists and so on!

OUR OWN PRESBYTERIAN denomination sustained divisions within itself for decades, schisms that had their origin in conflicts between the Church and State in Scotland more than a century before.

It is important for Protestants to remember that the main reason for the perpetuation of all these denominations is not because they differ in theology but because their tradition and polity, expressed in modes of government, differ.

In 1927 all major branches of the Christian Church throughout the world with the exception of the Roman Catholic, 86 in number, sent their representatives to Lausanne, Switzerland, for a conference on Faith and Order. It is a notable fact that complete unity was achieved in their beliefs about God, and Christ, and Salvation, and Eternal Life. But there remained impressive differences in their concepts of what is an Apostolic Church Order.

Today, however, the tide is turning and is rising steadily toward reunion. There is an uninterrupted movement from the idea of exclusive churches, each holding and emphasizing a segment of truth, toward churches that are inclusive, containing many facts of truth.

In many churches the spirit of inertia prevails. They want to be let alone. They have forgotten God's promise that the Holy Spirit will lead us into all truth —not a fragment of it.

Emerson says: "God offers to every mind its choice between truth and repose. Take which you please. You cannot have both." Emerson is right. Progress is the condition of life. We must advance or perish.

ONE OF THE EVIDENCES of the interest in Christian Reunion has been the negotiations between the Protestant Episcopal Church and the Presbyterian Church U. S. A. On several occasions statements have appeared in New York newspapers setting forth the Episcopal position. It is high time I

A GRATUITOUS INSULT

A MOST gratuitous insult to thousands of Church women was published in the October tenth issue of the Living Church on page 16, an insult felt so keenly by many ladies that it cannot be passed over. After lamenting the fact that delegates to the triennial meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary had been informed where they could get breakfast before the corporate communion service, and after insisting upon fasting communions, the article continued: "If it (i. e., fasting) doesn't make any difference then no preparation of the body makes any difference, whether in its own kind and degree it's the wedding-garment at the King's feast or chastity before Christian marriage."

A great many communicants disagree totally with the assumption that to receive the elements fasting is more reverent, that it puts people in better condition to commune properly, that it adds at all to the worth of their self-oblation. They have been taught and conscientiously believe that it is an entirely indifferent matter, and therefore they frequently breakfast before receiving at the eleven o'clock celebration, or before an early service if the church is at some distance from home or if it promises to be a long service. And now they are told that their practice is in precisely the same category as unchastity prior to marriage! Since they frequently commune after eating, presumably they might just as well have been unchaste frequently. To tell so many thousands of our ladies that their religious practice is tantamount to harlotry is indeed a gratuitous insult. To put it mildly, an apology is in order.

But the statement in the Living Church is more than an insult to a large proportion of our communicants. To put the conscientious practice of deeply religious people on the same level as using the body simply as a means for temporary sensual gratification, reveals a perspective so warped as to be either ridiculous or frightening: ridiculous if nobody takes it seriously, frightening if anybody does. For it measures the inner attitude of reverence to our Lord by the physical act of abstention from food—and that despite the fact that the first Holy Communion came after supper; it raises into a matter of highest principle a disciplinary regulation, and this is the essence of what our Lord attacked in the Scribes and Pharisees of His day; it completely prevents our Lord's meaning about the "wedding garment", it entirely misunderstands the role of the physical in human personality, which involves a misunderstanding of the whole sacramental principle.

There is another feature about this statement in the Living Church which arouses indignation, and that is the effort to enforce on a large number of Churchfolk the opinion of a minority. Those who believe that the Bread and Wine should always be received fasting are accorded entire liberty to follow their conviction. Nobody compels them to receive at the eleven o'clock service which, in most of our churches, is the parish Eucharist, even though by declining to receive they break the unity of the parish in that Sacrament; and breaking the unity of the Fellowship is one of the most serious offenses from the point of view of the New Testament, wherein there is no mention of fasting communions. Nobody compels them to eat or drink anything before attending an early celebration. But, now this article says, that the majority who disagrees with this view has no right to be told where in a strange city they can obtain breakfast. They must attend the corporate communion fasting or not at all. A minority is trying to hold up a majority; and that, despite the fact that the Anglican tradition most certainly does not insist upon fasting communions. This is another example of the ecclesiastical Hitlerism which more than any other one thing threatens the integrity of Anglicanism.

FROM THE COMMITTEE OF REVIEW

The Committee of Review of the 1943 Triennial to the Women of the Church, Greetings:

We give thanks that the fellowship in work and worship, which have been ours, and the witness of peoples and groups that have come before us have led us to the realization that "Of a truth God is no respecter of persons; but in every nation he that feareth Him, and worketh righteousness is accepted with Him" (Acts 10:34, 35).

We are members of God's Kingdom in Christ and have received the gift of being co-workers with Him in the Task of bringing in His Kingdom.

Without repentance we cannot accept His Gift nor carry out our Task. We have not cared enough. We have not purged ourselves of prejudices and un-Christian attitudes. We have not made our choices in accordance with His plans and laws day by day. We have not died in Christ a little day by day.

We would repent and accept God's Gift and our Task. The Task is not easy, for we are confronted with a world-wide vision of a world-wide need. Unspeakable living conditions caused by war-time migration exist in our communities. Race and labor riots demonstrate rising hate in our nation. Bitter bloodshed in God's family shows the sin in the world. These are only a few of the evils which challenge us to Christian action. Men and women must be raised up for the ministry of peace. "The night is far spent; the day is at hand. Let us prepare ourselves for what the day may bring."

This preparation can only come through the sacraments, prayer, quiet, and corporate worship. Thus we receive strength and wisdom to do His will. In simple, prayerful day by day living—through acts of friendship and reconciliation—lie the solution of our most simple and complex problems.

May the Holy Spirit come among us and bring us to a continual realization that "Of a truth God is no respecter of person; but in every nation he that feareth Him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with Him." May he convict—convert—consecrate us to our Task.

HAVEN . . .

By J. W. KENNEDY

WHILE MILLING OVER the events of yesterday (Sunday) and trying to single out that which was important enough to include in my quiet time I opened my copy of Goodspeed's New Testament and read four verses of Chapter 2 in John's Gospel, the story of Jesus' conflict with the dealers in sacrifices and moneychanging within the Temple precincts. These verses held my attention long enough to produce a valuable tieup with my thoughts concerning the important events of yesterday, and the relating of the experiences involved with both the expected and unexpected today. I quote verses 13 through 17.

"Now the Jewish passover was approaching and Jesus went up to Jerusalem. In the Temple he found the dealers in cattle, sheep and pigeons and the money-changers sitting at their tables. And he made a lash out of rope, and drove them all, sheep and cattle, out of the Temple, and scattered the money-changers' coins on the ground, and overturned their tables. And he said to the pigeon-dealers,

" 'Take these things away! Do not turn my Father's house into a market!'

"His disciples remember that the Scriptures said, 'My zeal for your house will consume me.' "

WE CAN READILY understand the feelings which prompted Jesus to this outburst of righteous indignation. We have seen holy things and places desecrated; we have read of the waste of beauty and treasures in war-time; we have felt our blood boil at the outrageous conduct of man toward that which is sacred. Jesus was indignant and probably conscious of His helplessness to do anything lasting about it at the moment. The commotion and excitement following Jesus' words was not permanent. By the very next week at least they were back again doing business at their old places undisturbed, save for a tiny twinge occasionally, perhaps, over the degenerate changes they had made in the religious practices of their forefathers; and the realization of a slight bit of guilt because of Jesus' stinging accusation. We have expressed ourselves, no doubt, over a similar experience of rank injustice or cruelty or destruction, but after the moment had passed we realized we had wrought nothing permanent in the way of change. Jesus must have desired to change these conditions by some such outward means that could be quickly enforced, but He knew this could not be so. The evil practices of society can be cured only by banding together in strong action units those who have changed their inherited attitudes and are ready for sacrificial conduct. That is why good men, no matter how good, seldom change the evil social conditions under their very noses. The zeal for remedying what they know is wrong has not yet risen to the point where they are willing for it to consume them. Jesus had. He fully realized, more than ever after this experience, the futility of dreams and words alone. These produced no action response. He was willing now to allow the zeal of God's way up on earth for every man to literally consume Him utterly, since this was apparently the only method arresting and shocking enough to throw up a backdrop against which the motives and deeds of men could be measured as to their likeness to God's will for them.

I cannot help but think of the shocking and horrible things of war which had to come before we were aroused to do anything about existing conditions. We are by nature almost incurable procrastinators. We let well enough alone until the sharp edge of the evil cuts into our flesh. Jesus' death on the cross has been the one deed which has made men sick enough at heart and full of care enough that the attitudes and beliefs and lacks of action which produced such an end for such a man—sinless, blameless, God's Son, the victim of men's brutal and selfish blindness—should be purified and changed and kept to the purpose defined by Jesus as the essence of God's laws.

I am thinking of Italy and the other deluded nations who disregard the precincts of the sacred in man and of the end of their domination of the Temple Courts. It will not be from the winning of the war, but how much we can forgive and rewin of their souls that will make the zeal for the house of freedom worth whatever has been consumed.

Jesus' way through darkness always leads to dawn.

COLLECT FOR NINETEENTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

O God, forasmuch as without Thee we are not able to please Thee; Mercifully grant that Thy Holy Spirit may in all things direct and rule our hearts through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

Proposed Section on the Economic Order

By FRANCIS J. BLOODGOOD

"THE EARTH is the Lord's and the fullness thereof." The Christian principles to be set forth in our report on the economic order are the doctrine of God the Creator, the primacy of the spiritual, and the reality of fellowship.

The Christian faith is not exclusive; the Christian faith is inclusive. Our Blessed Lord said, "A new commandment I give unto you that ye love one another, as I have loved you that ye also love one another. By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another." We, therefore, begin by pointing out that in our own country there has been going on in the economic order for a number of years what has well been called a mild civil war. Our report, in general, is pointed to world peace and the recognition of the fact that we are indeed all members one of another. The reality of our express desire to assist in economic reconstruction, after this war on the part of the United Nations has reached its necessary and successful conclusion, will be tested by our understanding of, and our readiness to state the need for, economic peace within our own country.

BY THE PRIMACY of the spiritual, we join in the bold claim of St. Paul, "He that is spiritual judgeth all things." We join with St. Paul in contradicting the commonly held and mistaken view that the sole concern of religion is with charity. Our Blessed Lord said, "And I will pray the Father and He shall give you another comforter that He may abide with you forever, even the Spirit of truth." We, therefore, claim for the Church the power, through the guidance of the Holy Spirit, to see how bad results have happened and how good ones may be achieved. On the other hand, the economic order as such has deliberately chosen, specifically since the time of the Renaissance, to dominate the political order to such an extent as to actually shove it aside so that it, i. e., the economic order, could take its place in the direct succession to the teachings of Machiavelli. In so doing, the economic order has indeed grasped the reality of evil, but it has stopped short with this partial understanding of the nature of man.

We repeat, "The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof." The Christian doctrine of Creation asserts that Jesus Christ is the temporal ruler as well as the spiritual. This means, for example, that we can take the famous epigram of the Latin pagan poet—"I am a man; therefore, nothing that is human is alien to me,"—and state our Christian principle that in Jesus Christ, who is true God and true man, all that is natural and human finds its only true source of well-being. Consequently, the question that Christians should put is this: "What needs and aspirations are most native to men? What economic order is best calculated to lead to their fulfillment and satisfaction?" The statement in Holy Scripture that "the earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof," means that the earth supplies the instruments for our living, but the end of life is God. The real business of an economic order is to enable the creature man to live. An economic order that tolerates unemployment is to be condemned not merely on the moral issue that this is unfair, but on the theological judgment that such an economic order is inadequate to natural human need. We proclaim with the Archbishop of Canterbury that, "The main business of the Church in the realm of economics must be to insist on the distinction between means and ends. The ultimate end of man is to glorify God and enjoy Him forever." take over for constructive use "the fundamental insights of progressive education," and show how they can be made consistent with the Christian way of life and belief.

The final essay, by Dean Shires, on "Recent Developments in Theological Education," is one of the most encouraging and stimulating in the book. The Pacific seminary faces the present and the future with its eyes open, eager to seize every opportunity to advance the cause of Christ, to remove every obstacle that hinders, and in the words of Bishop Crafton's life-long prayer, "to press on the Kingdom." The Church west of the Mississippi—indeed the whole Church—ought to be very proud of the School which has produced this volume, which has already contributed so many able leaders, pastors, and teachers during the past fifty years, and promises to be an even much greater force in the religious world during the years to come.

TOWARDS BELIEF IN GOD, by Herbert H. Farmer. Macmillan. $2.00.

Dr. Farmer has presented an excellent defense of belief in the Christian God in this clear and illuminating volume. The argument is buttressed by illustrations which clarify some points, and his exposition centers around three major points: An idea is true if (1) it has within it a certain inherent compellingness, (2) if it works by satisfying our nature and helping us manage our world, and (3) if it is consistent with itself and with other experience and knowledge. If the idea of God can meet these three requirements, then the man who through decision comes into a personal and gracious relationship with the God of Jesus Christ will be convinced of God's existence. God is transcendent, personal, loving, and good; but there is nothing about His immanence.

sole King and Head of the Church, the result is inevitable disunity and the spirit of intolerance. It is equally true that the nearer we approach in love and loyalty to Christ the closer are we knit to each other. Our true discipleship is best revealed by our love for the brethren. As the Master said long ago:

"By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another."

God is calling us to advance under the leadership of Him who said, "I am the Truth". Let us then in the presence of a broken, divided, hate-ridden world demonstrate to the wondering eyes of men that Christianity with its solvent of love is the greatest uniting force on earth; so shall we bring together the dismembered fragments of His Body until they grow into a glorious Church, owing allegiance neither to political dictator nor ecclesiastical potentate but only to the King of kings and Lord of lords; a Church that shall lift high the torch of Truth until its kindling rays penetrate to earth's remotest bounds, carrying into lands, where darkness and error reign, the light, the love and the liberty of the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

CHRISTIANITY AND THE CONTEMPORARY SCENE

Edited by Randolph Crump Miller and Henry H. Shires. Morehouse-Gorham Co., 1943. $3.00.

THIS "JUBILEE VOLUME" marks the fiftieth anniversary of the Church Divinity School of the Pacific, located at Berkeley, California. It is a broad survey of present-day interests in the field of theology, rather than a history of the School—that history is briefly outlined in a footnote! The authors are chiefly members of the Faculty of C. D. S. P.; two are from the neighboring Pacific School of Religion, and together with the Provost of the University of California and the Dean of St. Margaret's House in Berkeley represent institutions with which the School is associated in the work of theological education. The combined result is a book which is fully alive to the present situation with its peculiar characteristics and needs, and one that faces valiantly forward toward the future. There is nothing insular or provincial or "ultramontane" about it: Berkeley is not somewhere beyond the mountains, but is located near the very heart of the intellectual and religious universe of today. The book moves within the central tradition of American thought: it is optimistic, and confesses without shame or apology that religion is a practical affair—"activistic," if you prefer the term. The authors are quite aware of the tidal movements of Continental thought (Barthianism, for example), but they have not been engulfed or swept off their feet. A line from Clough kept running through my mind at the end of every chapter:

"But westward, look, the land is bright."

It is a book full of vitality and promise, as is the School it represents. Many more Jubilees may the C. D. S. P. live to celebrate, and go on "from strength to strength" through the decades that lie ahead.

THE VOLUME OPENS with a clear, brief analysis of the leading trends in present-day American theology, by Professor Randolph C. Miller, and we have not finished page one before we come bang-up against the "Dialectical" theology. It is briefly described and appraised, and the author goes on to affirm that, nevertheless, "Liberalism is not dead!" This view is more or less characteristic of the whole volume—the other movements are valuable, and have their proper contributions to make; but the central emphasis of Pacific theology is still liberal. This is noticeable even in the able survey of Continental theology that follows, by the Rev. George Morrel. He describes the continental "recovery from the onslaughts of liberalism and positivism," but in doing so he writes as a liberal. The movements of today contribute toward the synthesis of tomorrow; they are not final or absolute.

At this point one may look for a survey of present-day Anglican theology, but there is none. Perhaps this comes from the modesty of the Anglican authors, or from an unwillingness to pass judgment on other Anglican schools of thought, or—possibly—from the fact that there is not much distinctively Anglican theology today: we are part and parcel of a larger whole, and our theological thinking, in the Episcopal Church, is only a reflection of larger movements outside. Still, Temple, Gore, and one or two others deserve mention—though they are neither American nor Continental.

Professor Muilenburg writes on "The Return to Old Testament Theology"—a significant trend of a positive kind observable today; and Dr. Pierson Parker discusses "The Jesus of History Today." Both papers are able, but somewhat brief for the subjects in hand. In fact, the whole volume seems to reflect an emphasis on philosophy, on the one hand, and on practical religious concerns, on the other, which leaves both pure theology and biblical research somewhat neglected. I mean this not in criticism of the two papers just mentioned, but as an observation upon the characteristic emphases of the book as a whole. This is where the Pacific School differs, I believe, from the rest of us, whether it be a merit or a defect. In fact, this is where, as a rule, Episcopal seminaries need to lay more emphasis. The Bible and Systematic Theology ought to be required courses for three full years! Perhaps then we could produce a modern Anglican theology worthy of inclusion in a survey of "the contemporary scene."

DEAN SHIRES WRITES an essay on "An Inquiry into the Origin of Religion" which will provide the ordinary reader with a most useful guide-map through the tangled mazes of modern theistic philosophy. Like most of the other chapters, this has a very good bibliography at the end. His son, Henry M. Shires, writes a good account of "Modern American Christianity in the Light of History," stressing the importance of European background, the westward moving frontier, the polyglot population of the U. S. To many readers, coming upon a discussion of these factors for the first time, this chapter will be a great help in understanding the world we live in—this America with its two-hundred-odd sects and "churches," and its polymorphous, divided religion.

With chapter vii begins the "practical" half of the book. Bishop Stevens discusses "The Growing Church-Mindedness of Today," and he writes out of first-hand experience as one who has had a share in the great ecumenical movement. He even quotes his notes taken down at Edinburgh in 1937, and deals with the subject in no academic, impersonal way, but with all the richness and warmth of intense personal interest. This and the following paper by Bishop Parsons on "Church Unity," though possibly written independently, naturally go together. I think I have read everything Bishop Parsons has written on Reunion, at least everything he has published; and I have never read anything more cogent, more persuansive, more inspiring than this chapter. He outlines the beginnings of the movement toward unity, its steady advance, the obstacles it faced, the problems it still must meet, and he ends with "some reflections on the way out" of the difficulties. "The Church has never been Catholic enough," and the main problem still is, "How can the Church become Catholic enough?"" I wish I had the space in which to quote the noble, inspiring final paragraphs, in which Bishop Parsons sketches out his vision of the Catholic Church of the future.

Professor John Bennett's chapter, "The Hardest Problem for Christian Ethics," is an able and constructive treatment of the question of pacifism, from the angle of the ethical dilemma in which men are "obliged to do something which, in itself, is evil." His positive solution and proposals are thoroughly illuminating.

PROVOST DEUTSCH'S ADDRESS at the semi-centennial commencement on May 6 now follows, under the title, "The Times that Try Men's Souls;" after this comes Professor Everett Bosshard's essay, "A Christian Analysis of Western Political Philosophy,"—an able exposition of the criticism found in the works of Jacques Maritain and Christopher Dawson. The relevance of the subject to present-day thought, religious as well as secular, is obvious in every morning's headlines. Chapter xii is by Dr. C. Rankin Barnes, on "Some Fresh Techniques of Pastoral Care"—one of the soundest introductions to this subject, for clergymen and students, that I have ever read. Dean Ethel Springer's "Social Task of the Church" is equally good, and ought to be read by everyone interested in the social program of the Church, i. e., by everyone who is or ought to be interested, i. e., by everyone!

DR. MILLER'S CHAPTER on "Christian Education Today" is up to the minute, critical as well as constructive, and recognizes the practical problems as well as the theoretical goals; this is a very good combination. "A return to theology," he says, "is the most needed project for the educators today." Good! But at the same time "someone has to make a Christian out of John Dewey,"

CLERGYMAN WANTS HOMESTEAD

I have served in the ministry 44 years: 25 of which was in the domestic mission field. I have frequently paid the rent myself on the house in which I lived. When the church was unable to pay the assessments on the Pension Fund it was paid out of my salary. I am very near retirement age and am informed I will receive about thirteen dollars per week with which to keep a shelter over wife and me, and to live on. If I only had a little "homestead" or "old farm" where we could live, perhaps we could get along. Investigation as to the truth of these statements invited. Have you a place to sell me? tive importance to the Church. Such was the overwhelming spirit which enlivened and enriched the third annual Conference for the women of the Diocese of South Carolina, held at Poinsett State Park, August 24-27.

Small attendance and the season of accustomed summer lethargy seemed powerless to quench the Spirit of God which burned so brightly in the hearts and minds of those present. The value of a rock sound spiritual foundation for any of the works of God was proved by the cleansing and refreshment that proceeded from the opening hours of quiet prayer and meditation directed by Sister Josephine of the Order of St. Anne.

The early morning Eucharist, Evening Prayer and Compline became the natural accompaniments of the daily study and planning which never for a moment swerved from the determined purpose of establishing a definite way of life for the women of the Church as the only hope of a new life, lived in the service of God. As one of the members of the Conference has written: "To partake of the Blessed Sacrament early in the morning is one of the greatest blessings, and to worship God at Evening Prayer and again at Compline with that little group of earnest, devout, and alive Christians is an experience never to be forgotten." Intelligent application of self-discipline, increased devotion to Christ, and a determination to serve Him in all areas of life shone forth in all the labors of the Conference.

The staff, unusually inspired and consecrated, included Miss Alice Gregg, now on furlough from her work in China, Mrs. Arthur S. Reeder of Mullins, Director of the Conference, and Miss Pressley Walsh, chairman of the Diocesan Division of Church Schools.

The full import and inevitable fruit of the Conference will, if it please God, add to the enrichment of the stream of grace that is gaining so rapidly in power and depth throughout the whole Church. May God prosper the prayers and plans of this unusual Conference.

"INDIGENOUS CHURCH55 IS MISSIONARY POLICY Y

Increased impetus to the Episcopal Church's policy of developing native leadership in its foreign missionary work was suggested in legislation submitted in the House of Bishops.

A resolution recommending surrender to the Holy Catholic Church in China of the responsibility of electing and consecrating bishops for China was received and referred to the Committee on Canons.

The Holy Catholic Church in China has been developed through the cooperative work of the Episcopal Church, the Anglican Church in Canada, and the Church of England missionary societies.

An indigenous Church, with its own local leadership, is the aim of the Episcopal Church's missionary policy, declared Presiding Bishop Tucker in supporting the measure.

The resolution was introduced by Bishop Shirley H. Nichols, of Salina.

Bishop Y. Y. Tsu, assisting bishop of Hongkong, was introduced in the House of Bishops and told of opportunities facing the Church in China.

Bishop Tsu urged the Episcopal Church to regard the Church in China as a unit, and not as a number of dioceses. He told of the tremendous missionary opportunities facing the Church in China.

Bishop Manning, of New York, expressed the hope that the development toward greater self-government on the part of native Churches would not be too gradual, "for it is all in line with our hopes and prayers for the post-war world".

The House of Bishops called on the United States in facing the post-war world, to renounce any isolation and take its full responsibility as a member of the family of nations. A resolution to this effect was adopted and sent to the House of Deputies.

TWO EVENTS MARK ANNIVERSARY

Divinity School of Pacific in 50th Year

Berkeley, Calif.—Two events mark the fiftieth anniversary of the Church Divinity School of the Pacific, which was founded in San Mateo and had its opening service on October 18, 1893. There was a special convocation on the morning of October 18, with addresses by Mrs. James Otis Lincoln, only living attendant at the opening service and whose husband was a professor at the school for many years, by Bishop Parsons, who for many years was president of the board of trustees and who is now chairman of the department of theology, by the Rev. The second event is the publication of a volume of essays by members of the faculty, Christianity and the Contemporary Scene, edited by Randolph Crump Miller and Henry H. Shires. The contributors are well known throughout the church: Bishop Stevens, of Los Angeles; Bishop Parsons, Dean Shires, Professor James Muilenburg, of the Pacific School of Religion; Professor John C. Bennett, of Union Theological Seminary; Dean Ethel Springer, of St. Margaret's House, and others.

BISHOP TSU VISITS DETROIT

Known As the Bishop of the Burma Road

Detroit, Mich.—The people of the Diocese of Michigan were honored to have a visit from the Rt. Rev. Andrew Y. Y. Tsu, known as the "Bishop of the Burma Road", during the week following General Convention.

On October 15, Bishop Tsu, Anglican Bishop of Kunming and South West China, spoke at a mass meeting in St. Joseph's Church, attended by about 400 persons. He spoke of the forces at work in China today, and the difficulty under which they are laboring, and the fact that he has been in charge of the Chinese migration from the east coast of China and is the only Bishop in Free China at present made his address doubly interesting to the people. They were also intensely interested in the fact that he is the representative and close personal friend of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek, famous "Christian General" of China.

Bishop Tsu was introduced by the Rt. Rev. Frank W. Creighton, D. D., bishop of the Diocese of Michigan. Following the meeting, a reception was held at St. Joseph's rectory by the Rev. and Mrs. Wm. C. Hamm, for the clergy and clergy wives, and vestrymen of St. Joseph's and their wives, to meet Bishop Tsu.

On Sunday, October 17, Bishop Tsu spoke in St. Andrew's, Ann Arbor, in the morning, and in St. Paul's, Lansing, in the evening.

Bishop Tsu is going on to England, where he will continue with leaders of the English Church in discussion of the Church's post-war program in China.

HISTORIC CHURCH BURNED

Norfolk, Va.—The bell in the steeple of the old Emmanuel Protestant Episcopal Church at Kempsville, which for more than a century has called worshippers to service each Sunday morning, was silenced on Oct. 12.

Nothing but the four brick walls of the old edifice remain standing in the grove of trees that for more than 100 years shadowed the house of worship.

The church, which was to have been the scene of a marriage that day is a smoldering mass of ashes.

The Rev. Francis Gray is the rector.

The fire, which destroyed the building, was discovered before dawn by a group of sailors en route to the Naval Station at Creeds, Princess Anne County. The sailors rushed into the burning building and began the task of removing everything possible. The pews, electric fans, the organ and other movable articles were brought to safety and placed on the wide lawns that surrounded the burning church. The parish records were burned.

It was said that the action of the sailors saved many valuable church possessions. The parish house, a short distance from the church, was not damaged.

On July 18 of this year Emmanuel Church celebrated its 100th anniversary.

$5,000 insurance is held, and the congregation plans to raise $10,000 and rebuild as soon as possible.

REPORT OF ARMY AND NAVY COMMISSION TO GENERAL CONVENTION

The millions of men in the armed forces represent America's hope, not only in today's emergency, but in the years to follow, and "pray God, we will not fail them in their need for spiritual leadership," declared Bishop Sherrill, of Massachusetts, in presenting the report of the Army and Navy Commission to the General Convention.

Recently returned from an inspection tour of the Aleutians, Bishop Sherrill told of heroism and cooperation of chaplains.

In Dutch Harbor Bishop Sherrill reported he was approached by a Southern Baptist chaplain and asked to confirm a young soldier. The Roman Catholic chaplain offered the use of his chapel, and there the Bishop confirmed the soldier, presented by the Southern Baptist clergyman.

The same thing happened in Kodiak, he said, with a Lutheran chaplain presenting a man for confirmation by the Bishop.

"Whatever our ecclesiastical luxuries in times of peace," said Bishop Sherrill, "if we are to serve the need, it must be on the broadest cooperative basis."

He appealed for additional funds to meet the needs, but emphasized that "the task cannot be done by the Army and Navy Commission alone, by a full-time bishop, or twenty full-time bishops, but only by the wholehearted cooperation of all of us.

He urged local bishops and other clergy and laity to work in closer cooperation with local camps, and also in maintaining the morale of men away from their parishes through constant writing.

"One message I bring you from the Aleutians," he said, "is to write all the time and write cheerful leltters."

"Too many of us write about our aches and pains, and when our men hear of them 5,000 miles away what can they do but worry?

"The days will never come again with this opportunity for the Church. I'm not talking about organizational aid. That is unimportant compared with the consecration of our people. We must assure our men that we care, that the Church cares, for them."

Enthusiastic endorsements of the work of the Army and Navy Commissions were given by Chaplain Lash, of the Navy, and Chaplain Virden, of the Army, both of whom told of the unfailing leadership of chaplains in the far-flung outposts of the American forces.

"A unique experience in human brotherhood" was reported by Dr. Washburn, secretary of the Army and Navy Commission.

He told of progress in the many camps, and the setting up of cooperational programs of ministry, not only to men in the armed services, but also to workers in necessary war industries.

"The ministry of the chaplain is not to the few but to all men in his unit," stated Captain Frank Lash. "The Chaplain is welcomed by the men. Men of all faiths look to him.

"We are grateful for the aid given the Church. It makes the chaplain realize he is not alone, but that the Church stands behind him.

"Men are interested in religion. I wish I could experience the responses of the men, even the unchurched, who flock for baptism in great numbers.

"A spiritual emphasis and revival marks for us the way we are going to preserve our victory."

Naval Chaplains G. Leslie Glenn and Henry B. Hodgkins were introduced by Chaplain Lash.

Army Chaplain Harry Lee Virden praised Bishop Sherrill's "unsurpassed administrative ability and pastoral feeling for our Church's chaplains."

The heroism of Chaplain F. B. Howden, Jr., on Bataan, who died while a prisoner of the Japanese, was related by Chaplain Virden as one of the many instances of the ministry of the chaplains to their men.

He told of another chaplain caring for the wounded and later aiding in burying the dead while under the fire of snipers, and of a third chaplain who jumped with paratroopers, "the men with their guns in their hands and the chaplain with his Holy Communion set."

A night-time service of Holy Communion in the jungle was pictured by Chaplain Virden.

"More than 400 men, spattered with mud, wet, and tired, received the Holy Communion at this late night service. The men were sleepy, they knew they would be fighting the enemy again within a few hours, but they also realized that they needed something more than sleep."

BISHOP GILMAN BACK IN CHINA

A letter has been received from the Rt. Rev. Alfred A. Gilman, bishop of Hankow, announcing his safe arrival at Kunming, in free China. It was written on his sixty-fifth birthday, August 23, and is full of thankfulnes at being back in China. (He was repatriated from occupied China on the 1942 trip of the Gripsholm and went out again as soon as arrangements could be made for his trip.)

He went by ship from New York to Bombay, by train to Calcutta, and by plane to Kunming, with eighty-eight pounds, the maximum allowed for baggage on the plane, so a number of belongings had to be abandoned in India, in hopes that some later traveler might bring them on. It was too cloudy to see the famous Salween and Mekong rivers from the plane, but he looked down on the Burma Road. As he had been told not to cable but to write, he had sent two letters ahead, but they did not arrive so no one met him. He was soon discovered, however, and welcomed by Bishop Ronald Hall, Mrs. Y. Y. Tsu, whose husband, Bishop Tsu, is now in the United States; the mission treasurer, Mr. Arthur J. Allen, and Mrs. Allen; the Rev. and Mrs. Gilbert Baker, all of Kunming; also the Rev. Mark Li, well known Chinese principal of the diocesan school now at Tsingchen. The Rev. Edmund Penn is in charge of the school at present, while Mr. Li is working at the church in Kunming. Writing immediately after arriving, the Bishop added no further news or comments. The long journey evidently had its share of difficulties, but nothing to perturb so experienced a traveler.

Gift Is Offerings Received at Cathedral Services in Cleveland, October 3-10

New York, N. Y.—The National Council has just received, designated for the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief, the sum of $1,603.19, forwarded by the Very Rev. Chester B. Emerson, dean of Trinity Cathedral, Cleveland. This gift is the loose offerings received at the Cathedral services on Saturday, October 2, and Sundays, October 3 and 10, during the General Convention.

The Presiding Bishop's Fund provides the convenient way of contributing to China Relief, Refugees, Prisoners of War, and many other needy groups in all parts of the world. The National Council has authorized another Advent Call for these sufferers, and the Presiding Bishop's Fund will receive gifts designated for any accredited relief agency. Undesignated gifts are placed by the Presiding Bishop, in consultation with a committee of advisors.

Total receipts of the Presiding Bishop's Fund from January 1, to October 1, 1943, are approximately $80,000, already twice the amount received for the entire year 1942.

REV. A. B. PARSON'S 20 YEARS' SERVICE

Dr. Wood Expresses Appreciation of Work for Missions

New York, N. Y.—Expressing his deep appreciation of the 20 years during which the Rev. Artley B. Parson worked with him, Dr. John Wilson Wood, formerly executive secretary of the Department of Foreign Missions of the National Council, tells of Mr. Parson's missionary appointment back in 1916, and of his work as a missionary in the Philippines and later as an executive at the Church Missions House. Said Dr. Wood:

In 1916 Bishop Brent was anxiously seeking clergy to man the growing work of the Church in the Philippine Islands. Bishop Lloyd, at that time the President of the Board of Missions, discovered the Rev. Artley Parson, an assistent minister at St. Paul's Cathedral, Boston, and secured his agreement to take work in the Philippines if Bishop Brent considered him qualified. Bishop William Lawrence, when asked for his judgment of Mr. Parson's qualifications, replied with characteristic directness and brevity:

"Mr. Parson is well fitted for the office of dean of the Manila Cathedral, or for any other position to which the Bishop may appoint him."

Bishop Brent assigned the new missionary to Zamboanga, the southernmost city in the islands, nearly five hundred miles from Manila. In less than two years the Bishop called Mr. Parson to Manila to serve as dean of the Cathedral.

During my visit to the Philippines in 1918-19 I was deeply impressed by Dean Parson's stirling qualities and earnest work. In 1920 the National Council called him back to this country to be an officer of its newly organized Department of Missions, charged with the vitally important duty of finding recruits for the increasing needs in our mission fields overseas. His efforts to enlist young men and women in the colleges, seminaries, and training schools were highly successful. So successful, indeed, that when the enforced exodus of missionaries from China and Japan occurred in 1940, it is estimated that fully one-half the missionaries in all the Church's overseas fields from Alaska to Brazil and from Liberia to Central China had been discovered and enlisted by him. He was their friend and counsellor when they made the decision to offer for service and in their years in the mission field.

A visit to Liberia in 1926-27, and a round the world journey in 1938-39 enabled him to meet on the field many of the friends who had been led by him to offer for missionary service.

All through the twenty years that we worked together Artley Parson was an ideal colleague, faithful, resourceful and stimulating. While one is saddened by his retirement from the National Council's Overseas Department, one is sure that his unfailing spirit of service in the name of our Lord and His Church will find new fields of usefulness and will continue to be a blessing to many of God's children.

SUCCESSFUL MISSION MARKS 10TH ANNIVERSARY OF RECTORSHIP

Englewood, N. J.—A very successful Six-Day Preaching Mission was held at St. Paul's Episcopal Church, October 10-15, by the Rev. Alan Whittemore, Superior of the Order of the Holy Cross, the theme being "The Fundamentals of the Christian Faith." The Mission was of more than parish interest since invitations were sent to all the Churches in Englewood and to many Episcopal Churches through the Northern Valley, and the attendance was remarkably large in view of war restrictions. This spiritual enterprise was planned by the rector, the Rev. James A. Mitchell, to mark the Tenth Anniversary of his rectorship at St. Paul's.

The Parish meanwhile had planned its own celebration of this event by a surprise party in the Parish House given to the Rector and his wife on the anniversary of their coming to Englewood, October first. This party consisted of a reception, a play, and the presentation of a generous gift, in which a large portion of the parish had a share.

Parson, at 281 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, will be glad to receive applications.

Indians Want More Schools

Laymen Appeal to Bishop Roberts to Strengthen Present Church School

Sioux Falls, S. D.—At its recent Provincial meeting at Fort Thompson, the Brotherhood of Christian Unity, one of the two large laymen's organizations in the Indian Field appealed to Bishop Roberts to strengthen the present Indian Church Schools and if possible to establish more. It was pointed out that many children are being lost to our church for lack of additional schools. Voting to make a special effort to raise money both from within and without their own membership for the establishment of new schools, the Brotherhood also voted $100 scholarships to St. Mary's School and to St. Elizabeth's School to help make up for the government aid which was withdrawn from all mission schools three years ago. In connection with their appeal to the Bishop, the Brotherhood also urged the reopening of Hare School at Mission, S. D., which buildings are in good condition and are surrounded by several acres of land.

BISHOP PERRY MAKES STATEMENT ON OUR EUROPEAN CHURCHES

Providence, R. I.—Asked for a statement concerning the Episcopal Church congregations in Europe, the Rt. Rev. James DeWolf Perry, bishop of Rhode Island, and Bishop-in-Charge of American Churches in Europe, says that Emmanuel Church, Geneva, continues a full schedule of services and active work. The Rev. Dr. Patrick of the Scottish Church, a longtime member of the congregation, is serving as lay reader with services on Sunday. The chaplain of the English Church celebrates the Holy Communion every month. Parish house and library are open for the work initiated by the Rev. Dr. Everett P. Smith, rector emeritus, now living in Rhode Island and acting as locum tenens in vacant parishes.

Holy Trinity, Parish, has been taken over by the German authorities, for use by the German Evangelical Church. The latest reports indicate that the property is intact and well cared for.

St. John's, Dresden, according to recent reports, is also protected and used occasionally for services conducted by a lay reader who is a member of the vestry.

In Munich, the chapel and library, which for many years have occupied rented space in a Government Building, are now closed, the building having been appropriated for use by the Nazi government.

St. James' Church, Florence, and St. Paul's Rome, were closed before the war with Italy. No recent reports have been received.

Christian Mission On World Order

Nationwide Effort of Protestantism to Achieve a Just and Durable Peace

New York.—In the greatest nationwide effort of Protestantism in years, thousands of church leaders from Bangor, Maine, to Walla Walla, Washington, will participate during November in the Christian Mission on World Order to demonstrate their interest in a just and durable peace and their determination as Christian citizens to achieve it.

Paul G. Macy, acting director of the Christian Mission under the joint auspices of six great church agencies representing more than 25,000,000 Protestants, announced that church leaders would gather together for one day missions in 100 cities in 39 states and the District of Columbia during the first three weeks of November.

Macy said that more than 75 men and women, many of them nationally known in the fields of religion, education, government, law and others have accepted assignments as members of teams who will travel from city to city to speak and participate in discussions of a Christian world order and to stimulate church and community to inaugurate an effective program of study and action.

The nationwide Mission will be launched Thursday, October 28 at a mass meeting at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, in New York City which is expected to attract 6,000 Christian leaders from the five boroughs of the nation's metropolis, to hear Sumner Welles, former under secretary of state, Senator Joseph H. Ball of Minnesota, and John Foster Dulles, chairman of the Commission on a Just and Durable Peace.

The Mission will get into full swing on Monday, Nov. 1, with nine Missions in as many states and from then to Nov. 19, Saturdays and Sundays excepted, from 11 to 12 Missions will be in session in the United States. Eight are scheduled in Ohio and seven in Pennsylvania.

The issues at stake in winning the peace, the methods of mobilizing church and community forces for study, discussion and action, will be emphasized in the Mission programs. Teams of four or five of the ablest church leaders—clergy and laity—will bring messages of inspiration and information to challenge the conscience of the church to study, work and pray for a Christian world order.

In each city the Mission is under the auspices of local church committees in cooperation with the Christian Mission on World Order which is a cooperative effort of six agencies—the Federal Council of Churches, The Foreign Missions Conference, Home Missions Council International Council of Religious Education, Missionary Education Movement and the United Council of Church Women.

Generally the morning session will be devoted to a general discussion of the question "A Christian World Order—What Is It?" and in the afternoon the Mission will break up into group meetings for ministers, lay people and church school and young people's leaders. They will discuss the subject "The Church and Community Face Their Task."

"World Order or Chaos" will be the general theme of the concluding session in the evening—a public mass meeting which "will bear testimony to the community that the Christian church intends to play its rightful role in healing the wounds of war and achieving a just and durable peace."

Thr speakers have been grouped into 15 teams and each team will visit from six to nine cities during the three weeks, to speak and participate in the discussions, traveling by airplane, train, bus and motorcar. Some speakers will tour one state, others will visit several.

On the opening night of the Mission, Nov. 1, sessions will be held in Quincy, Ill.; Springfield, Mass.; Cape Girardeau, Mo.; Cleveland, Ohio; Eugene ,Oregon; Reading, Pa.; Providence, R. I.; Sioux Falls, S. D. and Houston, Texas.

The speakers who have accepted assignments include Dr. Harold W. Dodds, president, Princeton University; Homer P. Rainey, president, University of Texas; Henry G. Harmon, president of Drake University, Des Moines, Ia.; Oswald Garrison Villard, editor, The Nation; John Foster Dulles; Senator Joseph Ball; Miss Mary E. Wooley, former president of Mt. Holyoke College; Justice Norris C. Bakke, of the Colorado State Supreme Court; Bishop Francis J. McConnell, of New York; Representative Jerry Voorhis of California; Dr. Henry Pitney Van Dusen, Union Theological Seminary, New York; Eugene E. Barnett, secretary of the International Committee of the Young Men's Christian Association; Dr. Gordon A. Sisco, secretary, United Church of Canada, Toronto; Rev. Charles W. # Outdoor Altar Dedicated

Open Air Services Attended by Navy Men at the Peace Altar

Rockland, Maine.—An outdoor altar dedicated to world peace, set against the wall of St. Peter's Church, has been built as a result of a long-continued desire on the part of the rector, the Rev. Ernest O. Kenyon, plus personal interest and help from a number of men outside the parish. The quarry man at Clark's Island, who is not a Churchman, presented the fine granite stone for the top of the altar. A truckman, also of another communion, donated his services in hauling all the stone. A Baptist draftsman of the community drew the plans. A crucifix and also the word Pax, set into the wall above the altar, were carved by inmates of the state penitentiary.

As Rockland is a seaport, many navy men and merchant seamen come to the church and to open air services at the peace altar. A huge stone fireplace also on the church grounds gathers the congregation after evening services or on other occasions for coffee and toasted franks.

The women of this parish had a meeting with the Jewish women of the town, just as an expression of friendliness, and later the rector was asked to address the Jewish congregation in their synagogue.

BRATENAHL MEMORIAL SERVICE

Washington, D. C.—The dedication of a tablet to the memory of George Carl Fitch Bratenahl, D. D., Dean of Washington Cathedral for twenty-one years, was held in the corridor south of the Bethlehem Chapel on Thursday, October 14, at 4:00 o'clock.

This service served to draw attention again to the work of Dean Bratenahl in the acquisition of the Cathedral grounds and planning and construction of the edifice as it now stands. Taking part in the service were the Rev. Dr. F. J. Bohanan, representing the Standing Committee of the Diocese, the Rev. C. T. Warner, representing the Cathedral Chapter, Canons Draper, Smith, Wedel, of the Cathedral, and Bishop George W. Davenport, retired bishop of the Diocese of Easton, and the Rev. Edward Slater Dunlap, former canon of the Cathedral, who acted as the Bishop's Chaplain. Bishop Davenport dedicated the tablet and Dr. Warner stated in a short address that it was the hope that this tablet might lead to the monument to Dean Bratenahl in the form of a sarcophageus or separate Chapel. This would seem to be most fitting as the structure itself reflects the arduous work of the Dean over a period of thirty-six years, the meticulous planning of the symbolism reflected in the carving and the stained glass windows, all lying outside the provision for the construction of the cathedral by the architects.

The presence of the many former friends of the Cathedral, distinguished in the life of the Nation's Capital was reminiscent of the days when the Cathe-

THOUGHTS FOR THE THOUGHTFUL

Prayer, then, must always be more than merely asking God for something we want, however spiritual that desire may be. It must also be a communion with Him as a Friend whose companionship is more to be desired than any other blessing we might seek.
—Christian Observer.

"Shall any gazer see with mortal eyes
Or any searcher know with mortal mind?
Veil after veil will lift, but there must be Veil after veil behind."

After all, the lives that do the most for the world are the steady, quiet lives. They are like stars; they just stay in their appointed places and shine with the light that God has given them. Meteors shoot brilliantly across the sky, and we exclaim and wonder; but long after they have vanished, the stars shine on to guide us"

"Go where thou wilt, seek what thou wilt, thou shalt not find a higher way above, nor a safer way below, than the way of the Holy Cross."

"Through all the depths of shame and loss
Sinks the plummet of the Cross,
Never yet abyss was found
Deeper than the Cross could sound."

We and God have business with each other. —Wm. James.

"He takes our yesterdays, dim and old,
Touched with sorrow and sinning,
He gives us instead, with a grace untold.
The year's first dew, and the dawn of gold—
He gives us a new beginning."

We realize our true nature only as we yield ourselves to God. "I live, yet not I"—such is the paradoxical truth of all self-development. —Selected.

The Southern Churchman

I CANNOT TELL why He whom angels worship
Should set His love upon the sons of men.
Or, Why, as Shepherd, He should seek the wanderers
To bring them back, they know not how or when.
But this I know, that He was born of Mary,
When Bethlehem's manger was His only home,
And then He lived at Nazareth and laboured,
And so the Saviour, Saviour of the world, is come.

I cannot tell how silently He suffered
As with His peace He graced this place of tears,
Or how His heart upon the cross was broken,
The crown of pain Lo three and thirty years.
But this I know, He heals the broken hearted
And stays our sin, and calms our lurking fear,
And lifts the burden from the heavy laden,
For yet the Saviour, Saviour of the World, is here.

I cannot tell how He will win the Nations,
How He will claim His earthly heritage,
How satisfy the needs and aspirations
Of East and West, of sinner and of saint.
But this I know, all flesh shall see His glory,
And He shall reap the harvest He has sown,
And some glad day His sun shall shine in splendor
When He, the Saviour, Saviour of the World, is known.

HEARTFELT APPRECIATION FROM A BRITISH SAILOR

Dear Sir and Madam:

Please allow me to extend my heartfelt appreciation for the hospitality you so beautifully extended to me during my leave period. I'm sure that you will understand me when I say that in an instance of this nature words are absolutely useless to express the gratitude I feel for this hospitality. You've really given me a real view of what the American people are when a person has the opportunity, as I did, of getting acquainted with them, and for this service I am once more indebted to you, for, on reaching Portsmouth and Norfolk and trying to get to know people and failing miserably because I happened to be British you can probably realize exactly how I felt in sharing your home, your food and drink, and I can go back home and place the American flag alongside the Union Jack in the eye of my imagination and know with confidence that America also has something beautiful, something to be envied, perhaps, and really something worth fighting for. And so long as it is in my power, so long as breath is in my body, and so long as it is possible for me to use my tongue I shall give America and all that her stars and stripes stand for, the boost and equality that is really hers, not only by origin, which is also my origin, but by virtue of her accomplishments which have gained for her the reputation she has today. I'd be proud to be an American and have such people as I met in Richmond call me friend, to fight for the democracy that she has built up by hard combined labor. And I sincerely hope that at some future date the relationship between your country and mine is so consolidated that war will be no more and peace will bring to my own countrymen the joys and pleasures of the American home as I have seen it.

Please give my regards to all the people I had the pleasure of meeting at your home and allow me to remain always

Your obedient servant and friend,
Tom.

A SOLDIER TO THE CHAPLAINS

October 9, 1943.

Mr. Editor:

Since I myself have never been a military chaplain, I shall not presume to give advice to those men, most of whom are no doubt rendering splendid and valiant service. But if they are as glad as I am in my parish and mission work to get helpful suggestions, I believe they will be interested in and find beneficial the following extract from a letter which I received just recently from a private in the army. The quotation follows:

"I am somewhat disappointed in the work that the army chaplains do. Of course they hold plenty of services and are always ready to see any soldier, but, if they only realized it, they could accomplish much and actually insure a better world after the war if they would only go to the soldier in his company area and hold discussions, etc. I'm afraid very few soldiers here really know what they're going to be fighting for."

and in a later letter the same soldier says:

"I really believe that most of the chaplains fail to realize the readiness with which many of the men would receive their spiritual guidance if they were only sought out."

ALEXANDRIANS

From Pfc. John Welch of North St. Asaph St.

Every Sunday we have Chapel services in the field. The Catholic Mass is at 9:30 A. M. The Protestant service is at 11. The Protestant Chaplain gives us the news flashes. That is indeed a good addition to a service man's Sunday service. Out here in Oregon we do not get much chance to hear the news. The Chaplain explained that his job is to do things to help in many ways. That is one of them. From our Commanding Officers down it is much appreciated. So as well as our spiritual needs he also tries to satisfy some of our physical and mental. The Chaplain is very good on the morale of the soldier in many ways.

From Rev. E. A. deBordenave, Rector on leave of St. Paul's Church, Alexandria, Va., Chaplain, U. S. N. R. Somewhere probably in North Africa.

Until a few days ago my uniform was an old pair of khaki pants and shirt, heavy shoes and a sun helmet. Then it began to rain and overnight our deep dust turned into slimy mud and it still rains. Now my uniform is a rubber hat and coat and gum boots. Also for the past five days all our water has gone into boats and ships leaving here. We've had hardly enough to drink and none to bathe or shave with. It's good fun though. Sunday I held a service and gave Communion to an Army outfit that was waiting to go over. They were camping nearby in an olive grove on a little knoll, and as I read the words "On the night on which He was betrayed" it became more real than it ever had before and I think the men felt it too. . . . The possibility, nay, even probability, of imminent death causes heart-searching which we try rather vainly to create at home. They know they are not worthy to die and they long for some reassurance. Thus they are prepared to hear "the gospel". It is "good news", and one can go right ahead and preach God's love and grace. It is nearly 8 o'clock, time to begin another day's work. One thing before me today is arranging six boxing bouts for tomorrow night. With the city in ruins, not one building or civilian left, any form of entertainment becomes highly important for the men. So I'll be off to borrow a bell from a wrecked ship and bum a lot of other things that are necessary.

PARISH HOUSE TOTAL LOSS

Ogdensburg, N. Y.—The Parish House of St. John's Church was seriously damaged by fire in the early hours of the morning of October 18. Intensified by a high wind, the fire, which was of unknown origin, seriously damaged the adjoining Chapel also. The first notice that anybody had of a fire was the appearance at about 4 A. M. of flames shooting through the roof and illuminating the sky for a considerable distance around the church. The Rev. George A. Palmer, who recently became the rector of St. John's Church, was amongst the first on the scene and, aided by the fire department and many parishioners, helped to fight the fire. Despite valiant efforts, which successfully kept the flames from spreading to the church and the rectory, there was very little of the Parish House left standing except the stone walls.

The Parish House, which was a gift to the Parish by two devoted parishioners, was built about 1914, and was a two-story structure, the loss of which is a severe blow to St. John's Church. The total loss is estimated at approximately $50,000. It is stated that the property is fully insured through The Church Properties Fire Insurance Corporation, a subsidiary of The Church Pension Fund.

HAVEN . . .

By J. W. KENNEDY

AMONG THE MOST trying of experiences is to find a dead battery in one's car when one is in a hurry (or it may be a flat tire). The is acutely so on a hot morning when one is dressed up and must push the car to a point where a coast to an in-gear start is possible. Dirty and clammy one begins the day at a distinct disadvantage if one allows such an experience to cause impatience and lost temper. The entire situation can be aggravated by finding one's favorite recharging station has no batteries and one must search out another. This bit of a true human story happened yesterday to me. I am sure it is a story frequently repeated today when cars are used so little and when batteries, a large part of which is precious rubber, are exceedingly difficult to obtain. It is not the trial of my spirit that I would call attention to but what happened in the search for a battery, new or recharged. I found a place at last. The garage man in answer to my question "Do you have any rental batteries?" replied, "We do not need any. Leave your car here for half an hour. We will connect it up and recharge it direct." I left the car marvelling at another step in the ingenuity of man's devising. It was not until this morning, as I thought over the events of yesterday in the usual detailed check, that it furnished for me an easily remembered picture of what I must attempt to do every day of my Christian life: connect up with God and be recharged direct; it takes only half an hour. The battery is amazingly like us, it is dependent for its power and its being upon an outside source. It goes dead when this power is used up and not replaced. It cannot generate its own. One charging will not store up enough to last for the life of the battery. It must be recharged, by the car generator or by some other source. This whole picture is comparable to the "standing in the need of prayer" theme so frequently to the fore in Haven. If it takes one half hour, in direct contact to renew the life of a battery, we should spend a like amount keeping our spiritual equipment fully stored with the necessary power to keep the motor of life running without the slowdowns and delays from giving out of power and requiring a push. This whole contrast could be carried much further by bringing in a more detailed analogy, using the water which evaporates and must be replenished, the points which corrode and often block the current, the positive and negative connections and what happens when they are crossed, and so on. But right now remember these few thoughts: Power comes from direct contact with the Source. Contact must be frequent. Time enough must be given for a sufficient transfer of power to last through to the next period of direct contact (24 hours is about the human soul limit). A dead battery means a stalled car, means going has stopped.

IN JESUS' LIFE the principle of alternation was firmly established. No day passed but the need for being recharged with God's power direct forced Him to retreat for quiet and renewal. We cannot be up to our most helpful and dynamic self without time apart in contact with this same God. Those who touch our lives will know by the strength of the divine current flowing from us whether we are charged with God's power or not. Many a dead battery has come to life from half an hour spent connected with the Great Recharger at some time of dawn.

The Chaplains' Real Need

THE UNDERSIGNED sponsors of Christianity and Crisis are persuaded that the Protestant Church in America is not fully meeting its responsibilities and opportunities in the religious work among our armed forces. The government has provided unusual facilities for a religious ministry to the men and women in the army and navy. But our opportunities to provide guidance in personal, moral, and religious problems and in interpreting the larger moral and spiritual issues which underlie the war, are being inadequately met. Though the armed services are expanding their educational program, the particular resources which must be drawn from the Christian faith in dealing with world problems are not now being mediated to our service men.

The General Commission of Army and Navy Chaplains has done what it could with the limited resources at its disposal; but its resources are far too meager to meet the opportunities which are open to the church. Letters from many parts of the world convince us that chaplains often feel themselves isolated and inadequately supported by united Protestantism. With the exception of The Link, publication of the Christian Service Men's League, no general literature reaches them; and literature dealing with the larger issues of the war and the nature of the peace which is to follow has not been made available to them.

We are convinced that steps should be taken immediately to expand the church's work among the armed forces, and more particularly its help to the chaplains. We suggest the following items as first steps in an enlarged program:

1—The General Commission on Army and Navy Chaplains should be given more adequate financial resources for its work.

2—United Protestantism, either through the Federal Council of Churches or through the General Committee of Army and Navy Chaplains, should appoint religious leaders of national repute to devote their full time to a ministry to the chaplains, counselling with them, helping them plan religious and educational programs and bringing them together in periodic retreats and conferences. Our plea for such a step involves no criticism of the splendid work now being done on a voluntary and part-time basis by various leaders. But men on full time are needed for this task.

3—Literature dealing with the broader issues of the war and the post-war period and presenting the relation of the Christian faith to the moral issues upon which our nation and the nations of the world must make their decisions, is needed in much greater variety and in larger quantities than is now available.

4—These and other necessary projects of expansion will require considerable funds. We believe that the Church can raise them either from funds now available or by special appeal. At least a half million dollars a year should be made available for a united program.

We know that something is being done along all the lines of advance suggested. But what is being done is not adequate. The Catholic chaplains have a great advantage over our own men through the much stronger and more generous leadership accorded them by their church. Though Catholic chaplains number much less than one-half of our own number, the number of men giving their full time to Catholic chaplains under the supervision of Bishop O'Hara is many times greater than those engaged by us. In so far as our limitations are due to the division of Protestantism, we must make a more vigorous effort to overcome them.

Our Ministry to the Armed Forces

WE SHOULD LIKE to emphasize that, in publishing our statement by members of the Board of Sponsors, calling for an expansion of the Church's ministry to the men of the army and navy, we have no intention of casting any reflection upon the work now being done.

We know that the work of the General Commission on Army and Navy Chaplains, of the Christian Commission for Camp and Defense Communities and of the Commission of Religion and Health of the Federal Council has been invaluable within the limits set by present resources. But we are also persuaded that the largely voluntary leadership which is now used for these services is not adequate for the dimension of the task in hand.

It must be understood that the immediate ministry to the men in the forces is in the hands of the chaplains. The government has provided very generously for this religious ministry and is constantly calling for more chaplains. The Commission on Army and Navy Chaplains can do little more with its present resources than facilitate the selection and induction of ministers into the chaplaincy. The lack lies primarily in the meagerness of the Church's support of the chaplains. Their brief training is primarily designed to induct them into the army and make them acquainted with army procedure. Advice and counsel on religious problems is necessarily minimal in view of the difference in religious traditions, particularly the distinction between Catholicism and Protestantism.

The Y. M. C. A. and Salvation Army are able to offer the chaplains some help; but it must be remembered that the organization of the USO is much less favorable to a full religious program than it was in the last war. The fact is, as is attested by a voluminour correspondence which has come to us, that many

The Proclamation of Liberty

First of a Series of Four on "Liberty"

By WILLIAM MOODY

Leviticus 25:10. "Ye shall proclaim liberty throughout the land unto all the inhabitants thereof".

TODAY, I want to discuss with you some of the things which the Christian Church has to say about "Liberty". The Church has a great deal to say about "Liberty", and what it has to say is tremendously important.

I suppose you have noticed that every movement against liberty in this modern world has felt it necessary to attack the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Why do you suppose that is so? It is because the Gospel, in its purity, is fundamentally opposed to tyranny. And it is because the open Bible is the text-book of freedom.

We ought to realize that the first nation that Hitler conquered on the European continent was Germany. And the only element in Germany which fought a determined battle against Hitler,—and still fights it,—for the freedom of the human spirit, is the Christian Church!

The Bible breathes the spirit of freedom. Freedom is what God wills for the spirit of man, and the Bible witnesses to that fact. Hitler has boasted that his tyranny will last a thousand years, but this what history has to say about it . . . no great and long oppression, no oppression able to maintain itself a thousand years, has ever been able to stand in a nation where the Gospel of Jesus Christ has gained full play. The only thousand-year-long oppressions are to be found in those lands where the Bible is as yet unopened to the masses of the people, and where the Gospel of Jesus has not yet come in force and power.

THE FIRST AWAKENING of the concept of liberty in the great and down-trodden masses of people in Asia in two thousand years has come as a direct result of the preaching of the Gospel there by Christian missionaries in the last hundred years.

It is quite true that many of the leaders in the movement for freedom in India, and in China, and the vast majority of the people of those lands, are not Christians, but the thing which awakened in them the desire to be free can be traced back directly to the preaching of the Gospel in those countries, and to the free institutions,—which are the result of the Gospel,—in our own land, which those people of Asia see, and desire for themselves.

India is the very home of oppression, and has been for countless generations. Fifty million people in that land are outcasts,—untouchables,—without any rights whatever. For centuries they were denied the right even to enter the temples to worship the gods with their fellow men. But the Christian missionaries opened the churches to these oppressed people, and so many of them became Christians that the pagan religious leaders were forced, in self defense, to open the temples to the untouchables. Christian schools gave them their first chance at education. Some of them went on to the universities, and there proved in fine scholarship that not even centuries of oppression could take away from them their God-given heritage of reason and ability. Men tried for two thousand years, and more, to make beasts of them. God's Church showed in one generation that man's brutality had failed!

Millions of untouchables in India still live in desperate poverty and degraduation; but the Christian Gospel has showed the way for them toward better things. It has lighted a torch of hope for those people which shall never be put out.

IN CHINA the mark of Christianity is even stronger. The vast majority of people in that most populous of all nations are not Christians, but the influence of a tiny Christian minority in that vast land is amazing beyond words!

The tremendous will-to-resist, which has sustained the Chinese people through five years of unbelievable combat against the Japanese power can be traced back, step by step, to the patient, and seemingly unrewarded work of Christian missionaries.

Sun Yat-sen, the Apostle of Chinese liberty, the man who more than any other person was responsible for the success of the Chinese revolution, and for the ideal of freedom and unity for the Chinese people which was behind the revolution, was educated in a mission school of the Episcopal Church in Hawaii.

Charlie Soong, the father of that remarkable family of leaders in the modern China,—of which Madame Chiang Kai-shek is a distinguished and gifted member,—was a Christian boy, educated in America, who went back to China as a missionary to his own people. His children and grandchildren are as sternly Christian today as any person in America,—and more than most of us,—and so is the Chinese Generalissimo, Chiang, who is one of the outstanding men of the world in our generation, and whose heroic defense of his country against overwhelmingly superior force, through tremendous hardships and cruel trials, assures him a place as a world figure, not only for our time, but for all time. We did not have any conception of what the Chinese were facing until we went up against it ourselves.

OFTENTIMES we misunderstood what was happening in China in the years before the present war. We did not understand the Chinese very well, and we did not understand our own missionaries very well. The missionaries made many mistakes. Some of them were fanatics, and all of them were human. The Chinese were not easy to convert, and many, through the years, who claimed to be converted were not so at all. They came in because living was hard in China, and there was food in the missionaries house. The average visitor to China, and the average business man over here, could see much to criticize. But he could not see the whole picture. Those schools, those libraries, those hospitals, those churches,—all of them costing money, and all of them with their defects,—failed to convince many observers of their usefulness. I think many of the missionaries themselves failed to see the full significance of what they were accomplishing.

It is only now, since the war, that we begin to see the whole picture, that we can justly evaluate what those missionaries did, not only for China, but for us as well. Why it it that China stands up and fights the Japanese invader, while the rest of the millions in Asia,—with the single exception of the Philippines, take it lying down? That the Chinese are a proud and ancient race helped them; but the first and greatest cause of China's great resistance to cruel conquest is that Christian missionaries taught the Christian doctrine of liberty in Christian schools to those young men who were destined to be China's leaders!

That comes right home to you. Every dollar that has been spent in Christian missions in China is going to pay a rich dividend, not in money, but in the blood of your sons, blood which will not have to be spent in battle because China fights with us, and not against us. If we had spent more money for Christian missions, the dividend would be even greater. By comparison with what we Americans spend for other things, the sums we have spent for Christian missions are wretchedly small. There is a very real sense in which this war is a judgment upon Christian people for their failure to spread the Gospel of Jesus Christ more effectively, both at home and abroad.

NOW, YOU WILL certainly say to me, "How about the missionary money we have spent in Japan?" Do not be too quick to write off our Christian work in Japan as a total loss! The results may not, at the moment, be as apparent there as they are in China, but the results are there. It is not the Christians in Japan who attacked us, but the pagans in Japan. If we had succeeded in Christianizing the leadership of Japan as fully as we have Christianized the leadership of China we might never have had to face the tragedy of Pearl Harbor. And China might not have had to face the tragedy of Nanking.

When you consider the cost of Christian missions which put China on our side in this battle for human freedom, as compared to the cost of the war which we must now wage against the pagan leadership of Japan, and against the pagan Hitler, and the atheistic Mussolini, you begin to see which kind of ammunition is the cheapest, and, in the long run the most effective, —the Christian missionary, with his churches in which men learn the doctrine of human brotherhood, and the worship of the true God, who is the loving Father of all mankind, with his schools, teaching the dignity and worth of the individual human person, and his right to freedom and to the pursuit of happiness as a child of God,—with his hospitals, putting into actual practice before men's eyes the Gospel of mercy set forth in his religion—I say, which is cheapest and most effectively in the long run, that kind of ammunition, or the ammunition of destruction which we are now forced to use against the pagan rulers of Japan, and Germany, and Italy, and against the poor millions they have taught to do their will?

We must use the guns now, and we must pay the price of their use, because we did not use enough of that other ammunition,—those schools, those churches, those hospitals,—in the time when we had the chance to use them.

We should have known all along that the Gospel is the fountain of freedom, and that the Bible is the textbook of freedom, for all of our liberties came out of these things. Our American liberties came out of the Gospel, and of the open Bible. British liberties came out of that same source, too. Wherever in the world there has been an open Bible, and an open proclamation of the Gospel, there has been an awakening of the spirit of liberty. God meant it so. Freedom has been His teaching since He called the Children of Israel out of the House of Bondage in ancient Egypt. It is in the third Book of Moses that we find the words of solemn commandment which have laid heavily upon the heart and conscience of the people of God, and of the Church of God, these thirty-five hundred years,— "Ye shall proclaim liberty throughout the land, unto all the inhabitants thereof!"

St. Paul echoed these words, and summed up the heart of the Divine Revelation from which they came, when he said, "Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is Liberty!"

WHAT A MIGHTY truth that is! How it should be graven upon our hearts here in America, and spoken by every tongue! I pray to God that the terrible struggle and sacrifice of this war may reawaken in us all the knowledge that our liberty is grounded in the Gospel of Jesus, and that we will not be able to preserve any liberty worth the name here in America,—or anywhere else,—if we forget that Gospel. True liberty is of God!

"I will walk at liberty", says the Psalmist, "for I seek thy precepts. I will speak thy testimonies also before kings, and will not be ashamed".—Amen.

OUR MINISTRY TO THE ARMED FORCES

chaplains have had no personal contact with church leaders since they entered the service.

MEANWHILE they face innumerable problems, having to do with their pastoral and preaching functions in which they desire and require help and counsel. This ministry to the chaplains is not completely neglected at present, for church leaders have given generously of their time to visit the camps and the chaplains. But this generosity has its limits, for the men who perform this service have other heavy responsibilities. The fact is that Protestantism, with more than twice as many chaplains as the Catholic Church, gives them only a fraction of the leadership and support which the Catholic Church accords its chaplains. Nor can this work be effectively performed merely by denominational contacts. The chaplains are engaged in an interdenominational ministry and require support by a united Protestantism.

The chaplains have, as far as we know, quite adequate resources in devotional literature. But they lack text books and discussion group guides, pamphlets and posters which would make the Christian faith a resource in forming the minds and consciences of the men on the deeper issues of the war, particularly the ultimate objective of creating a more adequate community of nations. The churches are seeking to crystallize Christian opinion upon this issue at home; and they dare not neglect the men in the armed forces in this matter. The task is the more important since the army and navy have not had adequate educational services and are not likely to deal with the more ultimate spiritual issues even when these educational services are expanded.

The churches have not left any important service completely undone. But they have certainly not been fully awake to the magnitude of the task or conscious of the vast extent of the military parish in which their ministry must be conducted.

Campaign Against Hate

We do not always agree with the editorial policy of P. M. We admire its fearlessnes in handling controversial issues.

However we find ourselves in complete agreement with an editorial in the issue of October 31st. This editorial is a strong attack against the various hate campaigns, that are working more or less sub-rosa, in the country today. P. M. in this editorial says:

"Suppose that each of us signed a pledge that he would not give ear to those among us who bring words of racial hate.

Suppose each of us signed a pledge to protect ourselves against being swept away in the storm by rumors and reports of whatever nature about our brother men.

Suppose each of us signed a pledge not only to do this, but actively to raise our voices against those who spread the evil word.

Suppose we pledged to challenge, to talk back, to argue down, if you please, the man who raises his voice in a slur against the Jew; who slanders the Negro; who cracks coarse jokes at another man because he is a Catholic; who openly, or by inadvertence, gives service to the cause of hate.

Suppose each of us signed such a pledge and sent it to our priest, our clergyman, our rabbi, and asked his help and the help of all the churches to fight this thing and to take the leadership in getting all to enroll.

Suppose those who don't have a church should sign and send their pledge to a mayor or any civil leader, and bespeak his aid to lead the fight.

Suppose we all did this. Then, wouldn't we have given cohesion and movement and direction and a fighting aim to the counterfront so needed to fight the angry fascist storm of hate? Then, wouldn't we have tossed the pebble that might engulf the storm? Then, wouldn't we have taken on ourselves the part that we must play to stop these things?"

P. M. then has a pledge that interested persons may sign. This pledge reads as follows:

"Realizing that unity is indivisible—that the man who speaks against one American on the basis of race, religion, or color, speaks against all—I pledge these things:

That I will not give ear to words of racial or religious hate;

That I will not be misled by rumors or reports and will not spread either about my fellow Americans;

That I will use my voice for whatever value it may have to challenge openly and publicly and on the spot any man who speaks, in seriousness or in jest, along the lines of racial or religious hate."

While we are not convinced that signing pledges is always an effective means of bringing to pass desired changes, we do feel that P. M. should be congratulated on the movement against hate, that it is attempting, in this manner.

As Christians, we must be aware of the fact that there is no place for hate in the Christian religion. Surely race prejudice, and anti-Semitism can find no congenial atmosphere in the mental and spiritual approach of a really convinced Christian. Let us join forces with all secular agencies that are attempting to eradicate from our social life, the poisons of religious and racial hatreds.

Report to the Church

Under the direction of the Presiding Bishop, teams are being sent into all the dioceses, giving a report of the state of the Church. We commend this program and wish for it much success.

It will not be successful unless the Diocesan Authorities, and the individual parish priest, interest themselves in it. The success of any cooperative effort depends in large measure upon the work of the individuals who go to make up that corporate body. We appeal to the Diocesan Authorities and to individual parish priests to support this program. If we are to start a real "Christian offensive," it must start from the ground up.

A clear report on what the Church is doing, will enable all of us to see more clearly what the Church must do, if it is to be an effective agency in the Post-War World.

Ecclesiastical Relations

By RT. REV. JAMES DeWOLF PERRY

FOR A REPORT on relations with the Anglican Communion I shall confine myself to a few questions as to the nature of these relations and to their bearing upon those that we would have with other Communions. The time may not have come for answers to the questions. They have occurred to me in attempting to view clearly the place of our Church in the whole Ecumenical Movement. I suggest them hoping that they may help to clarify the way of approaches to unity in directions that are now, or in the future may be, under consideration.

Unity is a comprehensive word. In our quest of it have we given sufficient thought to the degrees in ecclesiastical relations? They would seem to range all the way from substantial identity, to uncertain attitudes of one Church to another. May I venture to suggest five such degrees of unity:

(1) Identity.
(2) Full Communion, with its consequences.
(3) Mutual recognition with its implications.
(4) Unity sought through reconciliation of differences.
(5) Cooperation between unrelated bodies.

TO BEGIN WITH the first of these, identity: May not relations between the American and other branches of the Anglican Communion be regarded as union within one spiritual and ecclesiastical family? May it be assumed that this relation is derived from a common origin, not from agreements reached through concordat or legislative action? Do the Christian faith, Orders of Ministry, liturgies and Sacraments, constitute a bond which, though permitting differences, holds the constituent bodies together in a corporate entity unbroken so long as the heritage persists? In what ways then will this union which we share help to determine the degrees of unity between ourselves and other Christian Communions? Will the nearest of these be full Communion between Churches whose origin is different but whose content of faith, Orders of ministry and interpretation of the Sacraments are substantially the same? Are we right in believing that union achieved between those of different race and language, but of the same conception of faith and worship, opens avenues to the realization of world-wide Christian fellowship?

Approximating inter-Communion and preparing for it, will not the next degree in unity, the third, be the mutual recognition by two Communions of their equally valid Orders of ministry and their essential agreement upon the Sacraments? Such recognition without full inter-Communion is the present relation of the Anglicant Communion with the Eastern Orthodox Church as represented by the Holy Synod of Constantinople.

Will the next, the fourth, degree in the relation between two Christian bodies be agreement between them based upon statements of faith, Orders of Ministry, forms of worship and administration of the Sacraments, expanding or modifying for mutual acceptance their former doctrines and usages? If this describes in brief the approaches to unity between the Presbyterian and Episcopal Communions; the question immediately rises, in what degree, and in what form, will that unity be sought? Will there be expected union in the fullest sense? If so, what will be the relation, if any, between the proposed united Church and the Anglican Communion on one hand or the Presbyterian Communion on the other? If such complete union is not contemplated, will the approaches result in more than bridges of convenience for explorations across well determined boundaries?

IS THERE NOT a necessary choice between a union so comprehensive, yet confusing, and the fifth degree of relationship found in more complete understanding and close cooperation between Churches who have no reason to consider union? In other words, is not wholesome adherence of a Church to its own vocation and tradition, and an equally wholesome attitude of respect for other Churches, a desirable objective of movements toward unity until ground shall have been prepared, as by the World Conference on Faith and Order and the World Council of Churches, for organic union?

Again, would not the proposed experiment of union with the Presbyterian Church prove to be an exception inconsistent with the policy of federation among all other Protestant bodies?

Arguments for and against proposals of unity on their several merits have no place in this report. Is not the essential question for us, how the present proposal for unity affects relations within the Anglican Communion? This is a blood relationship likened to that which our Lord describes between Himself and the members of the Church; a relationship of branches to the vine drawing their nourishment from the parent stock, finding therein union. Short of such union, shall not the several Churches strive to cultivate the spirit of unity in the bond of peace?

FROM JESUS TO PAUL, by Joseph Klausner. Translated by W. F. Stinespring. New York. 1943. Macmillan. Xvi and 624 pages. $3.50.

Joseph Klausner, the Jewish author of the widely read Jesus of Nazareth, has again turned his pen to the early history of Christianity. The original manuscript of the present work was lost in race riots in Palestine in 1929, but the completely re-worked material now appears under the title of From Jesus to Paul. The book is an attempt to sketch the history of Christianity from the death of Jesus to the death of Paul, with almost exclusive attention to Paul. The whole narrative reflects the author's thesis that without Jesus there would have been no Paul and no Christians, but that without Paul there would have been no world Christianity. Jesus merely over-emphasized certain of the teachings of Judaism, whereas Paul was the actual creator of a new Church of which Jesus had entertained no idea. Since in Klausner's opinion Jesus was simply in the line of the prophets, it is necessary for him to make of Paul the founder of Christian theology in order to account for the rise of Christianity in history. Paul's Jewish training is indeed recognized, but his religious views are largely colored by his contacts with Hellenistic culture. The Pauline emphasis upon grace as over against the Law is for the author the particular proof of Paul's apostasy.

Although they bear but slightly upon the central subject, the sections of the book which deal with the Judaism of the Diaspora, the Pagan World of the day, and Hellenistic Jewish thought are excellent sources of information. The author's knowledge of contemporary New Testament Criticism is also of interest. Klausner shows himself to be thoroughly familiar with Christian scholarship on the subject and on the whole adopts a conservative position with regard to the date, authorship, integrity, etc., of the Book of Acts and the Pauline Epistles. Moreover, he admits that the Gospels are reliable source materials for a knowledge of Christ.

By F. W. Warnecke

WE WHO ARE AMERICA, Kenneth D. Miller. Friendship Press, New Yirk City. 181 pages. $1.

STRANGERS NO LONGER, Annie B. Kerr. Friendship Press, New York City. 181 pages. $1.

THE TRUMPET OF A PROPHECY, Richard Terrill Baker. Friendship Press, New York City. 165 pages. $1.

The newer materials for presentation of the program of the Christian Church are so compelling in their interest that it is a shame that so many groups within the Church still use the casual approach, or remain totally uninformed. "We Who Are America" relates to the present interest in the Church in America. It tells the story of the melting pot, of the making of the nation, and of the varied groups who are America today. It is a fascinating story with deep implication for us. "Strangers No Longer" is thirteen delightful stories of the foreign-born in our cities. Their conflicts, their home-sickness and their longing to discover new friends is brought out. May the Church reach out to them a helping hand that they be "Strangers No Longer". "The Trumpet of a Prophecy!" tells in semi-fictional form how a group of young people set out to think of the remaking of the world. Through letters from their older brothers in the army and navy they are brought into contact with the Chinese cooperatives, public health work in India, Dr. Laubach's campaign for literacy and other great Christian enterprises in the world of today. It would be fine if all of us would read these volumes!

THE CHIANGS OF CHINA, Elmer T. Clark. Abingdon-Cokesbury, Nashville, Tenn. 123 pages. $1.

The story of the Soong family of China would scarcely have been believed if written as fiction. Our present interest in China, our Christian interest in our Christian work there and our personal interest in the Generalissimo and his wife all combine to make this a timely book. It could well be used for programs by Auxiliary and young people's groups. It brings the story right down to the recent visit of Madame Chiang to America.

THE CASE FOR CHRISTIANITY, C. S. Lewis. Macmillan, New York City. 56 pages. $1.

These are two series of English broadcasts given abroad under the titles "Right and Wrong" and "What Christians Believe". The first series argues that the human race has been "Haunted by the idea of a sort of behaviour they ought to practise." This is more than convention, or personal decision. It is a "real law which none of us made but which we find pressing upon us." Thus we are led into the Presence of God. The second series shows the barrenness of atheism as well as its lack of logic. It then goes on to a non-technical explanation of some of the basic Christian doctrines. This slim little volume is especially good because the author constantly reminds us that he is a layman. In his avoidance of the theological jargon he speaks to the layman on his own plane. This is an even better book that the author's "Screwtape Letters" which was rather a tour de force.

A COMPEND OF LUTHER'S THEOLOGY, Hugh Thompson Kerr, Jr., editor. The Westminster Press, Philadelphia, Pa. 253 pages. $2.

Modern interest in Church unity has made us realize also how deeply ignorant we are of the beliefs and background of our sister Churches. All of us have appreciated the importance of Martin Luther and of the Churches which owe their foundation directly to him. Yet few of us have read what he wrote. As the author writes in the preface to this volume "it is difficult to know what to read . . . (when confronted with) . . . eighty very large and ponderous volumes!" This selection of his writings will prove a boon to those who would like to know what the great Reformer wrote and believed. It is well arranged under logical topical headings. There is a good index. It makes surprisingly interesting reading. Luther even exhibits an unsuspected sense of humor on occasion, as when he answered the question of the man who asked what God was doing before the creation of the world. "He was," we are told, "making hell for over-curious people!" This volume deserves a place on the shelf of the parson who would like to understand his Lutheran brethren the better.

A GUIDE FOR A MAN AND WOMAN LOOKING TOWARD MARRIAGE, Roy A. Burkhart. The Hearthside Press. Flushing, New York. 62 pages. Paper.

This is an excellent pamphlet to be given to a young couple planning Christian marriage. It is too bad that there is printed as one of the chapters a rather sentimental "suggested ceremony". The instructions, however, are brief, Christian, and realistic.

THE CHILD'S RELIGION IN WARTIME. Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. New York City. 24 pages. Paper, 10c.

Many parents do not seem to realize that wartime definitely affects the life of even the youngest children. Certainly it brings to them as to grown-ups many puzzling questions in the religious sphere. This is a fine booklet to distribute among parents. Its low cost should insure wide-spread use.

GETTING ACQUAINTED WITH GOD, Robbins W. Barstow. Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. New York City, Paper. 64 pages. 20c.

A book of daily devotions for families with children. Based on the New Testament, it should help parents to conserve the spirit of reverence and the child's innate sense of God.

HOW TO PUT YOUR SUNDAY SCHOOL ACROSS, Basil Miller. Zondervan Publishing House. Grand Rapids, Michigan. $1. 106 pages.

Rather superficial hints to help make a Sunday School grow. One is impelled to repeat the famous reply of Horace Greeley, "Why not try religion?"

INCREASING CHURCH ATTENDANCE, Albert H. Gage. Zondervan Publishing House. Grand Rapids, Michigan. $1.25. 153 pages.

This was apparently written as a course or guide for a young people's group. Each chapter ends with discussion questions. As such it may have merit. But too much of it never gets beneath the surface reasons for lack of interest in Christian worship. Indeed there seems to be too little realization of exactly what Christian worship is.

SUCCESSFUL CHURCH PUBLICITY, Carl F. Henry. Zondervan Publishing House. Grand Rapids, Michigan. $2.00. 226 pages.

This is a repetition of many like books suggesting elementary publicity techniques for the Church. It opens with a survey of religious journalism in the United States. This does not inspire confidence when we find the few paragraphs relating to the Episcopal Church speaking of "The Spirit of Missions", and this amazing statement: "The Churchman" (i. e., of New York City), organ of the High-Church party, in its earlier years opposed every form of interdenominational cooperation and put an end to the possibility of Episcopal-Lutheran coalescence!"

I FOUND THE FLOWERS ALL BLOOMING

I found the flowers all blooming
In robes of loveliness,
And knew God's hand had clothed them
In all their wondrous dress.

Did you recall how Jesus
Had said 'twas surely true,
That God, who clothes His flowers,
Will clothe His children, too?

I heard the birds all singing
Their happy, carefree lays,
And knew God's hand had fed them
Through bright and stormy days.

Did you recall how Jesus
Had said 'twas surely true,
That God, who feeds His ravens
Will feed His children, too?

"THE LIGHT WITHIN"

"I found my way to God through trial and trouble, but when I found Him I was filled with great peace and strength." So spoke Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek to a missionary friend of mine recently.

I have read and heard a good deal about the Generalissimo's religious life, but never anything so revealing and intimate as this humble missionary poured out to me at a luncheon table a few weeks ago in Boston.

Madame Chiang was in Boston to address the student body at her old alma mater, Wellesley. My friend was among her retinue for that event, and thus I was privileged to meet him again.

"I know of one special incident, never told in America before," he said as we sat together in the University Club, "which illustrates a certain childlike simplicity in the Generalissimo's religious faith—a faith that is, to my way of thinking, at the very heart of his great strength and popularity as China's leader."

"I was privileged to live in his home for several months while I was on a special mission of service to China. One morning Madame Chiang arose and went to the Generalissimo's room to call him to the breakfast they usually ate together, consisting of fruit, rolls and milk."

"The Generalissimo usually arose at five o'clock, but Madame slept two hours later. However, the Generalissimo always waited breakfast for her."

"As she approached his room, she heard him pacing up and down, and apparently talking to himself. Because of that, she knocked before entering, a procedure she did not normally follow. Bidden to enter, she said, half in fun: 'Did I catch you talking to yourself'?"

" 'No,' replied the Generalissimo, 'I was just memorizing one of the Psalms'."

" 'But why were you spending time doing that? You will always have a Bible with you wherever you go'."

"The great leader of the Chinese hesitated a moment before replying, and then said, giving her one of his warming smiles, a smile which always wins everybody to him: 'Why I just want to have the Bible inside me, my dear! I want it inside me, so that when I am in an airplane, in a camp, up in the mountains, or on a tramp with my men and have no Bible available, I can repeat the Scriptures over and over to myself'."

"I have been in air-raid shelters with him dozens of times. Frequently, when the prospects are for a long raid, he takes state papers with him—but always, no matter what else he packs along, he carries a small Bible. And invariably, before the raid is over he will take the Bible out of his pocket and open it and read a chapter or two.

"Often he would call me over to where he was sitting and read me a few lines, usually some of what he calls 'the comfort verses', and then would add: 'This Bible seems to fit into our needs now as much as it did into the life of the Hebrews when they were in exile and sang the songs of their Lord in a captive land'."

I ventured an almost impertinent question:

"Do you think it might be that the Generalissimo has adopted religion, as so many leaders do, just as a sort of a wartime superstitious gesture toward God, or perhaps, as a practical gesture toward the Christian nations from whom he gets most of his help? Even our own leaders, you know, are sometimes accused of tacking on Christian climaxes to their addresses just to appease the people or to curry favor with Christian followers."

I didn't know that a missionary could develop so much righteous wrath in so brief a minute as that quiet, ordinarily calm man did at the insinuation behind my question.

The fact is, I confess, I posed the question just to see how my friend would react.

I have never myself doubted the sincerity of the Generalissimo. Here's his reply, spoken with a good deal of warmth:

"I'll say his religion isn't assumed! That man is real all through, and his religion is as real as the 'Good Earth' on which he was born. Every religious word, prayer and hymn Chiang Kai-shek utters is as sincere as sunlight. I have seen that man go through the very fires of hell for his faith. If any great statesman on earth has a religion that really is real, it is Chiang Kai-shek."—From an article by Dr. W. L. Stidger.

WINGS

Very long ago—so the old legend runs—the birds could only hop about on the earth; for they had no wings to soar away into the ethereal blue.

Then, one day, a heavy load in the form of a cross was placed upon the back of the bird; and she knew it was placed there for her to lift. Struggle as she would, however, her frail strength seemed too small to move the heavy weight.

But she did not give up. She tried, and tried again, until at last she succeeded in lifting the load ever so little. One more supreme effort she made; and this time she lifted it quite above the earth.

And then, something happened that was strange indeed. The load grew lighter and lighter, and slowly but surely the bird rose above the earth. Swifter and ever swifter grew her ascent—until suddenly she realized that the load was no load at all!

For no longer was the little bird carrying the cross; the cross was carrying the little bird. Indeed, the cross itself had changed into the form of two beautiful wings, which were bearing the bird upward, into the very blue of heaven.

And that, says the old legend, is the way the bird came to have wings.—Ex.

DEDICATION

"O Thou who dost the vision send,
And givest each his task,
And with the task sufficient strength,
Show us Thy will, we ask;
Give us a conscience bold and good,
Give us a purpose true,
That it may be our highest joy,
Our Father's work to do."

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF THE NEWS

Things That Really Last

Altar Paintings Dedicated on a Distant Battlefront

Boston, Masss.—Writing from some distant battlefront, Chaplain Lesley Wilder, former rector of Grace Church, San Jose, Florida, wrote the Army and Navy Commission about the dedication of a set of altar paintings in the garrison chapel.

"For a Chapel," writes the Chaplain, "we have built a large framework out of logs and covered it with tarps. For pews we have split logs in half and pegged smaller logs in each end for legs. At one end we have built a rostrum, in the center of which rests the altar and behind which a tarp closes off the entire end from the outside. We have an artist in our group who has painted a series of beautiful panels (really murals) to cover the entire end of the Chapel behind the altar. Sunday they were unveiled and the Commanding Officer was present to dedicate them. We made a Festival Service out of the occasion with special music by our soloists and quartet. We celebrated Communion, the place was packed, and most of the men received. Afterward, several men, including a Baptist, a Roman Catholic, and a Jew remarked that it was the most beautiful and impressive service they had ever attended and it was certainly one of the loftiest moments I have known. During the Communion the quartet sang the responses to the Ten Commandments, the Sanctus from the St. Cecilia Mass by Gounod, the Stainer Seven Fold Amen and others. As I looked at those paintings and listened to that music and realized where we were and the nature of our mission, the thing seemed a miracle before which one could only bow one's head and offer thanks. Those are the things that really last, those are the things which sit in judgment upon the uglines and horror of war and that ultimately triumph over it. Never before have I felt so conscious of the power and beauty of the Episcopal service and of the fertile seed which it contains for an eventual union in Christendom. Also I realized that it is a mistake to modify and dilute our Service—something I have been guilty of in the past for the sake of the large preponderance of other Protestant groups and since there were so few Episcopalians. They respect it more as it is and it certainly has more to offer. The traditional Service is quite capable of standing on its own and needs no apology or modification.

A FUTURE FOR CHRISTIAN COLLEGES IN CHINA

Dr. L. F. Chen, Minister of Education of the Chinese Government in Chungking, told President Francis C. M. Wei during last summer, that in his opinion there will certainly be a future for all Christian colleges in China which have been able to weather the storm during these years of difficulty. He said that formerly there were poeple who doubted the quality of training in Christian colleges, fearing that students had been denationalized, but he regards the war as a crucial test, showing clearly that not only the Chinese faculty and students of the Christian colleges, but also their British and American members of the faculty and staff, have shown as much patriotism for China and have stood as firmly for the nation in resistance to the Japanese and Axis powers, as students and faculty of any other colleges and universities in the country.

Further, Dr. Chen said that the national government and the Kuo Min Tang (Nationalist Party) had never been anti-Christian. Whatever anti-Christian movement there had been had come from the Communists.

Thirdly, Dr. Chen said that he feels it will be many years before China will be able to take care of all her educational problems, and therefore any individuals or groups of individuals willing to assist in education will be welcome.

---

"The influence of Christianity in China's social regeneration is unmistakable," declares Bishop Y. Y. Tsu of Kumming and Southwest China. "The young Church of China is acting upon the wise saying that Heaven helps those who help themselves. If we ask your help, if we ask for more missionary reinforcements, it is not that thereby we would shirk our own responsibility. We will carry our own load, but it is a task so great and the time is so urgent that we need you in the Lord's vineyard with us."

WORLD COMMUNITY DAY—NOV. 11

The Woman's Auxiliary is sharing with other groups of Churchwomen of various denominations in urging observance of World Community Day, November 11. Miss Margaret I. Marston, executive secretary of the W. A., points out that "World Community Day fits in with the observance of November 11 as a Church-wide Day of Prayer, which has been the custom of the women of our Church for several years, and also with plans for Forward in Service and the follow-up of the Triennial Meeting of the Auxiliary."

CAUTION

New York, N. Y.—From the National Council comes a caution to editors of parish, diocesan and general Church papers: It is noted that many such editors are printing from time to time, addresses of men in the armed services. Recently, too, articles have appeared, giving quite specific locations of military establishments.

Such publication is in violation of Government regulation, giving as it does, indication of location and movement of troops.

A United Church Canvass

Nov. 21-Dec. 13

The fall date for a United Church Canvass, when 19 national Church bodies will make simultaneous financial campaigns, has been set for November 21-December 12.

While directed from the national office in the Federal Council Building, 297 Fourth Ave., New York, this interfaith movement will conduct the actual campaigns locally. Funds will be raised for the war relief program of the various denominations, which is not included in the National War Fund, and for the regular current expenses and missionary budgets of the local churches and synagogues.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY CONDUCT QUIET DAY

Troy, N. Y.—Under the direction of the Committee on the Devotional Life, Mrs. C. W. Jones, chairman, the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese had a Quiet Day for church women at Trinity Church, on St. Michael and All Angels. The leader was the Rev. H. Boardman Jones and his subject was "Christ's Prescription for Happiness." The meditations continued from ten to three o'clock, and hymns were sung led by Mrs. Ernest V. Stires, a daughter of Mme. Louise Homer.

CHURCH PLANS SUNDAY SCHOOL REVISIONS

Richmond, Va.—Members of All Saints' Church School have started on a new routine. Departing entirely from the conventional Sunday school, the Rev. James L. Kennedy, rector of the church, has outlined a plan, which sets the hour of Sunday school for the younger children at 10:30 A. M. and for those 14 years and over the hour of meeting will be at 4:30 P. M.

This group will combine with the regular young people's service league for a meeting that will last until 7:30 P. M.

The older students will be divided into groups of five with an adult leader in charge, and will take the form of a discussion group rather than the usual Sunday school class.

Each group will study for an half hour, and then attend a worship service. Following the service, they will return to their groups for discussion which will be followed by the regular Young People's Service League supper and business session.

Mr. Kennedy said that he planned to use sound motion pictures with the program and that the group leaders would meet at various intervals to discuss the planned programs.

Adult Bible classes will meet at 10:30 A. M. each Sunday. The younger children will be kept in Sunday school until after the regular morning service is completed.

Rowdyism Against Jews

Governor of Mass. Apoints Excellent Committee to Deal with Problem

Boston, Mass.—A flurry of rowdyism, mainly among boys in their early 'teens with animus directed against the Jews, caused a group of the younger clergy of the Massachusetts diocese to send out through the newspapers a plea that Christians and Jews go out of their way to form personal friendships with one another as the most effective way of cleansing hearts of prejudice and bridging the gap of ignorance that tends to form between groups. All religious groups are asked to co-operate with interfaith agencies in their communities; and churches, schools and the government are asked to begin education on the subject. The signers are Gardiner M. Day and Richard S. M. Emrich of Cambridge, Gibson Winter of Belmont, Howard P. Kellett of Boston and David R. Hunter of Mattapan.

The Governor of Massachusetts has appointed an excellent committee to deal with the problem and the Massachusetts Council of Churches has made its supporting pronouncement, while local editorials have lauded the efforts of the Roman Catholics, Protestants and Jews, in co-operation with the authorities, toward insuring that the petty disturbances remain no more than petty through interfaith action and enforcement of the law.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA

Two Missionaries Leave the Diocese

Roanoke, Va.—In October, 1932, Miss Mary Louise Wood, of Washington, D. C., came to Southwestern Virginia as assistant to Miss Varyetta L. Davis, the missionary in charge at St. Peter's in the Mountains near Callaway in Franklin County. In 1937 Miss Davis retired after having served splendidly at the Mission for thirty years and Miss Wood succeeded her.

At that time Miss Alberta Booth came from Massachusetts to assist Miss Wood and these two have carried on the work together for the past six years.

At the end of August Miss Wood resigned at St. Peter's and accepted a position on the staff of Blue Ridge Industrial School at Bris, Greene County, in the Diocese of Virginia, of which the Rev. Dr. George P. Mayo is superintendent.

In September Miss Booth resigned to take a special course of study at Scarritt College and Vanderbilt University at Nashville, Tennessee.

Lay Readers Carry On

Martinsville, Va.—At Christ Church, whose rector, the Rev. Charles C. Fishburne, Jr., has for some time been a chpalain in the Navy, lay services are being ably conducted by Mr. John W. Shultz and Dr. Roland H. Walker. Mr. Shultz, who is General Manager of Radio Station WMVA at Martinsville, and is a fluent speaker on the radio, broadcasts his services locally, and a prominent professional man of another denomination in the town, after listening in on one of his services, said to a friend: "I have known John Shultz all his life and it never occurred to me that he could make up prayers like those he used today."

A Vestryman Goes to Sea

Buena Vista, Va.—Mr. Clayton Hammond, formerly a vestryman and lay reader at Christ Church, is now in training in the U. S. Maritime Service. Mr. Hammond is offering his assistance in religious services aboard ships or in other capacities in which he might be useful to his chaplain.

HOW DOTH THE LITTLE BUSY "B"

Roanoke, Va.—At the Triennial of the Woman's Auxiliary at Cleveland there were five representatives from the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia: Mrs. Gordon H. Baker, of Roanoke; Mrs. Charles Barnitz, of Wytheville; Mrs. Bessie K. Bullard, of Radford; Mrs. W. W. S. Butler, of Roanoke, and Mrs. John S. Wellford, of Covington; also there is one visitor, Miss Nan Barksdale, of Roanoke.

WOULD HOLD PALESTINE OPEN TO JEWISH REFUGEES

Washington—Expressing the hope that half of Europe's 60,000,000 Jews will survive the Nazi program, Rabbi A. H. Silver started a drive to hold open the doors of Palestine to Jewish refugees.

The move, sponsored by the American Zionist Emergency Council, is aimed at abrogating the British white paper of 1939 which would end next March 31 to Jewish emigration to Palestine.

Only in Palestine, said Dr. Silver, can the Jewish people who escape the Nazis find a refuge, since other countries will be pre-occupied with caring for returning soldiers and rebuilding the economic systems.

He said that the British mandate could absorb 100,000 Jewish refugees yearly beginning immediately after the war.

There are now 600,000 Jews there and 900,000 Arabs.

ANTIOUA OBSERVES CENTENARY

Completing the centenary year of the Diocese of Antigua, British West Indies, Bishop George S. Hand reports that from the special centenary offerings of the extremely poor, who make up so large a proportion of his flock, 1,000 pounds have been received, toward the 10,000-pound diocesan endowment fund he had hoped, before the war started, might be raised this year.

In spite of extremely restricted travel conditions, which are never too easy in his scattered island diocese, he has been able to make his yearly visitation to every one of his missions: he also returned the visit of Bishop Charles B. Colmore, of Puerto Rico, who went to Antigua for the chief centenary observance. Puerto Rico was once part of the Antigua diocese, and during the war many American soldiers have been stationed in Antigua, ministered to, as far as possible, by Bishop Hand and his clergy.

John, the beloved disciple, in Revelations, chapter 21, verses 19, 20, endeavors to express in human language the most transcendant spiritual beauty and permanence of the heavenly city—the everlasting city. He selected, singularly enough, to describe the foundations thereof, beautiful crystalline gems: Jasper, Sapphire, Chalcedony, Emerald, Sardonyx, Sardius, Chrysolyte, Beryl, Topaz, Chrysoprasus, Jacinth, Amethyst, every one of which appears in the minute crystals of

Sends Gift For Church Debt

Corporal in Pacific Aids Campaign

Roxbury, Mass.—To aid the campaign to discharge a Church debt, Corporal Joseph White, serving in the Southwest Pacific sent $25 to his home parish, St. Cyprian's, Roxbury.

Corporal White was confirmed shortly before the war, and he enlisted before the Pearl Harbor attack. He wrote to his rector, the Rev. David LeRoy Ferguson, expressing his pleasure at being able to help the debt campaign and saying, "If I knew where other church members were stationed, I'd inform them about doing their part. A prayer for us soldiers in the Southwest Pacific is always appreciated. There isn't anyone over here who can go without prayers, and we are all aware of it."

St. Cyprian's is one of the Church's large Negro congregations, with a communicant strength of over a thousand.

REFUGEES POURING INTO SWITZERLAND

New York—A total of 21,860 refugees from Europe's war-torn countries and 960 escaped prisoners of war arrived in Switzerland between Sept. 17 and Sept. 27, and the influx continues at the rate of 200 to 300 a day, a Swiss radio network broadcast reported.

The broadcast described a discussion in the Swiss National Council of the grave problems posed for the little mountain republic by tne increasing number of refugees as well as the 58,000 foreign soldiers now interned on Swiss soil.

BISHOP TSU VISITS DETROIT

Known as the Bishop of the Burma Road

Detroit, Mich.—The people of the Diocese of Michigan were honored to have a visit from the Rt. Rev. Andrew Y. Y. Tsu, known as the "Bishop of the Burma Road," during the week following General Convention.

October 15, Bishop Tsu, Anglican Bishop of Kunming and Southwest China, spoke at a mass meeting in St. Joseph's Church, attended by about 400 persons. He spoke of the forces at work in China today, and the difficulty under which they are laboring, and the fact that he has been in charge of the Chinese migration from the east coast of China and is the only Bishop in Free China at present made his address doubly interesting to the people. They were also intensely interested in the fact that he is the representative and close personal friend of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek, famous "Christian General" of China.

Bishop Tsu was introduced by the Rt. Rev. Frank W. Creighton, D. D., bishop of the Diocese of Michigan. Following the meeting, a reception was held at St. Joseph's rectory by the Rev. and Mrs. Wm. C. Hamm, for the clergy and the clergy wives, and vestrymen of St. Joseph's and their wives, to meet Bishop Tsu.

On Sunday, October 17, Bishop Tsu spoke in St. Andrew's, Ann Arbor, in the morning, and in St. Paul's, Lansing, in the evening.

Bishop Tsu is going on to England, where he will continue with leaders of the English Church in discussions of the Church's post-war program in China.

CLERGYMAN WANTS HOMESTEAD

I have served in the ministry 44 years: 25 of which was in the domestic mission field. I have frequently paid the rent myself on the house in which I lived. When the church was unable to pay the assessments on the Pension Fund it was paid out of my salary. I am very near retirement age and am informed I will receive about thirteen dollars per week with which to keep a shelter over wife and me, and to live on. If I only had a little "homestead" or "old farm" where we could live, perhaps we could get along. Investigation as to the truth of these statements invited. Have you a place to sell me? ### BURIAL OF THE SOLDIER BOY

By Wilmer Bryton Elwyn

Dedicated to Lieutenant William A. Daniel

Touch him caressingly,
Lift him with care,
Let your hand blessingly
Rest on his hair,
Looking so innocent, youthful and fair.

Think of him tearfully,
Lay him away,
Muse on death fearfully
Claiming its clay,
Fate sure to all of us coming some day.

Scarce we, beholding him,
Think of him dead,
Death's grasp as holding him,
And his life fled.
Flag furls enfolding him, pillow his head.

Cover him carefully
Over with earth,
Think of him prayerfully,
Counting his worth,
This that remains of him, covering with earth.

Though we have buried him
Under the sod,
Angels have carried him
Up to his God;
Here but the form of him under the sod.

CHINA: Our Greatest Opportunity

CHINA today offers the greatest opportunity for work the Christian Church has ever faced. . . . The whole course of Christian civilization may well be determined in China . . . We must not fail to share with the Chinese all that Christ has given us." These and other comments by men who know China indicate the Church's opportunity there today and in the years immediately ahead.

The sweeping changes which have taken place in China in recent years; the upheaval which has sent fifty million Chinese into the west and southwest of their nation and the resultant mushrooming of cities and towns with the coming of this new population are well known to all.

Perhaps it is not too clearly understood what an important part the Christian Church and more especially our Episcopal Church has played in these developments. The Episcopal Church has been in the vanguard and in the midst of all these changes since the earliest months of the war when our Chinese clergy from the Yangtze Valley shepherded their congregations on the long dangerous journey as refugees from the invasion. The Church, in other words, has been constantly with the Chinese, Christian and non-Christian alike, during their travail. And thereby has been written what is likely to be adjudged one of the most glorious chapters in our Church's long history.

In free China, embracing the western and southwestern portions of the country, our work now includes Hua Chung College at Hsichow near the Burma border; secondary schools at Tsingchen and Maolin; work among students at Kunming; evangelistic work in many places, notably in Chungking, China's war-time capital; clinics and health centers, especially at Hsi Hung, near Maolin, providing the only relief available for miles around.

This task is going forward against what seems to many insuperable obstacles. The cost of living has risen appallingly. The simplest fare in Kunming, for example, costs six dollars a day in U. S. currency, for one person. Teachers at Tsingchen have been working at night by the light of beef tallow candles to conserve expenditures. Clothing costs have risen as much as eight-fold in the past year.

In what is now occupied China, our missionaries are interned but the Chinese clergy and lay leaders are at work and most of the parishes and missions are active. St. John's University, Shanghai, under Chinese leadership, has its largest enrollment. After the war there will be great expansion in the three large districts, Shanghai, Anking and Hankow, which for so many years have been the special responsibility of the Episcopal Church. We must be prepared to meet tremendous needs and opportunities, both in material reconstruction and in personnel.

In spite of all the hardships which our China missionaries face, there is no complaining. Instead, one of them writes: "We cannot tell you the depth of gratitude that stirs us when we think of the way you at home are standing back of us."

Perhaps we should answer: "We have done so little, so late." But above all, we must say: "We are going to do more! More in money to help you meet the tremendous costs! More in personnel to help you keep on with your task!"

The Presiding Bishop puts China at the top of the list of opportunities in the Christian Offensive which he will call General Convention to undertake. China is truly our greatest missionary opportunity today!

THE TIME HAS COME WHEN THE CHURCH MUST LAUNCH A CHRISTIAN OFFENSIVE DESIGNED TO TAKE ADVANTAGE OF SOME OF THE TREMENDOUS OPPORUNITIES RESULTING FROM THE WAR.—The Presiding Bishop.

FOR THEE, O SON, MY SOLDIER

For thee, O son, my soldier,
My heart its watch hour keeps
My every breath comes trembling
My soul cries from the deeps
Lest I no more forever
May hold thee in my arms
As I so oft did comfort
Thy childhood's quick alarms!

My only son, my soldier,
So full of tender grace,
How oft thy feet came running
To seek me in my place!
Now, now they've turned them from me,
When manhood's reached at last,
To bear upon thy bosom
The hatreds of the past!

My son, O dear, my soldier,
How strange it seems that thou
Who wept for a dead robin
Must change, be ruthless now!
And though, to save thy country,
Hell's shocks must be withstood—
The teaching of the Master
Is yet thy only good!

Son, wheresoe'er thou strivest
My heart strives with thee there,
Remember, I am living
For thee in constant prayer!
And when the bloody horror
Strikes in they mortal hour
Oh, rest thee on thy Saviour,
His love is all thy power!

CAR NEEDED

Worker Among Navajo Indians Appeals to Churchman

November 1, 1943.

Mr. Editor:

Miss Virginia B. Gesner, after successful missionary work first at The Good Shepherd Mission, Fort Defiance, and latterly in the Diocese of Sacramento, is returning to her first love and goes into residence at a little settlement strategically placed, from which she will be able to do intensive work in a field which for years has been cared for from The Good Shepherd Mission itself. This field consists of the Central Indian Agency—the headquarters for all the work on the far-flung Navajo Reservation,—plus the Settlement at the Government Coal Mine several miles away and all the people in that general area. For this she needs a car as there is absolutely no public conveyance operating on the Reservation.

The Executive Board of the Woman's Auxiliary have ruled that their policy does not include the purchase of a car. The Good Shepherd Mission, nor the District of Arizona, has any such amount either.

I, therefore, appeal to some one, or some parish, or some diocese, to provide us with such a car. In this country used cars bring such outrageously high prices that it would be better all around if a new car could be provided. This offers a wonderful opportunity to be of great use to the development of the Church's work among the Navajo Indians and those who work with them.

Walter Mitchell,
Bishop of Arizona.

The Bishop's House, Roosevelt Street, Phoenix, Arizona.

REGARDING FASTING

Mr. Editor:

Regarding fasting Communion, as reported in the special article in The Living Church, certainly that reporter used an unnecessary simile. Our trouble is that frequently people make "railing accusations" against large groups, without sufficient thought, or charity. This is exemplified on page three of the current Southern Churchman, where without exception or amplification we are told that "Italy and the other deluded nations disregard the precincts of the sacred in man." Whereas it is the sentence following in "Haven" which is of value, namely, that "it is how much we can forgive and rewin of their souls that will make the zeal for the house of freedom worth whatever has been consumed".

I do not believe that the majority of fasting partakers would agree with the simile used as quoted from The Living Church. Personally I believe that cleanliness within the body is about as important as washing the outside. However, I think that most women will take the report as the excited exclamation of a wrought-up woman; and perhaps she should be "more pitied that censured".

Thom Williamson.
Narragansett, R. I.

NEWS ITEMS OF THE CHURCH

New York, N. Y.—English churches in Palermo and Taormina, Sicily's best-known towns, are intact and the latter is in use by Army chaplains, according to information received in the Gibraltar diocesan office in October.

British bishops in various parts of Africa continue to report numbers of men confirmed. In Algiers, Bishop Buxton of Gibraltar, recently confirmed 48 men on behalf of Bishop Morris of North Africa. In Tunis, the English Church which had been closed for six months, was opened with the arrival of the British Army, and although the church seats only 120, a bishop from New Zealand had a confirmation service in it for 190 candidates. In the diocese of Gambia on the West Coast, Bishop Daly confirmed 36 African soldiers at a military hospital near Bathurst, and nearly 60 Africans at another station.

Internment of two British bishops is reported through the Red Cross: Bishop F. S. Hollis of Borneo, with six of his clergy and three women missionaries, is in the Borneo Internment Camp, John Wellington, bishop of Shantung, the diocese next to Shanghai, is in one of half a dozen camps near Shanghai, where 20 or more of his staff, men and women are also interned.

SCHOOLS FOR ADULT EDUCATION IN SESSION

Boston, Mass.—Diocesan Schools for adult education are now in session in all three of the Massachusetts arch deaconries. The central one, located in St. Paul's Cathedral on eight Thursday evenings through November 18, offers a choice of courses at three sessions, and gives specialized training to lay-readers on the Bible, Prayer Book, and Voice. Outstanding in appeal is Bishop Raymond A. Heron's series on an approach to the Bible through a study in personality; Dr. James Grier Miller's psychiatric course on understanding people; and a series of addresses under chairmanship of Archdeacon Arthur O. Phinney, on understanding modern youth, given by experts in religious, educational and welfare approaches. The schools are under auspices of the Diocesan Department of Religious Education.

BISHOP OLDHAM PARTICIPATES IN TWO CORNERSTONE ANNIVERSARIES

Morris and Sidney, N. Y.—On the Eve of St. Luke's Day, Bishop Oldham happened to combine with his initial visitations in the Deanery of the Susquehanna the observance of two significant anniversaries.

The first was for one hundred and twenty-five years since the laying of the cornerstone of Zion Church, Morris, commemorated by a parish corporate Communion. At the same time St. Paul's Church, Sidney, had a parish Communion marking the fiftieth anniversary of laying its cornerstone. Bishop Oldham preached the sermon at the former service and confirmed a class and preached at Evening Prayer at St. Paul's. Zion Church, the Rev. L. Curtis Denney, rector, is a rural parish, including the surrounding countryside. The Rev. Robert H. Moore is rector of the Sidney parish which now serves a community created by a vast war industry.

HAVEN . . .

By J. W. KENNEDY

LAST NIGHT I discussed the question "how to talk to someone about Christianity" with a group of young people. Earlier I sat in on a forum discussion centering around the meaning of Christ, who is the center of our universe; again with young people. Still earlier in the afternoon I sat with another group, this time of adults, to consider seriously how to pass along the fruits of our belief in Christ. The whole point of what I am recalling is that both young people and adults are busy at the supremely important task of "knowing Christ and making him known". In each group we found ourselves tacking every thought under one of three headings: 1. Keeping responsibility and opportunity always ahead. 2. Keeping Christ central. 3. Finding something of the eternal in everything temporal. As we pondered Jesus' life we learned some of the reasons why crowds came from far and wide because they had "heard of the things he was doing". Most of them came with some disease or sickness. (Matthew lists demon possession, epilepsy and paralysis.) For He cured so many people that all who had any ailments pressed up to Him to touch Him—"because power went forth from him and cured them all". Even in this period of conflict in Galilee, the record of which begins with Mark 3:7, the growth of Jesus' following was rapid. Those who came because of some physical suffering went away rejoicing in their forgiveness of sin also.

In the earlier pages of the gospels we do not find an analysis of the causes and the cures, but we gather from the results that a great many of the causes were conflicts within, not yet resolved, which had produced all manner of frustration and functional disorders, even blindness and paralysis. There is frequent reference to demons who were cast out and who picturesquely converse with Jesus, their arch enemy. The badness in man always screams "bloody murder" when the hand of goodness writes doom upon the wall of time.

Most of my work yesterday was the attempt to get people so close to Jesus that the touch of His hand upon theirs would result in a transformation of their desires and start such a complete following of Jesus' mindways and heartways nothing could ever win them away from Him again.

UNTIL WE COME CLOSE enough to Jesus, that is, delve minutely into the record of His life wherever it is written, to understand His viewpoint, the way He thinks and feels, we shall find it difficult to succumb to His influence. Mark, Matthew and Luke bear unanimous testimony that any contact with Christ did something to individuals and they were never quite the same again. If we have not yet experienced one of the life-uplifting moments in His presence, try this plan following "Haven" this morning:

Try to picture Christ as you imagine Him to be, as an actual flesh and blood person. Gazing at or remembering Sallman's Head of Christ will help materially.

Jot down all of the things you see written in His face. Such words as poise, vision, courage, stature, wisdom, faith will soon appear on the pages of your notebook.

Take one of these characteristics and with the picture of Jesus still in front of you pin it down and find where Jesus got it. Take poise, for example. His poise came from an inner assurance of a God on whom one could depend for strength and guidance. Therefore, Jesus was prepared to face and to choose. Faith in God was the center and circumference of His life. That is His secret.

We should then compare notes with the poise or lack of poise of our own yesterdays and this coming today. Have we placed our confidence in this God or in self? Have we been able to meet disturbing moments with calm assurance of His presence? Just looking at this imagined portrait of Jesus should arouse desires strong enough to hold our feet steady as they walk, our hands accurate and friendly as they work, our faces (eyes and mouth) happy and alive to every other creature as they reflect a bit of the glory of this moment of devotion at the crack of dawn.

Acts 22:28. "With a great sum obtained I this freedom."

THESE ARE THE WORDS of the Chief-Captain of the Roman garrison in Jerusalem, and they were spoken to St. Paul, whom he had rescued from mob violence in the Temple Area. The Chief-Captain, according to the custom of that day, had ordered the Apostle beaten with the cat-o-nine-tails to force some confession of wrong-doing from him.

The Apostle asked, "Have you the hardihood to flog a Roman citizen?" When the Chief-Captain heard that, he immediately countermanded his order for the flogging because he knew that Roman citizenship carried with it certain liberties which might not be lightly regarded. The Roman State protected its citizens in those days, and woe betide any person who caused a Roman citizen to be flogged uncondemned.

Not everyone under the jurisdiction of the Roman State was a Roman citizen. The high liberties of that position belonged to relatively few. In that day the privileges of Roman citizenship might be bought—but not cheaply. Citizenship was a valuable prize to be diligently sought with a life-time of hard work, for to become a citizen meant deliverance out of the hands of innumerable petty magistrates, local courts, and local regulations, into the wider justice of the Roman Courts and of the Roman law. It meant that some of the dignity and sanctity of the great Empire settled like a cloak upon the shoulders of the citizens of that Empire.

So it was that the Chief-Captain looked with surprise upon this quietly-dressed, seemingly undistinguished fellow whom he had rescued from the mob, who now claimed to be a Roman citizen. The Chief-Captain was also a citizen of the Empire. He had purchased his citizenship. As he looked at St. Paul the picture of what citizenship in the Empire was actually worth,—as illustrated by the scene before him,—flashed through his mind. And he remembered what a staggering price he, himself, had been forced to pay for it. So he said,—more to himself than to the Apostle,—"With a great sum obtained I this freedom!"

And St. Paul replied, "But I was born free!"

I HAVE CHOSEN this little story as a background for what I have to say, because I think it will help us to understand certain simple but very important things about the liberty which we have here in America, and which we are now called upon to defend in a great and cruel war.

The first of these things is,—obviously,—that liberty is costly, even for those who have been born free!

The moment you begin to talk about liberty here in America today a certain amount of unreality enters at once into the discussion, both for the speaker and for the hearer. Our talk about liberty is apt to be unreal because we have no real conception of what it means to have no liberty.

We read about the sufferings of the French people under the heel of the cruel conqueror,—two ounces of butter a month for a man working hard to make munitions for the armies of his conquerors, half a pound of meat a month, one egg a month if he is lucky, no fruit, few vegetables even in summer, a few quarts of clammy flour made more of potatoes than of wheat—we read about it, and then go and sit down to a good meal. And as we eat it we complain about how dreadfully we are being rationed. We have no idea, as yet, how deeply liberty can be cut!

We read,—over a good breakfast,—that fifty Norwegian hostages were shot by the German conquerors yesterday as a reprisal for British raids. We put the paper aside. But who were those hostages? Did they have anything to do with the raids because of which they were shot? No. They gave their lives because the conquerors could not catch those who helped the raiders.

Then who were those hostages? One of them was the school teacher. Another was the mayor of the town. Another was the president of the local bank. One was a fifteen-year-old boy whose mother had sent him to hold her place in the bread-line. They took him because they had orders to shoot fifty, and could only find forty-nine.

Do we have to wait until those names are home-town names before we realize how deeply liberty can be cut? Someone ought to tell us until we understand it thoroughly that in this war it is winner take all! We cannot lose this war and keep our liberty!

Like St. Paul, we have been born free; but unlike St. Paul we have never lived close enough to real tyranny to know it by experience for the dreadful thing it is; nor to know, by very contrast, the preciousness of liberty!

AMERICANS HAVE not always lived so far away from tyranny. American boys of an earlier day fought, and many of them died, to put tyranny away from us, and to keep it away. They knew what liberty is worth because they paid what it costs to get it. Like the Chief-Captain in Jerusalem nearly every generation of Americans has been able to say, "With a great price obtained I this freedom!" Now it is our turn to learn to say it.

Now, there is a downright practicalness in St. Paul's talk about liberty with that Chief-Captain in Jerusalem. I am going to put it into modern idiom. Here is a police officer,—for that, in effect, is what he was,—who has just called out the riot squad to pull a man away from a mob that was beating him to death. To cause a riot in the explosive city of Jerusalem is against the law.

"What did you do to cause this disturbance?" asked the Chief-Captain.

"I did nothing," replied the Apostle. "I was attacked without cause!"

"All right, boys," said the Chief-Captain, "take him into the back room and see what you can get out of him."

"Are you in the habit of flogging Roman citizens?"

"What did you say?"

"I said I am a Roman citizen!"

"Wait a minute, boys! I can't take a chance on this. Can you prove your citizenship?"

"I can."

"Take your hands off him! Didn't you hear what

The Glorious Christian Ministry

Address at the Virginia Seminary Commencement, Sept. 9, 1943

By LT. CDR. LESLIE GLENN, CHAPLAIN, U. S. N. R.

TWENTY YEARS AGO, almost to the day, I arrived for the first time, on this Hill. By mistake I had come a day too soon for the opening of classes that fall. It was a pleasant mistake. I wish I had come two days early, or a week, or a year early. I could not have come too soon, or in the years that followed, too often. And the first thing I want to say today is thanks to the Virginia Seminary, to which I shall always be indebted.

Of the giants on the faculty in those days, no one is left but Dean Zabriskie. There is a rumor that he was teaching here in Civil War days, but that is untrue. It's a marginal gloss. I can testify that he was only a Seminarian when I entered. I shall give you no reminiscences, no history, nor shall I attempt to explore any of the possible differences between those days and now. I mention twenty years ago because since that day I have had an extremely happy life, and I believe that I owe this in no small measure to this place.

I came into the ministry the hard way. My home was religious, but not articulate, we had no family prayers or grace before meals. I always went to poor parishes and I don't mean financially poor. They were common-place, with dull sermons. I never saw the church in strength or great effectiveness. We were brought up to go faithfully, however. But there was naturally a great deal of uncertainty about taking a step so unusual for one of my acquaintance, as going into the ministry. After college, where I was trained to be an engineer, I spent a year of indecision and mental stress in business and another year teaching school; but from the day in September, 1923, when I walked into St. George's Hall in the Seminary and knelt beside that bed, I have never had a moment's doubt. I can subscribe to what Cardinal Mercier said near the end of his life,

"Like every other mortal, I have known joy and I have known pain; but I have never been unhappy."

ONE of my chief interests has been to get more men into the ministry. I constantly preach about it to Midshipmen now. My Commanding Officer says I am not the best preacher he has ever heard, but I am the most ingenious, because, no matter what text I give out, the subject always returns to the necessity of many of them going into the ministry as soon as the war is over. I tell them that the war gives them another chance to decide their life work. As it did to Jonah, the call of God may come to them a second time when they are demobilized.

This introduction is longer than I generally approve when criticizing in Homiletics, but I made it long and I hope emphatic, because my subject is the difficulties of the ministry, and I want you to consider them against the everlasting truth in the background, that there is no higher calling in the world. Roland Cotton Smith, who was born in a Rectory and became a clergyman, said, "If you are born on the top of a mountain, what is the use of going down?"

I divide the subject into three parts. That again, I learned here, and I have never been able to improve on it. The temptations of the ministry are physical, mental, and spiritual.

I

In their most elementary form they are physical, turning stones into bread. We are sometimes blind to the force of this metaphor, because we take it too literally. We think we are not tempted this way because we haven't the power to turn stones into bread. As a matter of fact, we have. It means partly the power to get bread easily. In the beginning it was said, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread." That isn't true for us, and we have to make it true or we aren't turning stones into bread.

Bishop Lawrence often said that every clergyman could not preach a good sermon, but every clergyman could have a clean church. "I'd have the best lawn in Massachusetts," he said. "There is no excuse for crabgrass as long as you've got strong fingers and can bend over!"

BUSINESS MEN are indulgent about our failure to answer letters, but it's a shabby thing. Spiritual gifts are one thing, but writing letters on time is simply a matter of denying ourselves sleep.

St. Francis served His Lord at first by rebuilding a church with his own hands. Most of us are glad enough to work with our hands as occasions demand. The stories of clergy in floods and other emergencies, or the stories of chaplains serving in any way they can at the front, illustrate a kind of physical energy which is one of the glories of the ministry.

The heart of the temptation is really not here. It lies, I believe, in what Neibuhr calls a kind of un-Christian mysticism that tries to avoid the physical universe. It is almost like the ideal of the rapidly disappearing Chinese gentleman who disdained soldiers, farmers, and servants, and whose badge was the long finger nail.

We remember that we are to avoid serving tables and that's all right; but the tables must be served, and we are not better than the people who serve them; we just happen to be excused from this so we may give ourselves to the ministry of the Word. But the one who serves tables is feeding us. And if he stops doing it, we must do it, for if you don't eat you can't pray.

Our Lord said, "Man does not live by bread alone." He does live by bread, however, although not bread alone. Here I shall throw in a few examples tumultuously, as Kierkegaard said.

Clergy sometimes look down on Y. M. C. A. secretaries. All they do, we think, is provide gymnasiums, cheap rooms and pleasant surroundings for strangers, pool tables near Navy Yards. They are really doing what we talk about. Or we say we are not social workers with card indices and a case load. They don't like us any more than we like them, I am afraid, and this is one of the saddest things in our communities today, the estrangement between the one who talks and the one who does. It is three-quarters the talker's fault; he is supposed to be more appreciative and articulate.

Sometimes we say of a fellow clergyman, "he's a Rotarian," and that means he's on the school board, he raised funds for the Public Library, he is chairman of the hospital clinic. These things, and many like them in the community must be done. If someone else will do them and leave us to do other things, good; if not, we must find the physical energy to do them.

The Archbishop of Canterbury makes what he calls the quite outrageous statement that this world can be saved from political chaos and collapse by one thing only, and that is worship. This is not an outrageous statement to us, we agree with it, and for that very reason, we must set it against the Archbishop's other statement that Christianity is the most materialistic of all religions.

IN THE DAYS AHEAD, building the peace will be a technical problem as well as a moral and spiritual problem. It's a matter of organization, of credits, of trade, of the use of power. We may be experts in the moral and spiritual, but we must not despise the technician, for without him, we are lost. Every moral problem has a technical side just as every technical problem has a moral side.

All of this failure to understand the physical springs from lack of courage about our ministry. In essence, our situation is like that of the peasants we read about on Polish trains shortly after the Germans overran that country. The people were transferred in cattle cars for hundreds of miles, sometimes without food or doctors. It was observed that in cars where someone could sing songs about Poland or read the Bible to them, or preach, the people survived the ordeal, and in cars where no one spoke they died even when they were not cold or hungry. "Like sheep not having a shepherd," our Lord said compassionately. The one in society who stands up and talks is the minister. Who tells him to speak? How does he know it will help? Those are the hard questions, and sometimes the strain of that uncertainty is so great, that if he seems, through God's grace, to be helping people, he may make the appalling error of supposing that he is sufficient, that the train does not need an engineer, or that doctors are superfluous, or that those who feed the people sandwiches are doing a menial task. We all need courage to proclaim that man does not live by bread alone, let us not try to bolster that courage by saying that man doesn't really need bread at all but only what we can supply.

II

THE SECOND PLACE where courage is required is in overcoming mental laziness. One day when I was a student here, my room-mate and I were washing his Ford over by the Post Office. Bishop Tucker came by and found us hard at work. The next day we were not well prepared in class. Probably it had no connection, but the Bishop remarked that mental laziness was more subtle than physical laziness, and one often tried to hide his mental sloth by a great bustle of physical work. After that we washed the car behind the barn! My room-mate has since become a distinguished Bishop, and when he received a D. D. Degree from this Seminary, Bishop Tucker mentioned that he remembered him in the Seminary swinging by his knees from the water tower. He was swinging from the water tower, it can now be told, because he was trying to distract the Bishop's attention from the fact that we were washing that car again.

Mental laziness can be covered by physical activity, and as Bishop Tucker further told us that day, spiritual laziness can be covered in turn by mental industry. It is what the psychologists call the substitution of a minor for a major loyalty.

Our mental task is more important to us than any physical task, even if it is only the mental exercise of appreciating the physical labor of the world. Of course, it is much more than this and to maintain it takes courage.

Courage to say No to distractions. To return to the Polish Refugee train, what is required is the courage to sit in the corner of the baggage room before the journey starts, praying and desperately trying to scribble something to say in case we have a chance later to speak. All around us people are gathering food, and medical supplies, and that is absolutely essential, but for us it is equally essential to have something to say when they look up to us later.

Our Lord's temptation on the mountain might be described as an intellectual one. In a sense it could happen only to an imaginative person who could see all the kingdoms of the world in a moment of time. The adversary argues by indirection which requires mental effort to see through. The unthinking are swayed by suggestion. "Tell them big lies, and repeat them" is Hitler's declared cynicism for dealing with the ignorant. The minor premise in the devil's argument is put almost casually, in an aside, "All this glory is mine, and to whomsoever I will, I give it." Our Lord did not reply that He did not want the kingdoms of the world. He very much wanted them. But His mind went straight to the catch in the argument. The kingdoms of the world do not belong to the devil; they aren't his to give away. "Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve."

OUR LORD REMARKED once on our ability to read the sky and understand the weather, and our inability to discern the signs of the times. Who really controls the world? How is God seen in history? These are fundamentally intellectual questions, answered by study and observation. One illustration is enough today, the general failure of the clergy to understand the war.

For twenty years we were saying that we were opposed to the last war (this did not come from reading our diaries, this is what we thought as we looked back). Though opposed to war, we saw ourselves as gradually pushed into the last war by the munitions makers and international bankers and militarists. Never again! In the first place another world war would never come, but if by some chance it did, some clergy of course might be untrue to their ideals and support it under pressure, but the rest would go to prison. The war has come, not many clergy are in prison, the one or two conscientious objectors I know are not saying anything. Is it because the pacifist clergy have lost their courage? No, it is because they have changed their minds. What certain newspaper writers and statesmen saw in 1938, they saw in 1941 (in December to be exact). We can't fault the clergy for lack of courage. We all know that men would go to prison cheerfully today if they did not believe in the war. But we can fault them for lack of thought. They are preaching now a war which they did not see coming, which they did not prepare for (to the loss of thousands of lives), and which they never understood until the honor roll in the church porch and bereaved widows and parents made them understand.

Or do you still have the uneasy feeling that it is a ghastly mistake which we got into in some utterly unpredictable way, in a world where God's judgments are no longer true and righteous altogether? That we have prayers, and refer to the defeat of tyranny in our sermons, only because our people are suffering, and there is a spirit abroad of fellowship and dedication which we cannot ignore, however mistaken it may be? Do you think, then, that it is enough if the clergy are simply sensitive reporters of the moods of their people? Is it embarrassing to American Christianity that the signs of the times were discerned by Churchill and Roosevelt, by commentators like Dorothy Thompson and Walter Lippmann and not by the church papers or most of the sermons prior to 1942?

If these things are true, they are worth saying now, because they may rouse us to the more important task of understanding the coming peace. When we fail, the fault is almost entirely an intellectual one, and comes from a poor background in theology and a meagre acquaintance with contemporary affairs.

In building the peace, it will be good to change our minds, but we've got to do it faster. It won't be enough to be an echo of public opinion, part of the chorus. Everyone has his own radio; it is of no interest to repeat in Sunday's sermons what the commentators have said all week. We are called to be prophets, and prophecy is primarily intellectual courage, the nerve to trust what you see and read and what is given you in prayer.

It does no good to hide behind the thought that we are preaching the changeless gospel. The gospel is eternal because it has a contemporary application. And the very ones who grasp the gospel in its theological formulation have the most penetrating vision of things to come. An acquaintance with the classics is the key to the future.

III

LASTLY, COURAGE is needed in the realm of spirit. Our Lord's last temptation was to throw Himself down from the Temple so that God's power could have an unmistakable physical demonstration. When the crowds later demanded a miracle, that cry awakened an echo in His own heart. The more religious you are, the more you want this miracle. But it is always asking for a certainty that is not permitted in this world. And that you and I also will always be looking for and must forever deny ourselves.

Take any rigid theory of Grace. The notion that the Holy Spirit is given in just such a way to a limited group, and is transmitted only by these means, (so that you can actually see on paper lists and dates, with the same eyes that could have seen the body fall off the pinnacle of the Temple and be caught by angels), is the materialization of the spiritual. This is not the same thing as belief in sacraments. A Sacrament is an outward and visible sign, never the only outward and visible sign. It is the claim of exclusiveness that is the sure mark of lack of faith. Exclusiveness bolsters courage. Exclusiveness so localizes the power of the spirit that no one presumably can deny it, and courage becomes less necessary. The men of every generation seek such a sign and no sign shall be given. Let us see this again by example.

I venture to think that some men throw themselves down from the pinnacle of the temple by making themselves unattractive. Let God send His angels so that there will be no question whose is the power! Now we know that human gifts can lead to vanity and be a barrier between a priest and his people. But to be unattractive on purpose, to be careless of our appearance, to try to make our reading and preaching monotonous, is a kind of desperate expedient which is not far from tempting God.

Professor Dodd, of Cambridge, begins one of his recent books by saying, "I want to remind my readers once again that the common people heard Him gladly". Our Lord was not an official minister, a mechanical mouthpiece for an exclusive avenue of grace. He was a carpenter, a fellow townsman, whose person and words held the promise of more life than had ever been seen. They wondered at the gracious words which proceeded out of His mouth. He taught them as one having authority and not as the scribes. It is what Dean Zabriskie used to call the difference between real and constituted authority.

I talked last week with a retired Chaplain Admiral, who is one of the priests working with the Military Ordinariate under Archbishop Spellman. He has been twice around the world visiting chaplains in all the fleets. I asked him what he told them. He grew vehement, "I tell these young fellows to stop trying to hide behind their office. They may get away with it in the outside world, but in the Navy if they don't like you, they'll freeze you out. I've seen devout Catholic Commanding Officers sidetrack a stuck-up priest so that all he's doing is minding a library and playing checkers with his yeoman."

Now playing checkers is not confined to the Navy; some people are playing checkers in the outside world. And it happens when the clergy, to bolster their courage, claim a mechanical system which supposedly controls the spirit. "I tell you, God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham."

"The wind bloweth where it listeth."

Spiritual laziness may never be covered by a supposed physical system, nor can it be covered by mental activity. Charity is the greatest, not faith or hope. "The harlots and publicans go into the kingdom before you." I'm afraid that sometimes refers to us.

Agape is the norm, not gnosis.

"Christianity taught us to care," said the Roman Catholic theologian Von Hugel, "Caring is all that matters".

ONE GRAVE DANGER of the ministry is that it is possible to be proud of the achievement of orthodoxy, or to be sure of a mechanical system, and then it becomes your duty to eliminate those who will not agree with you, always for their own good. The Fascism which we are fighting in politics today was really learned from the thoroughly logical, completely consistent Catholicism of Rome. Roman Catholicism is not totalitarianism in the church; totalitarianism is Roman Catholicism in politics. When Franco won in Spain, he gave education back to the church; Petain did it in France. If you are tempted to admire this in history, watch the events of the next twenty-five years. Or look back for two hundred years at the history of Ireland, Spain, Mexico, South America and Italy. God is not mocked. To force people as Jesus never forced them in His life, is to go God one better. We may never have the power to persecute minorities, we may think we never would have the desire. Let us go further and give up all theories of exclusiveness that logically lead to persecution. Let us ask for the courage to trust in Christ's spirit without reducing it to mechanics or syllogisms. One of Cardinal Newman's mottoes was "Holiness not peace". Peace comes sometimes from what the psychologists call integration on a lower level. There's a lot of downright peace in scrubbing an automobile when you ought to be studying theology. And there's a lot of peace in rehearsing doctrines when you ought to be seeking holiness.

And, gentlemen, holiness is our goal.

Our Lord is alive today, so are His enemies, the very same enemies. We often think He came to supersede paganism; he said He came to supersede pharisaism. "The scribes sit in Moses' seat." That also may refer to us. We are the successors of the official ministers who were His enemies then. If there were Pharisees in His day there will be Pharisees today.

When a novelist or playwright tries to show clerical life this is what he hits on—the fight within the church against compromise—the truth of Christ contending constantly against the truth as men see it. You and I know the novelist often does it badly because he represents the devil as the Bishop or the Senior Warden. Whereas the devil is ourselves, within us. The brave young curate wants to clean up the slums, but the rich vestryman, to whose daughter he is engaged, won't allow it. That's usually the threadbare plot. The real drama is the rebellion against the moral law which is in all of us. We are serving a God in whose sight no man living is justified.

As Niebuhr says, "The final enigma of history is, therefore, not how the righteous will gain the victory over the unrighteous, but how the evil in every good and the unrighteousness of the righteous is to be overcome." If you love the Church, this must be your constant concern.

I end as I began; there is nothing in all the world as glorious as the Christian Ministry. I am sorry for those who have to do other things in this life. And for the trials and tribulations which I have been gloomily rehearsing to you, as I wish you Godspeed, I give you what Walter Scott wrote about Quentin Durwood: "He rushed on danger because he loved it, and on difficulties because he despised them."

THE COST OF LIBERTY

he said? I would hate to tell you what it cost me to get this freedom for myself!"

"But I was born free!" said the Apostle.

There you have it! Both these men knew exactly what they were talking about! Had the police a right to take this man they had picked up into the back room to flog a confession out of him? No! He was a Roman citizen! Paul of Tarsus escaped that flogging because of certain liberties which were his by birth, liberties whose great value he knew not by theory but by experience, liberties which the Chief-Captain respected because he shared them.

But there had been a time when this question of liberty was just as much a theory to St. Paul as it is to many Americans today. As a young man St. Paul esteemed his Roman citizenship very lightly. But when he got out on the road as a Christian missionary, and began to take the hard knocks as they came, and began to see for himself what happens to you when your liberties have been taken away, he began to esteem his Roman citizenship more highly. And he began to see something else,—that the freedom which Rome granted to a few favored citizens, God, through the Gospel of Jesus Christ, really meant for all mankind. So St. Paul became one of the truly great champions of human freedom. He saw that all mankind, regardless of race or nationality, could be brothers in the higher freedom of the Christian Gospel.

St. Paul never expected this freedom to come easily. He knew, from experience, that true liberty costs a heavy price. He knew how easy it is to turn liberty into license. He warned the Corinthians to "take heed lest this liberty of yours become a stumbling-block to them that are weak." And St. Peter told his converts, just as directly, to live "as free, yet not using your liberty for a cloak of maliciousness." Both these great Apostles knew how easy it is to turn liberty into tyranny.

LIBERTY FOR ALL, means law for all. Equal liberty means equal justice. Tyranny is not a total lack of liberty,—it is liberty unbalanced,—too much liberty for some, not enough for others.

Liberty is costly. Even if you have been born free, you must learn to fight to keep yourself free. There is never a moment in your lifetime without a watcher, ready to take away your liberty when your lack of vigilance gives him his chance!

I took much time last week to tell you why I think the Bible is the text-book of freedom, and why I think the Gospel is the source of our liberty. I reassert what I said then, and add to it what I have said today,—that it is necessary even for those who are born free to realize how much liberty is worth,—that the way to realize what liberty is worth is to come out from behind that Maginot Line that you have built for yourself in your imagination, and to take the measure of the enemies of liberty in the field of battle. Fight the battle for human liberty, not only against our enemies abroad, but in your own country, in your own town. The battle you fight as a Christian is much bigger, and far more grim, than the battle against the Axis powers. When the Axis has been defeated, the grimmest enemies of human freedom will still be in the field: and when the soldiers who went out to fight Hitler and Hirohito return with victory, the soldiers who fight the Spirit of Evil, who made these two tyrants possible, will still be in the battle!

Learn what liberty is really worth by fighting for liberty, and by perseverance in that fight!

Learn that liberty is a community affair, and not an individual affair. Liberty for one at the expense of others is not liberty, but tyranny. True liberty means, not that I may do just as I please, but that I stand equal with every other citizen before the law. Liberty means equal opportunity to rise according to ability. Liberty means equal justice under law.

To keep your liberty means tremendous watchfulness. There are many who would like to take our liberty away. We, ourselves, are often ready to destroy our own liberty.

Liberty means a higher brotherhood, a brotherhood beyond the usual limited and circumscribed definition of the term. True liberty cannot stop short of the ultimate. When liberty stops short of what it can reach, it ceases by that much to be liberty, and by that much is tinged with bondage.

SO LIBERTY MUST go on until real brotherhood is reached,—not license for everyone to do as he chooses,—not a free handout for every loafer who thinks the world owes him a living,—not an artificial leveling which smothers individual initiative,—but equal opportunity to rise according to ability, and equal justice under law, for all earth's millions, without regard to where they live, nor to what language they speak, nor to what race they belong. That, after all, is the Christian ideal. We have not reached it yet. To reach it will be costly. We will not reach it without a fight. But there are many in America who are ready for that fight.

"A Fraternity of Pessimists."

In the New York Times Magazine of November Seventh, there is a timely article by Arthur Koestler, entitled, "We Need a Fraternity of Pessimists." Arthor Koestler is a native of Hungary. He worked fifteen years for the Ullstein newspaper chain in Germany. He was imprisoned and sentenced to death in Spain, during the civil war. He was reprieved and sent to France, where he was again imprisoned at the outbreak of the present war. Eventually he escaped to England, where he at present is in residence.

The gist of Mr. Koestler's article is this: We need to realize what we are fighting for; and what stupendous tasks we face after military victory is achieved.

To quote his opening paragraphs: "In this war we are fighting against a total lie in the name of a half truth. This is a more modest formulation than those currently used, but if we tentatively accept it, the present will probably appear less confused and the future less depressing.

"We call Nazism's New Order a total lie because it denies the specific ethos of our species; because by proclaiming that might is right it reduces civil law to jungle law, and by proclaiming that race is all, reduces sociology to zoology . . ."

But as the writer goes on our skirts are not entirely clear. "We live in a climate of half-truths." Pure democracies have not attained perfection. Mr. Koestler contends that we are approaching an interregnum—a period of chaos which will follow a collapse of the traditional values of a civilization. This sounds pretty pessimistic, and Koestler's plea is for "a fraternity of short time pessimists."

We believe this to be an unfortunate approach. Perhaps it is in the choice of words. As Christians we are, or should be, the most hopeful people in the world. In the true Christian community there is no room for the pessimists. However dark the clouds, however high the minds, however strong the might of brute force, the Christian knows within the depths of his heart that they are not pictures of the eternal.

If Mr. Koestler means by his fraternity of pessimists—a brotherhood of realists, then as Christians we can join his group. For the very optimism of the convinced Christian makes him a realist. Jesus was not blinded by the degradation of man's sin. He saw the dirt, He saw the meanness of man to man. He saw the pitiableness of man's efforts. But He knew that these signs were not the badges of the eternal life that the fraternity of mankind was destined to gain.

As Christians we must bind our realism by the strong bonds of hopefulness. We must not be afraid to face up to the great issues that confront us. And some of them are extremely unpleasant. But face them we must.

Here are some of them:

(1) A divided Christendom.

(2) Racial misunderstanding.

(3) The treatment to be accorded the defeated enemy.

(4) Economic justice to small minority groups.

(5) Political freedom to all minority groups, as well as religious freedom.

These do not cover the whole range of vital issues. We believe them to be among the main ones.

As Christians we must discover the way to be a fraternity of optimists. Hopeful people who will see even in the midst of darkness the shining of the Eternal Light in the face of Jesus Christ.

We will become hopeful people only when we are willing to face life's vital issues fearlessly and courageously.

Not pessimists but hopeful Christian realists is the need.

The Challenge of the Larger Budget.

It is hoped that the very fine slogan which Bishop St. George Tucker has set for our efforts during the next three years, will burn itself deep into the heart of every communicant. Have you forgotten it—"Through World Evangelism to World Fellowship in Christ."

With this as a guide, we have made, or are making, our plans in our various dioceses and parishes, to put real teeth into the slogan. The real teeth are the pledges we make through the Every Member Canvass, to support world evangelism.

Why is the Budget larger this year? Because the opportunities are greater. We cannot afford to miss the challenging tasks that face us in a chaotic world.

So to every Parish and mission station comes the call to stretch every sinew to achieve a larger goal, than ever before. May we not forget that even this larger budget represents only minimum needs.

God through Christ and His Church calls us to give the maximum of our efforts. Only so will "World Fellowship through Christ" be established.

Watch Important Documents Burn

Debt on Two Detroit Parishes Wiped Out, Churches Consecrated

Detroit, Mich.—The Rt. Rev. Frank W. Creighton, D. D., Bishop of Michigan, is a constructive individual who normally, if he saw an important document going up in smoke, would make every effort to save it. However, twice on Sunday, October 24, he stood calmly by without the flicker of an eyelash and watched important documents burn to a crisp, representing the last vestige of debt on two Detroit parishes,—St. Matthias' and Emmanuel Church.

Both churches were consecrated that day, St. Matthias' in the morning and Emmanuel in the evening. Emmanuel, although established in 1919, is one of the youngest parishes in the diocese, having acquired parish status within the past year, and having been admitted to union with the Convention of the diocese last January. It has cleared off its debt entirely since that time, a debt largely due to the purchase of the property and the erection of the new building. Mr. Albert Gregory, Secretary of the Vestry, read the sentence of consecration, and Mr. H. C. Snow, Senior Warden, presented the Instruments of Donation to the Bishop.

The situation in St. Matthias' was somewhat different. This congregation was established in 1897 and became a parish in 1906. In the days of enormous prosperity, a fine new church was erected at a cost of $200,000, and at the same time extensive changes and additions were made to the parish house. After the depression the debt with accrued interest reached $213,000, and in 1937 the present rector, the Rev. Ernest E. Piper, was asked by the late Bishop Herman Page to undertake the saving of the church property. Five years ago the task of removing the debt was undertaken after a substantial adjustment had been made by the Receiver of the former First National Bank, who held the mortgage. In these five years the people paid $53,000 in principal, interest and repairs, making a total of $159,475 paid over the whole period on the entire debt. It is interesting to note that in the past five years only $40,000 has been received from pledges for operating expenses, the vestry estimating that debt reduction has taken about 60 per cent of the total parish income, and parish operating budgets 40 per cent. In less than two years past, $30,900 was paid on the debt principal, with the result that the old mortgage has been taken up, clearing entirely the church edifice. The only debt remaining is a small new mortgage of $4,000 on the parish house portion of the plant.

The service of consecration of St. Matthias' was attended by approximately 600 persons, representing practically a roll call of the parish communicant list. Several men and women in service were able to return for the ceremony.

The Rev. Mr. Piper, in commenting on the clearing off of the debt, stated that he felt it should be most encouraging to other clergy and parishes struggling with debts to realize that St. Matthias' has accomplished its purpose in a parish of middle class working people, with no wealthy members, simply through a united, concerted and intensive effort.

DIOCESE OF RHODE ISLAND

Convocations—Woman's Auxiliary

Providence, R. I.—The Woman's Auxiliary of the diocese met in All Saints' Church on Oct. 20. The speakers were the Rev. John Lyte, the rector; and, pinch-hitting for Dr. Franklin, came Mr. Whitney, who made a very fine presentation of our Missionary effort from the point of view of "281".

The General Convention and its work is being discussed at length in Rhode Island. Many are disappointed at the neutral results of the votes on marriage, re-union, and intinction; while others are thankful for the votes as taken.

The Convocations in Rhode Island will soon have the pleasure of hearing Bishop Strider of West Virginia. They will meet in Providence, Pawtucket, Newport and Westerly. The Dean of the Narragansett Convocation, at Westerly, the Very Rev. Thom Williamson, of Narragansett, has asked the Very Rev. Irving A. Evans, a delegate to the Convention, to speak on its work, being careful to give both sides of each matter discussed—and this Mr. Evans, who is dean of the Providence Convocation, is well able to do.

The Rev. John Evans, a son of the Very Rev. Irving A. Evans, rector of St. Andrew's School, at West Barrington, has just been ordained to the diaconate, at the Cathedral in Providence. Taking parts of the service were Dean Evans and the Rev. David Evans, another son, now rector at Ashton, R. I.

On All Saints' Day the Rhode Island Clericus met at the Cathedral, where Bishop Perry had a service of commemoration for members of the Clericus who have died in the last five years. Also, there were reports from the Clerical Deputies to General Convention.

TEN REGIONAL MEETINGS HEAR REPORTS ON GENERAL CONVENTION

Albany, N. Y.—Under the direction of the Ven. A. Abbott Hastings, ten Post-Convention meetings were held at convenient centers, several of them in conjunction with the Rural Deanery, to hear reports and discussion of General Convention. Bishop Oldham, clerical and lay deputies, and Woman's Auxiliary delegates were assigned as speakers in groups of three at each meeting. An enthusiastic interest was shown in official matters as well as missionary and devotional highlights of Convention.

Bishop Sherrill's Plea

That "This Year, This Diocese . . Will Move Forward"

Boston, Mass.—By vote of the Diocesan Council and in cooperation with the Diocesan Field Department, Bishop Sherrill asked Grace Church, Everett, to release its rector, the Rev. Herbert L. Johnson, for a campaign of explanation and education in connection with the Bishop's request that parishes now meeting their quota, will make their objective ten per cent more than the quota; and that parishes not meeting their quota hitherto, will meet their quota in full or, if that is beyond immediate acceptance, will make a very substantial increase. To this end, Mr. Johnson is meeting with rectors and their vestries and addressing as many canvassers' rallies as may be possible. The clergy are enthusiastic and cooperative with this project calling for a definite forward step in a day when a Church of spiritual vigor and missionary zeal is essential. It is hoped that an affirmative answer will be given to Bishop Sherrill's plea that "this year, this Diocese—in faith, in deeds, in sacrificial giving—will move FORWARD."

Boys Cultivate Cathedral Farm With Success

Boston, Mass.—Rosy-cheeked boys presiding over a stand of vegetables, apples and eggs, catch attention from those passing by, these autumn days, the entrance to the offices of St. Paul's Cathedral. The produce comes from the Cathedral Farm at Hubbardston, and the boys are from the group which diligently worked there this past summer, with such success that they won verbal accolades from the state agricultural authorities and four prizes in Boston's 4H Club. This Cathedral project is interdenominational in scope; it gave ten weeks' training to boys of high school age and also made a contribution to the solving of food problems.

Church in Action Presented by Service League

Boston, Mass.—Masterly presentation of the Episcopal Church in action was made on October 29 when four districts of the Women's Division of the Church Service League held a regional conference in the Cathedral Church of St. Paul. Deaconess Elsie W. Riebe of China held her audience spellbound as she described the succour of 3,000 refugees and wounded Chinese soldiers on the mission compound in Ichang, a thousand miles up the Yangste. J. E. Blanton, principal of the Voorhees Normal and Industrial School in Denmark, S. C., was no whit less forceful and interesting as he told of the school's sound training which has enabled 65 per cent of its students now in the army to achieve a rating within ninety days of enlistment.

The morning session of the all-day conference included five "Triennial Workshops" discussion groups on action taken in Cleveland. The findings were presidents of the Women's Division the start of the afternoon session. Vice-presidents of the Women's Division who presided during the conference were Mrs. E. Willard Flint, Mrs. Guy B. Howe, Mrs. Walter G. Perry, and Mrs. Everett R. Wilkinson.

MORE MORTGAGES PAID OFF

Boston, Mass.—Paying off the mortgage has been the proud achievement of several parishes and missions, including All Saints', East Lynn, where W. Leighton Burgess, an exceptionally able lay reader, is in charge; St. John's, Fall River, the Rev. Cuthbert Pratt; St. James', New Bedford, the Rev. Shirley B. Goodwin; and St. Andrew's, Edgartown, the Rev. Carlton N. Jones.

G. F. S. ELECTS BOARD MEMBER

New York.—The National Board of Directors of The Girls' Friendly Society, at a meeting in New York, elected Mrs. Stephen K. Mahon of Toledo, Ohio, as its representative on the national Executive Board of the Woman's Auxiliary. Mrs. Mahon succeeds Mrs. Harold E. Woodward, who has served her full two terms on the Board. Mrs. Mahon led the panel on "The American Scene" at the Triennial meeting in Cleveland.

Realizing that one of the greatest problems of an organization working with girls is leadership, one full day of the Board meeting was given over to Leadership Training. Miss Bernice Hess of the Girl Scouts of Greater New York discussed the Fundamentals in Leadership Training and the afternoon and evening was given over to workshops on worship, publicity, dramatics and on how to use the study program unit, "United We Make America". This is an adaptation of The Church and America's Peoples for use in youth groups.

Mrs. Harold E. Woodward resigned as president in order to be free for a different kind of work within the Society, and Mrs. William Walter Smith of New York was elected as acting president to fill the unexpired term. Mrs. Smith is a well known figure in the work of the national Girls' Friendly Society.

CZECHOSLOVAKIA COMMEMORATED

Washington, D. C.—Commemorating the founding of the Republic of Czechoslovakia twenty-five years ago a service was held in the Bethelehem Chapel of the Cathedral of St. Peter and St. Paul on October 28, 1943.

Appropriately, this service was held in the same chapel where the sarcophagus of Woodrow Wilson, the great friend of this new Republic, is situated and at which the peoples of this valiant Nation have placed from time to time memorial wreaths.

Official and diplomatic Washington was represented in the presence of Mrs. Woodrow Wilson—Mrs. Owen J. Roberts (wife of the Associate Justice of the U. S. Supreme Court), Mrs. Wilbur Carr, widow of a former U. S. Minister to Czechoslovakia), Mrs. Butler Wright (also a widow of a former U. S. Minister to Czechoslovakia), the Ambassadors from Belgium, Greece, Yugoslavia, Poland, Cuba, Honduras, Ministers from Switzerland, Ireland, Luxemburg, Chief of the French Mission, Charge d'Affaires of New Zealand, 1st Secretary U. S. S. R., Counselors of Canada, China, Urguay, Denmark, and representatives of the State Department and Foreign Liaison Officers of the War Department.

Officiating in the service was Canon T. O. Wedel, Ph. D., warden of the College of Preachers, Canon-Chancellor C. W. F. Smith and Canon-Preacher Wm. Curtis Draper. The address was made by the Rt. Rev. George W. Davenport, D. D., retired bishop of Easton, Md., who is carrying on Episcopal duties in the Diocese until an election is made of a successor to the late Bishop James E. Freeman.

Bishop Davenport, in speaking of the past history of Czechoslovakia, described briefly the lives of the first and second presidents of the Republic—Thomas Garrigue Masaryk and Edouard Benes, taking as his text "I have set before thee an open door, and no man can shut it". The Bishop stated that Czechoslovakia and other enslaved peoples, though deprived of their life as a free people and all those things that made independence possible, had nevertheless, in their spirit shown an entrance into that region of truth and independence of soul which was still open to them. "Regardless of deprivations and hardships, life in concentration camps, laboring in German factories the great soul of the Czech people still lives."

The service was most impressive with the singing of the service by the choir of the Cathedral, brought to a climax by the placing of a wreath on the tomb of the late President Woodrow Wilson by His Excellency Vladimir S. Hurban, Ambassador of Czechoslovakia, during the playing by the organist of the National Anthem of Czechoslovakia and the National Anthem of the United States, and the congregation and choir singing the Recessional Hymn—"Faith of Our Fathers! Living Still." The service was a memorable instant in the lives of the Czechoslovakian patriots sojourning in Washington.

BISHOP AND MRS. HELFENSTEIN HONORED

Baltimore, Md.—In accordance with his statement to the General Convention that he would retire on November 1, 1943, the clergy and officials of the Diocese of Maryland, in token of their affection and appreciation, arranged a program to mark the date.

At 11:30 a. m., Bishop Helfenstein was the celebrant at the service of Holy Communion, in the Bishop's Chapel, at the Diocesan House, for the members of the Standing Committee, the Executive Council and the Diocesan Staff. After the service luncheon was served at which the Bishop and Mrs. Helfenstein were the honored guests.

In the afternoon, from four until six o'clock, they were honored at a tea, to which the clergy and their wives, the members of the Standing Committee and the Executive Council and their wives, and the heads of the diocesan organizations were invited. On this occasion a silver loving cup was presented to the Bishop and the following testimonial was read by the Rev. Lewis Beeman Browne, senior priest of the diocese:

To the Rt. Rev. Edward Trail Helfenstein, D. D.
Bishop of Maryland:
True Father in God:
Devoted Bishop and Shepherd of souls:
Able administrator:

Your resignation as Diocesan, after thirty-six years as a Priest and seventeen as a Bishop, is an occasion on which the Clergy and Laity of the Diocese wish to record their appreciation of your arduous labors for the Glory of God and for the good of His Church and people.

It is devoutly hoped that future years will be for you and your gracious wife a time of well-earned leisure in which you will find ample opportunity for the exercise of your pastoral office.

A bouquet of lovely red roses was presented to Mrs. Helfenstein as an expression of affection and esteem.

EAST CAROLINA

Bishop Darst Consecrates New Church Building

Wilmington, N. C.—The new church building at Jacksonville, N. C., was consecrated by the Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, D. D., Bishop of East Carolina diocese, by the name of St. Anne's Church, on Sunday afternoon, October 24.

Jacksonville is the nearest town to the New River Marine Base and our Church will serve the large number of new people who have moved to the community and many of those who are at the Marine Base.

The building was made possible by a gift of the Army and Navy Commission and many parishes and individuals in the diocese.

The consecration sermon was preached by the Rev. Charles E. Williams, rector of Christ Church, New Bern, and the music was furnished by the choir of that parish.

Regional Conferences Prepare for Every Member Canvass

In preparation for the annual Every Member Canvass, five regional conferences have been held in the diocese, at Wilmington, Edenton, Washington, Kinston, and Fayetteville. Nearby parishes and missions were represented at these centers.

The program of the diocese was presented by the Rev. Mortimer Glover, rector of St. James', Wilmington, and member of the Finance Department of the diocese; the Every Member Canvass by laymen of the parishes where the conferences were held, and the General Church Program by Rt. Rev. John Long Jackson, D. D., bishop of Louisiana.

The conferences were held for all the parishes and missions of the diocese, both white and colored, and the attendance was unusually good.

SOUTH FLORIDA

Bishop Wing Conducts Annual Conference

Orlando, Fla.—Clergy of the diocese held their annual conference here on Oct. 26-28, with Bishop Wing in charge and the Rev. Rex Wilkes, rector of St. Stephen's Church, Coconut Grove, leading the discussions. Nearly all of the diocesan clergy attended, being a group of forty-two, for whom the Woman's Auxiliary of the Cathedral served three meals daily in the Chapterhouse. "The Church's responsibility to the community as a whole" was the general topic discussed, with special consideration of juvenile delinquency. Rev. Mr. Wilkes stated that "the entire approach to young people in the Episcopal Church is to be reorganized. We will try to reach them with a sane sex program and a moral character program in the Church activities, the high schools and in the homes".

The clergy decided to adopt the new hymnal when possible, throughout this diocese.

EMMANUEL CHURCH PROJECT GETS UNDER WAY

Richmond, Va.—To commemorate the 83rd anniversary of Emmanuel Church, the women of the church are endeavoring to raise the sum of $500.00 toward a diocesan chapel to be erected in Arlington County, Va. This chapel will meet the urgent needs of 800 new families who have recently come in as Defense Workers on Government projects. Hundreds of children have no Sunday School facilities. It is hoped that every member of Emmanuel will contribute $1.00 or more as a memorial to some one who has passed on. Their names will be inscribed on a scroll, placed in an endurable box, sealed and deposited in the cornerstone, thus perpetuating the memory of loved ones for generations to come and making it possible for their labors to continue down future centuries. Already $370.00 is in hand. Please send your checks to Mrs. J. A. Johnston, Treasurer.

THIRTY-TWO NAVAI CHAPLAINS GRADUATED

Williamsburg, Va.—Class 19-43 of the Naval Training School (Chaplains) was graduated October 24 in Phi Beta Kappa Hall on the campus of The College of William and Mary.

Thirty-two Naval Chaplains and five specialists—(Welfare) were in the group graduated.

The program was under the direction of Chaplain C. A. Neyman, USN, Officer in Charge of the School. The invocation was delivered by Chaplain J. R. Dugan, USNR.

The Chaplains' School choir under the direction of D. C. Gilley, Sp(W)1c, USNR sang "Forever Free", a Dutch chorale arranged by Lefebre; and "Go To Dark Gesthemene", by Noble.

Commander John F. ROBINSON, ChC, USN, Executive Officer of Naval Training School (Chaplains), addressed the graduating class. Chaplain Robinson said:

"Navy Men live in a world far different from the world of civilians. It's a world not restricted by township, city, or state boundaries. It's a composite world of shipmates from every class and clime. You gentlemen have voluntarily entered that world from the civilian world and thereby must expand your horizons. Your assets must be in proportion to the world in which you live. The dividends to your men will be in proportion to the world in which you live. One of your greatest assets will be a sense of humor and that sense of humor, likewise, will, be in proportion to the world in which you live. A sense of humor means basically a sense of relative values. That balance of values will permit you to sympathize with the over-burdened heart and to smile at the ludicrous and well-taken word or deed. A killjoy has no place in the Navy; nor has a fool. The man with a sense of relative values is neither. Be that man and you'll be the Chaplain who will bring God to men and men to God—in the Navy way.

"A young chaplain recently returned from sea duty and disastrous enemy action against his vessel remembers the first humorous incident related to the experience. This was in spite of the fact that his ship had been blown from under him."

"He was loved by his shipmates because he had preached to them, prayed for and with them. The men who found need of a sense of humor in order to live in the inadequate barracks at the beginning of this school are the men who are making headlines today."

"Keep your sense of humor and it will stand you in a good lead in the work you are about to undertake."

Following the address certificates of graduation were presented. The first verse of the Navy hymn was sung, and the benediction was pronounced by Chaplain W. J. Murphy, U.S.N.R.

Lee Memorial Church at Lexington, Emmanuel Church at Covington, and St. John's Church at Wytheville. He made a deep impression with his discussions of the challenge of the budget and the future of the Church in China and other mission fields, and touched on the relation of the Church to Japan after the war.

THOUGHTS FOR THE THOUGHTFUL

"The easy life is dangerous."

Most of the disasters that visit human society are due to the union of high intelligence and low desire.
—Macauley.

If the way to heaven be narrow, yet it is not long; and if the gate be straight, it opens into endless life.
—Bishop Beveridge.

When the Lord of Love was here,
Happy hearts to Him were dear,
Though His heart was sad;
Worn and lowly for our sake,
Yet He turned aside to make
All the weary glad.
—Stopford A. Brooke.

The Christian life is a race in which all may gain the prize, a warfare in which all may gain the victory.

I find it impossible to avoid offending guilty men, for there is no way of avoiding it but by our silence, or their patience, and silent we cannot be because of God's command; and patient they cannot be, because of their guilt.
—Martin Luther.

"Christ never asks of us such busy labour
As leaves no time for resting at His Feet;
The waiting attitude of expectation
He ofttimes counts a service most complete.
Then seek to please Him, whatsoe'er He bids thee,
Whether to do, to suffer, or, lie still;
'Twill matter little by what path He led us,
If in it all we sought to do His Will."

"We best deal with our own wounds when we bring ointment to heal the wounds of others."

This I resolve on, to-wit: To run, when I can, to go when I cannot run, and to creep when I cannot go.
—Bunyan.

"It took but a few days to get Israel out of Egypt, but it took forty years to get Egypt out of Israel."

The worries that encompass me
Because my wisdom could not see,
Are lost in joy; for now I know
That where He leads me I can go;
And what He bids me I can be.

Keep me from turning back!
My hand is on the plow, my faltering hand.
Behold, in front of me is untilled land,
The wilderness and solitary place,
The desert with its lonely interspace—
Keep me from turning back!

No man in the world today has such power as he who can make his fellowmen feel that Christ is a reality.

Jesus never argued about the life to come. He did not speak much about it, but when He did, He spoke calmly, as One who was on very familiar ground. He knew, as no other, that our term upon the earth is but a prelude. And when He bids us live as those who are journeying to another country, do not our clearest thoughts and noblest aspirations rise up in response to Him?

Thanksgiving and Prayer

Father, with thankful and humble hearts we appear before Thee.

We would thank Thee for all the benefits that we have received from Thy goodness.

It is to Thy blessing we owe what success we have found.

Every opportunity for doing good, every impulse in the right way, each victory we have gained over ourselves, every thought of Thy presence, O Father, every silent but loving glance on the example of our Pattern, Thy Son our Lord all are alike Thy gifts to us.

Give us strength and wisdom to walk faithfully and joyfully in the way of willing obedience to Thy laws, and cheerful trust in Thy love.

The best thanksgiving we can offer to Thee is to live according to Thy holy will; grant us every day to offer it more perfectly, and to grow in the knowledge of Thy will and the love thereof evermore; for the sake of Jesus Christ our Lord and Saviour. Amen.

LETTERS

A Letter of Appreciation and Anticipation

New York, N. Y.—Bishop Ronald O. Hall, of Hongkong, has just sent from China to Church headquarters in New York a "Letter of Appreciation and Anticipation".

"Thank you, Pecusa," says the Bishop. "Thank you for what you have done in the last hundred years for China. Thank you and thank God."

Bishop Hall tells of Bishop Boone's arrival in Shanghai in 1844, and from his beginnings, the development of "a chain of churches and schools and two great universities" spreading up the Yangtze Valley to Chungking.

Now all the territory from Shanghai to Ichang lies in the hands of China's enemies. "As I write only one ordained missionary of your Church is functioning freely in China, and he is an Englishman whom you generously took into your fellowship in order that diocesan funds could be freed to support a Chinese bishop for the Burma Road. This, of course, is Bishop Andrew Y. Y. Tsu, who is now in the United States on behalf of the Chinese Government and of our Church in China. (Since Bishop Hall wrote, Bishop Gilman has arrived in China.)

"The picture of your work—'only one ordained missionary' is really unfair, for Chinese pastors and educators you have trained are spread far and wide in occupied and in free China.

"I am just back from Tali in Western Yunnan. There Boone University's most distinguished son, Dr. Francis Wei, is now president of Hua Chung College refugeeing from Hankow. Boone has become a constituent part of Hua Chung, and not by any means the least important constituent.

"Earlier in the year I was in Changsha. There you support the Rev. Newton Liu. Youthful in years and appearance and miniature in physique, Newton Liu is a giant in responsibility and leadership; chairman of the local Relief Committee, the Interchurch Council, leader of Rotary and active and devoted in his own Church ministry and in the leadership of the Church that is still free in that wide area of Hunan. My own first acquaintance with Newton Liu was when after the burning of Changsha he revived the Rev. Walworth Tyng's tradition of a monthly Eucharist in English with an open invitation to all other missionaries to come. Here was a Chinese priest providing out of the treasure house of our Anglican tradition, spiritual food to missionaries from many countries and churches, and the alms at the first Celebration went to the Dean of St. Paul's Cathedral for a burnt out church in London. Those who had been through fire knew what fire means.

"Chungking also has reason to thank God for the Episcopal Church of America, not only for the many laymen now active in Government who are graduates of your schools and colleges and have from you learned to know Christ Jesus, but also for the pastoral ministry of Grace Community Church. For in all Chungking this is the only church really able to meet the needs of China's wartime capital. The Rev. Stephen Tsang is pastor of Grace Church. The Methodists provide the buildings and many active members. Dr. Hollington Tong, who accompanied Madame Chiang to the United States, is chairman of the vestry."

Bishop Hall tells of the work on the Burma Road done by Bishop Tsu and Archdeacon Quentin Huang. Archdeacon Huang's work is based on the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, in which he got interested when in America, "though", says the Bishop, "he includes 'sisters' in his Brotherhood, on the analogy of 'Dearly beloved brethren' and because he knows that youth work must touch the lives of youth at the point of dominant interest and greatest need of help and guidance".

Of Bishop Tsu, Bishop Hall says, "His importance to us and to the whole Church in China as a leader and an administrator is well shown by his appointment by the House of Bishops of the Church in China at its last full meeting in 1941 as their executive plenipotentiary for Free China. His administrative leadership has planted the Church and developed it in five new centers on the Burma Road as well as developing and strengthening the work in Kunming and Kweiyang. He is the only authoritative representative of our Church now in Free China, and as he speaks to your General Convention he will speak as a symbol of the Church in China which in the last 100 years you have had so large a hand in making".

Expressing the hope that work in China may be developed rapidly and vigorously, Bishop Hall adds, "Perhaps fundamentally we hope most for a recognition of the Chinese Church as a brother in the great Anglican Fellowship and that as you generously sent aid to British Missions to the Archbishop of Canterbury for distribution, so your increased interest in prayers and gifts and personnel to us will be through the Presiding Bishop and the General Synod of our Church. At our first General Synod after the war we look for a large delegation from the United States, not only the Presiding Bishop and the executive secretary of the Overseas Department, but laymen and laywomen representing the Woman's Auxiliary, St. Andrew's Brotherhood, and, please, actual leaders of your Canterbury Clubs".

"With your help," Bishop Hall concludes, "Bishop Tsu's district in southwest China can become a new diocese with strong Christian middle schools in Kunming and Kweiyang. With your help the Standing Committee on Student Work of the whole Church can develop throughout China Archdeacon Huang's successful work at Kweiyang. With your help our Central Clergy Fund and Reconstruction and Rebuilding Fund can help the local churches and congregations to seize the opportunities of the peace to give men and women not only peace in this world, but the Peace of God which passeth all understanding."

MORE PUPILS THAN EXPECTED AT VOORHEES

Denmark, S. C.—Voorhees School unit of the American Church Institute for Negroes, reports that the fall term opened with more pupils than anticipated, and with a full complement of teachers, in spite of the attraction of wartime wages in industry, and the armed services.

Voorhees boys are on the fighting fronts in all parts of the world, recent communications having been received from a dozen of the considerable number now under arms.

Voorhees is planning a financial drive for its endorsement, to start now, and to end in 1947. Mr. J. E. Blanton, Voorhees' principal, forecasts a successful effort on behalf of the endowment, as well as "a very successful school year".

"Verily, then, the earth is divine, because man did not make it . . . If God created the earth, so the earth is hallowed; and if it is hallowed, so must we deal with it devotedly and with care that we do not despoil it."

HAVEN . . .

By J. W. KENNEDY

"I believe in God the Father who hath made me and all the world."

SO BELIEVING I cannot help but look at life and the world in ways consistent with my belief. So believing I must relate my thoughts and actions to the fundamental truth of my belief. So believing I find the inconsistencies of life, the variations and complications that write large and black the word WHY? in no sense distrurbing or upsetting. When the temptation comes to think of incidents and happenings which hurt me and which make me tend to wonder about God's love for me as a father his child, I reassert my belief in the goodness and never failing love and care of God, my Father, to whom I am most precious. This forces me to look elsewhere for the answers to the enigmas that cause those who do not think beyond the first surface conclusion to make God a scapegoat. So often when things go wrong God gets the blame. When I look around at God's world, that which we call His creation, and see the havoc of flood and wind, the savagery of beasts and epidemics, the ruthlessness of earthquakes and drought, the whimsy of lightening and fog, I often begin to wonder about the friendliness of the universe and God's laws and the good ends toward which creation travaileth and groaneth. But so believeing in a God of Laws and Goodness I cannot saddle him with the apparent imperfections of His creation nor with the development of its resources contrary to His plan and the quite often unexplainable capriciousness and cruelty of it all. I must go beyond this condemnation of God for the flaws of His universe and seek other answers. Few of nature's tragedies, however, would affect us were we to use the wisdom and resources placed at our command by God. Perhaps one of the places of the testing of our worthiness to have the use of all the wondrous and divine, the richness, beauty and fruitfulness, the blessings and miracles of it all is by the occasional dropping of a problem in our laps to handle to keep from spoiling us by making us scratch for a few answers. At any rate, I believe God is running things in an orderly fashion for the highest wellbeing of man and that when things go wrong, the reason is usually in some mismanagement or disobedience or ignorance on the part of man.

THERE ARE SOME THINGS I cannot answer just yet about this mysterious world at once so vast and intricate and yet so simple and usable. But I can trust God with those answers, allowing the answers to come, as I believe they most surely will, in time or in eternity.

God has given me enough knowledge to live by, enough hope to live for, enough resources to live on. I believe He is the source of all life animate and inanimate and that His plan for all of it is good and that He has created me to play a specific part in that plan. I find this is enough to keep me going, happy and content, eagerly seeking daily to find and fulfil God's will and plan for me, which men refer to so often as their "destiny". I believe in God the Father —who wants for me and does all in His power for me the very best things any father desires for his child; who hath made me—who has given me my life which I am holding in trust for Him and using for His purposes; and all the world—providing the means for sustaining the life He gave through bodily nourishment, mental opportunity, spiritual satisfaction, soul expansion and the sufficient challenge and mystery to keep life from ever growing dull or monotonous or useless.

This belief moulds the day's living and produces a far higher yield of blessedness than any possible contrary belief. By the fruits of our belief we test its adequacy, the fruits that ripen between the dawns.

The Supremacy of Spiritual Power

By FREDERICK W. NEVE

The most important work that lies ahead is to bring the spiritual forces into such a prominent place in human life as to give them the supreme place in human affairs. Unless they are made to counterbalance and control the physical forces there will be a necessary repetition of the calamities which have marked the history of civilization during the present century. Why is it that the Christian Church has so signally failed to guide and direct the course of human history that the only way left open for the nations to protect themselves from the ambition and resort to violence of the German rulers has been to realize the necessity of using the same means, namely, active warfare? And this has come to pass in spite of the fact that the principal nations of the world had entered into a definite agreement to outlaw war and bring it to an end.

The All-Important Question

How can the Christian Church succeed in accomplishing what the leading statesmen of the world, even those of so-called Christian nations, have failed to do? The important question is, how can spiritual power prove itself equal to the task of curbing and controlling the passions of men which, when aroused and let loose, only too often result in actual warfare? Spiritual power must make its influence felt in an entirely different way from the exercise of physical force, for God has given to man freedom of the will which implies the power to choose for himself how he will act under any given circumstances. If God were to use physical force in compelling man to do, at all times, what would be to his best and highest interest, then that would be taking away his freedom of action and making him a mere puppet without any power of choice at all. If, then, spiritual power is to be more effective in guiding and controlling the affairs of men, it must act, as already stated, in a different way from that which is employed by the use of physical force.

Man's Spiritual Nature

We must remember that man has been endowed by his Creator with a spiritual side to his nature as well as the one which we call physical. In other words, man has a soul as well as a body, and it is the soul which is the highest part of him, because there is in it something akin to the Divine Nature which enables him to know God, to hold communion with God, and to be a fellow worker with Him, and by the gift of redemption, through our Lord Jesus Christ, to attain Eternal Life. From this we can see that spiritual power is a necessary possession of the soul if it is to live its true life, for our Lord said, in reference to His people: "I am come that they might have life and that they might have it more abundantly." And the Christian life is the more abundant life because it comes from God by virtue of our union with Him, through our Lord Jesus Christ.

The Body of Christ

St. Paul several times refers to the Church as the "Body of Christ," and in writing to the Corinthians, he uses these words: "Ye are the Body of Christ, and members in particular." This implies that Christ works through His Body, the Church, and through us as its members. What is more, Christ dwells in us by His Spirit, and by the power of His Spirit He uses us to do that which we could not possibly do of ourselves. By His Divine Power He awakens in our souls a consciousness of the possibilities which He alone can make manifest to us and to the world, in those higher forms of service which can prove that we are the children of God. It is in this way that Christ works through us, as the channels of His power, and since all men are endowed by their Creator with a spiritual side to their nature, the soul, they are open to spiritual influences which may awaken in them a consciousness that, after all, goodness opens up before them a far more desirable life than that which they are actually living.

The Manifestation of Christ Through His Church

The merely nominal Christian life which has not the persuasive power which only Christ can give to it, is the reason why Christianity has lost its power of attracting men to it, and it can only regain this power, which it once possessed, by those who profess and call themselves Christians, allowing Christ to use them as channels of His power and influence and thus be able to draw men to Himself and make them, too, the means by which He can bless the world. St. Paul, in another passage, in speaking of the Church of Christ, refers to it as His Body, "The fullness of Him that filleth all in all." This implies that Christ's Will and Purpose is to so fill His Body, the Church, and every member of it, with His Spirit, that His Presence in the world will be so clearly manifested that all men will recognize that the Church is something more than a mere human institution, but that it is a manifestation of the Presence and Power of God in the world, through His Son, Jesus Christ our Lord. This is the ideal, but if it is to be realized we Christians must individually make up our minds to work with Christ to this end by giving to Him the opportunity to make us so completely His own as to be able to use us as He used the Body which He lived in here on earth, to the glory of God, and the redemption of mankind.

The Service of Perfect Freedom

Thou art the King, there is none else but Thee;
Thou art the King, and Thou hast set me free
With a complete and perfect liberty.

What can I do to show my love to Thee?
What can I do to set my brethren free,
That they may share Thine own sweet liberty?

My body shall be Thine to use each day;
My body shall be Thine, its lips to pray,
Its feet to follow in Thy narrow way.

Its hands shall be Thine own stretched out to bless;
Its hands shall be Thine own in tenderness
To heal the wounds of many in distress.

So shall I show my love to Thee, O Lord,
So hands and feet and lips with one accord,
In serving Thee, shall find their great reward.

The Judgment of Liberty

By WILLIAM MOODY

No. 3.

Jeremiah 34:17. "Therefore thus saith the Lord; Ye have not hearkened unto me, in proclaiming liberty, every one to his brother, and every man to his neighbor; behold I proclaim a liberty for you, saith the Lord, to the sword, to the pestilence, and to the famine; and I will make you to be removed into all the nations of the earth".

THUS JEREMIAH, the great prophet of Israel, pronounced God's judgment upon those who, in his nation and in his country, misused the liberty which God had given them. The same judgment has fallen upon every nation that has misused liberty from that day to this.

In the time of Jeremiah human slavery was still practiced in Israel. But it was the declared will of God that no Israelite should permanently enslave a fellow Israelite and his family. This was plainly written in Holy Scripture: . . . "Every fiftieth year shall be holy unto the Lord: and ye shall proclaim liberty throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof: for ye were in bondage in Egypt, and the Lord delivered you!"

That was the word of God, and that was the will of God, that no Israelite, whose fathers had been set free from slavery in Egypt by the intervention of the Almighty, should be brought into endless bondage again by his own people in the Promised Land. We know, today, that this purpose, which then was limited, God, through Christ Jesus, has extended to all mankind.

Jeremiah knew all about this law. Yet he also knew that there had been no freeing of the slaves in Israel beyond the memory of living men. Men read God's law with reverence in the synagogues, and paid no attention to it in the streets and in the markets, and in the fields.

Then danger threatened the nation. A powerful army of aliens entered the borders of the Jewish land, and everybody who could do so went into the fenced cities, and the gates were shut, and fear walked in the streets. People suddenly became very anxious to please God. And when they asked, "How can we please God better?", Jeremiah answered, "Free those slaves!" So the frightened rulers set the slaves free, and the alien army withdrew, and Jerusalem was saved.

But next year it began to be difficult to get men to work in the fields, and the king's council met again and repealed the decree of freedom. And every man went and found his bondservant, and took him back again, and put him to work again. When that happened Jeremiah went into the Temple Area and pronounced the solemn judgment which I have taken for our text, . . . the judgment of liberty!

NOW, LET US STUDY this bit of history from old time, for it has a lesson for us.

Here is a man who has a farm, and twenty slaves, and in obedience to the Divine decree he sets them free. Then spring-time comes, and he says to them, "Come and work on my farm, and I will pay you for it". And they answer, "We are not going to work this year, because we are now free!" And he says, "But my farm!" And they say, "But my freedom!" So the farmer, and others like him who have the same problem, and who control the legislature, get together, and the law for freedom is repealed, and the farmer goes out with the sheriff, and gets his twenty slaves.

Now look at this closely, and you will see that the judgment of liberty has fallen, first of all, upon the laborer. He was not a pure innocent! He richly deserved what he got! Having been granted his liberty, he has abused it. Having had to work all his life, he now refuses to work at all.

Or, that laborer discovers that liberty is power. So he says to his old master, "All right, I will work for you, but you are going to pay me, see? And you are going to pay through the nose! And you are going to pay all twenty of us, whether the farm makes anything or not! And you are not going to tell us what hours to work, or what work each one of us is to do,—we will decide that for ourselves! And if you try to hire anyone else to work for you at a less wage than we demand, we will all quit; and we won't let him work either!"

Or, he carries power to its logical conclusion. He simply says,—"You cannot work this farm by yourself. Now there are twenty of us here who are used to working this farm,—we are taking over!" But the owner says,—"You can't do that! This farm is the inheritance of my fathers! I have spent my life improving it, and building it up! It is my children's future!" "Oh, yes?" they answer, "'What is that to us?"

So, because they have misjudged the nature of liberty, and have turned it into license, the next thing these freedmen know they are slaves again. The judgment of liberty has fallen upon them. And if the landowners had not been the instruments of that judgment, then the laborers would soon have destroyed their own freedom, the strong among them eating up the weak.

DO NOT THINK that because this story is in the Bible it is out of date! It is as modern as your newspaper!

But how about those landowners? They are the instrument of God's judgment upon those freedmen who have abused their freedom—but are they thereby justified? They are not! Their purpose is not God's purpose!

They have put those freedmen back into slavery,—have they thereby solved their problem? No! They have merely put the lid on, and tied down the safety-valve! The tighter they tie the lid down, the more terrible and inevitable the explosion that will one day sweep them away, and all that they have tried to save with them!

Down there, in that seething boiler on which they have clamped the lid, is their own uneasy conscience, more stricken now, and troubled, than ever it was before this thing began.

Then the enemy legions appear once more upon the nation's borders, and those landowners raise the rallying cry of "liberty", and "justice"! They call upon themselves, and upon their friends, to fight for freedom! And there, like a mocking echo, comes the voice of their own conscience, imprisoned there with the men they have thrown into slavery,—"What do you know about freedom? Look at what you have done!"

Then there are those slaves. You can't win the war unless you arm them. But if you arm them, will they fight? And if they do fight, and win, will they be content, after the victory, to turn their swords in, and accept the chains again?

IS THIS THE STORY of a little Judean nation twenty centuries ago, or is it the musings of No. 10, Downing St., in regard to India?

But let us take our investigations farther. Suppose the party in power is very smart, and also conscienceless. Suppose those Judean landlords say, "Now look here! We are far-sighted men! We see that we have got to do more than return these freedmen to slavery, we have got to make them like it! We will be scientific about it! We will use every new discovery about the human mind, and how it works!

"The first thing we must do is to get rid of conscience, and of the kind of religion which produces a conscience. For our purposes, conscience is an expression of weakness. Conscience is the voice of freedom. It must be suppressed.

"That fellow Jeremiah is the voice of conscience among us—there is a pit full of mud over there,—throw him into it;—or did I get his name right—is it Jeremiah? No matter! Silence him! Silence everybody like him! Break his spirit! Show him what happens to people who talk about rights and 'freedom' around here! Show him what happens to those who say that God is interested in freedom!

"Now we must get hold of the children. That is it—the children! Set up a leader for them! Teach them that to be the slave of 'the State' is the noblest thing on earth! Teach them to hate, and give them something to hate—and to beat, when the leader says they may, so that they may get blood on their hands, and the taste of it in their mouths! Drill them! Regiment them! Put lies in their books! Teach them lies in their schools! Make them think that the most glorious fate of man is to die upon the battlefield that their leader may rule!

"And when they are grown, arm them and prepare them for plunder! Turn them loose upon the nations round about them! Hardened and conditioned from childhood, how shall they ever discover that they are slaves?"

They shall discover it when their cities are ringed about with the aroused and angry forces of humanity! They shall discover it in the snows, in the mud, in the bitterness of battle! They shall find it in those they left at home, behind them. They shall read it in the smoking ruins of their homes, to which they return, on leave, from the front. And when they discover it, and know the full, bitter taste of it, then God help those whose measured lies have deceived them!

God is not mocked. Whatsoever men sow, that shall they also reap.

OUT OF THE PIT into which they have thrown him, a voice speaks,—the voice of Jeremiah,—the voice of conscience,—the voice of religion,—telling of the inevitable judgment of the liberty they have defiled, and forsaken:

"Therefore thus saith the Lord! Ye have not hearkened unto me, in proclaiming liberty, every one to his brother, and every man to his neighbor: behold, I proclaim a liberty for you, saith the Lord, to the sword, to the pestilence, and to the famine; and I will make you to be removed into all the nations of the earth: and I will wipe your cities as a man wipes a dish, wiping it, and turning it upside down!"

Listen! Liberty is of God! Those who defy liberty, defy Him! Liberty is not license: it is equal justice under law; it is equal opportunity to rise according to ability.

Liberty is the just and due balance of right in a community. As the times change, that balance changes, so that what is liberty in one age may be less than liberty in another. Liberty is not a static body of Law,—it is the following of God toward that hidden goal which He is ever more and more unveiling. He who is ready goes forward with the Master. Upon him who is not ready, the judgment falls.

misguided but we have never felt that the racial question, as applied to this country, was even particularly affected by our Southern neighbors. It is true that in parts of Texas, and lower California, the Mexican immigrant has caused some problems. In view of the recent Roman statement regarding the work of Protestant Missions in South and Central America, this statement in the "peace essentials," can but mean that the question of Roman-Protestant relations is referred to. Why not be frank and say so? The atmosphere would be cleared and we could at least begin to understand one another.

Post-war problems will be settled properly only when frankness is assured by the leaders of all interested groups.

We admire the statement of the Roman bishops. We regret the inclusion of these, to us, unfortunate inferences.

THE FIRST THANKSGIVING PROCLAMATION—1789

WHEREAS, it is the duty of all nations to acknowledge the providence of Almighty God, to obey His will, to be grateful for His benefits, and humbly to implore His protection and favor; and

Whereas, both Houses of Congress have, by their joint committee, requested me "to recommend to the people of the United States a day of public thanksgiving and prayer, to be observed by acknowledging with grateful hearts the many and signal favors of Almighty God, especially by affording them an opportunity peaceably to establish a form of government for their safety and happiness";

Now, therefore, I do recommend and assign Thursday, the 26th day of November next, to be devoted by the people of these States to the service of that great and glorious Being who is the beneficent author of all the good that was, that is, or that will be; that we may then all unite in rendering unto Him our sincere and humble thanks for His kind care and protection of the people of this country previous to their becoming a nation; for the signal and manifold mercies and the favorable interpositions of His providence in the course and conclusion of the late war; for the great degree of tranquility, union and plenty which we have since enjoyed; for the peaceable and rational manner in which we have been enabled to establish constitutions of government for our safety and happiness, and particularly the national one now lately instituted; for the civil and religious liberty with which we are blessed, and the means we have of acquiring and diffusing useful knowledge; and, in general, for all the great and various favors which He has been pleased to confer upon us.

And also that we may then unite in most humbly offering our prayers and supplications to the great Lord and Ruler of Nations, and beseech Him to pardon our national and other transgressions; to enable us all, whether in public or private stations, to perform our several and relative duties properly and punctually; to render our National Government a blessing to all the people by constantly being a government of wise, just and constitutional laws, discreetly and faithfully executed and obeyed; to protect and guide all sovereigns and nations (especially such as have shown kindness to us), and to bless them with good govern-

Thanksgiving, 1943

Thanksgiving Day is a distinctively American holiday. It is the only National Holiday with a definitely religious background. We boast that we are a Christian nation. Literally this is not true. The religious census reveals that less than fifty per cent of our population owes allegiance to some organized Christian group. But this is a case where the minority exercises a real influence. We can state fairly that the over-all approach of our Nation is Christian. For this we may be truly thankful.

We have not seen the Presidents' Thanksgiving Day proclamation. We cannot, therefore analyze its contents, or comment upon its statements. We conjecture that he, the President, will tell us that, as a Nation, we should be thankful for the success of our armed forces in battle; for the united spirit of the nation in facing the supreme task of the war; and for the fact that we are still the best clothed and best fed nation in the world. And last, but not least, in proportion our sacrifices to date, have been minor in comparison with our Allies. For all these benefits, we thank God.

It seems to us that there is a deeper significance to the day, for the thinking Christian. The convinced Christian is a person whose life is God-centered. Because of this the giving of thanks is not something abnormal, it is just as normal as breathing. For the convinced Christian lives in an atmosphere of continual thanksgiving to a gracious Heavenly Father, who, out of the abundance of His love, bestows good gifts upon His children.

It is that spirit of the normal atmosphere of thanksgiving that we as Christians are obligated to create. Chances come to us every day to make this spirit real to some one. We truly observe a day of Thanksgiving, when in humble penitence, we thank our God and Father, through Jesus Christ, for His inestimable gifts to us.

War clouds; separation from loved ones in danger; normal ways disrupted; sacrifices called for; all are here in 1943. But, thank God that, as His soldiers in Christ Jesus, we have the lively hope of ultimate victory because His way will one day triumph.

Frankness Needed

No one denies the fact that in spite of the outward unity exhibited by the United Nations there exist many different opinions as to post-war problems. The nations desire "a just and durable peace." But the fact is that there is division within the separate nations that compose the United Nations. Here in our own country one cannot be so naive as to be blind to the shifting currents of opinion and to the suspicions of various groups as to the sincerity of other groups. We are perhaps being guilty ourselves, but if we are, it is for the sole purpose of making a plea for utter frankness.

We believe that frankness is needed in dealing with post-war problems. We believe that true understanding cannot be attained between nations unless each nation within its own boundaries sees that its component parts deal with one another frankly.

Our brethren of the Roman Catholic hierarchy, at a meeting of the administrative board of the Catholic Welfare Conference in Washington, put forth a statement on "Peace Essentials." There is a great deal in this document with which we can agree whole-heartedly.

"The recognition of the sovereignty of God and the moral law as treasured in the Christian tradition is basic to the right ordering of international relations. In Creation, God gave to the human race its essential unity and bound all men together in a brotherhood as comprehensive as humanity itself. In the plan of Divine Providence the human family was divided into nations and races, but this division in no way impaired the essential unity of mankind." With that statement no Christian could disagree. We wish that the whole tenor of these "peace essentials," had been kept on that plane.

But very honestly we feel that two veiled references have been made that are upsetting to many of us. The first one occurs in the fourth paragraph: "The Declarations of the Moscow Conference do, indeed, open the way to necessary international cooperation for peace as well as for war. In this they represent a definite step in the right direction. They do not however dispel the fear that compromises on the ideals of the Atlantic Charter are in prospect. Some things these documents imply by statement and more significantly still by omission leave an uneasiness in minds intent on peace with justice to all." We are not quite clear on what our Roman Catholic brethren have in mind. But the inference is religious freedom. If it is that, we ask them to reflect that the Moscow Conference was dealing largely with military problems, and only opening the way for later discussions on vital issues affecting the peace. We feel sure that our Russian Ally will be perfectly willing to discuss these issues openly and frankly when the proper time arrives. To say that the Atlantic Charter has been compromised because of the silence of the Moscow pact on religious issues, is to our mind a mis-statement of fact. This was never the intended purpose of the recent Moscow Conference. The Roman Church's leaders surely know this. They, too, are guilty of upsetting people by their influence as to a compromise of the Atlantic Charter. Frankness and not innuendo is the way out.

The second reference comes under the head, "Duty Amid Racial Tensions." The statement is made: And we plead as well for a generous interest in the welfare of our Spanish-speaking population. This refers, of course, to the Latin American countries. We may be

An Example of War-time Churchmanship

By ROBERT O. KEVIN

AS THE TIME for the Every Member Canvass approaches, we will be greeted with a new flock of alibis in a good many parishes. These will come from people who wish the Church well but whose support seldom goes farther than a vague desire that "everything will turn out all right."

The alibis this year will be taxes, the Red Cross, U. S. O. appeals, the high cost of living, stationary incomes, the war, dislocation of business, uncertainty about the future.

The canvasser will turn away from these homes feeling at times crushed and defeated. It may be the excuses are just; perhaps people are doing more than they ought to be asked to bear. Should the Church retrench and wait for a better, fairer day after the war to go forward?

If the canvasser, however, is a staunch vestryman who has been working for the Church for a good many years, he will remember the excuses of a decade ago. The alibis are different but they have much the same ring. Frequently they come from the same people.

What About the War?

Is the war the time to quit on the Church, not devotionally but financially? Many local budgets for the coming year will be kept this fall at the same level as for 1943. Many a vestry will feel that it is acting with farseeing wisdom in asking no more than to retire indebtedness and to hold expenditures within severe limits. "No expansion, hold the fort!" will be the watchword. And it may ring in some local parish ears with a more impressive sound than the keynote struck at the General Convention by the Presiding Bishop, "Through world evangelism to world fellowship in Christ!"

Obviously both appeals cannot be responded to at one time by the same people. They point in opposite directions. A churchman cannot stand still and hold the line and at the same time move out into the world in fellowship for Christ. Which voice will he heed?

Back in a little used book of the Bible there is the story of how one believer found a gruelling war-period for Israel not a time to sit back holding anything, but the moment to go out and to risk all that she had for the God of her fathers and the faith of her fellow-countrymen. It is the story of Judith in the Apocrypha. Clement of Rome later called her the "blessed Judith." Her courage and faith were a blessing to the Jews.

The Days Between the Testaments

Largely because of ignorance and prejudice the Apocrypha has almost no place in the teaching of most of the churches of American Protestantism. And although it is a part of our version of the Scriptures, few churchmen are acquainted any longer with its stories and with the background of its history.

This is a great pity for by neglecting the Apocrypha we fail to appreciate a period in Hebrew history that in some respects seems almost contemporary to our own, we know nothing of many of the most dramatic events of Biblical days, and we forget a time when God was moving through the life of His people in extraordinary ways. To suppose one knows the story of the Hebrews without being acquainted with the background of the Apocryphal books is to try to understand the history of the United States and remain in total ignorance of the Revolutionary War.

It was in this time, roughly between 200 B. C. and the birth of Our Lord, that the Hebrews won their independence from a tyranny as ruthless and cruel as that which exists in Nazi Europe today. It was a time when a pagan monarch tried to stamp out the religion of the Jews and when the mere possession of a copy of the Scriptures from the Old Testament was an offense that could be visited with the penalty of death.

The military dictatorship, prior to the Jewish Revolution, was established by the Kingdom of Syria. Its megalomaniac tyrant was Antiochus Ephiphanes. His capital was in Antioch. The war against oppression started in 167 B. C., with the revolt of the Maccabean family and a handful of insurgents. And from then on until independence was finally secured in 143 B. C., Israel knew little more than the fighting of battles, the tramp of invading armies across her borders, burdensome taxes, hardship, suffering and loss.

"Underground Newspapers"

The spirit of conquered peoples in Europe today is largely kept alive by their faith that God will not forever let his people suffer nor let the cause of the wicked finally prevail. And they are led by faith to believe that the day of their redemption draws near.

In all this they are encouraged by the underground newspapers of Europe which generally disguise names and places lest the paper fall into enemy hands, but which tell the story nevertheless of the heroic resistance their fellow-countrymen are making. Thus from the Lowlands to the Balkans, in France, Poland, Czecho-Slovakia and Germany itself, the heroic war of revolt goes on.

So it was in ancient Palestine. Some of the Apocryphal books are the "underground newspapers" of their day. That is why they frequently read like fiction, with distorted historical references, with names drawn from an earlier time, but to the initiated, the faithful Jew and patriot they were readily understood.

The names for example in the story of Judith are patently disguised. Antiochus Ephiphanes is called Nebuchadnezzar, the Syrians are called Assyrians, the heathen capital of Antioch is referred to as Nineveh. The whole event is described as having taken place in the 6th century but no loyal Jew fighting the Syrians was in any doubt as to the enemy.

The Heroine Judith

The story, however, has to do with the Syrian siege of the Israelite city of Shechem, called "Bethulia", until its inhabitants are reduced to desperate straits and the point of surrender. At that dark hour the beautiful Judith comes forward and offers her services to the elders of the city. She is a wealthy widow with much to risk, but if the city and then the Holy Nation of God goes down before the invader—everything is lost.

With her maid she planned to enter the Syrian camp at night and by the exercise of her charms to win the love of the Syrian commander, Holofernes. This she does and the story of her exploit is told in the most masterly prose. Finally becoming enamored of her, the Syrian in a drunken sleep places himself in her power. This is the moment Judith had waited. Quickly killing the commander, she leaves his tent, makes her way back to the Israelite lines, and when the battle is resumed the following morning the armies of the invader are decisively defeated.

Through the whole dangerous experience not once did Judith forget her religious responsibilities as a faithful Jewess. And that is the remarkable part of the story. How she managed with all the risks involved to perform the proper ablutions, to eat only the permitted foods, to remain pure before Holofernes, yet to hazard her life for the redemption of her people and the greater glory of God, is an inspiring and wonderful story.

Her Day and Ours

Before Judith set out on her heroic exploit, this was her prayer to God:

"Your strength is not in numbers nor your might in the strong, but you are the God of the lowly, the helper of the inferior, the champion of the weak, the protector of the neglected, the saviour of the despairing.

"Yes, God of my father, and God of the inheritance of Israel, Lord of the heavens and the earth, creator of the waters, king of all your creation, hear my prayer. . . . Make my words the wound and stripe of those who have planned such cruelty against your Covenant and your consecrated House, and Mount Zion and the house your sons possess. Make your nation and every tribe to know and to understand that you are God, the God of all power and might, and that the nation of Israel has no protector but you."

And Judith's prayer was granted. Because of her and of others like her who counted life of little worth if not lived generously for others' good, the oppressor was put down. And in the fulness of time the way was prepared for the coming of the Son of God, bearing salvation and healing for the nations.

The summons to us this hour is no whit different from that which came to Judith. We can retire if we will to some Bethulia of our own. But if all of us do that, everything we know and love and hold most dear may go down to defeat. Or we can make another kind of response and join hands and hearts with millions of others and "through world evangelism" find "world fellowship in Christ."

FAREWELL TO SUMMER

One by one the goldenrods
  Supplant the beauty of the rose;
And with her wares securely packed,
  The tired summer softly goes.

Bright harbingers, and yet a mute
  Reminder of the summer dead,
The goldenrod wears her bright crown
  With dignity upon her head.

A late wind moves the withered grass,
  And softly sobs a dirge-like hymn,
While goldenrods lift autumn's torch
  To burn for summer's requiem.

TRIBUTE TO A SEA DOG

"Gyp," an ordinary terrier in appearance, is called by the London Evening Standard the most remarkable dog in the British Navy. Every man on the ship commanded by his master is convinced that Gyp brings him luck. It isn't superstition; they have seen how amazingly capable the terrier is.

He is able to detect aircraft long before they are heard by the human ear. An important naval officer recently named his "the R. A. F. dog", explaining that "he cocks an ear to aircraft before we can hear them on the bridge".

The men claim that Gyp "smells" U-boats. "Why, it was only on our last trip," according to the ship's first lieutenant, "that he was so gloomy all one morning. It was as if he knew that something unpleasant was about. Then we picked up a U-boat and went after it. We chased it off, and afterwards Gyp was fit as a fiddle."

Appropriately enough, the black and white markings on Gypt's coat form a big and unmistakable "V" right in the middle of his back. He is the proud possessor of an "Able Seaman" diploma, presented to him by the crew. On three occasions Gyp has been left behind by the ship and each time "something, not disastrous, but quite unpleasant", has happened. That was more proof, if the crew needed it, that Gyp was their good-luck mascot and capable aide."—Alan A. Brown, in Our Dumb Animals.

IN CHURCH

We go to Church, and we enter into an atmosphere of calm. The wisdom of the ages is about us. The oldest narratives of human history are read in our hearing, and through all the familiarity of phrase, the sincerity of the narrator forces itself upon us. The sense that we are at one with the singers of countless generations is uplifting. St. Paul's exhortations stimulate our courage. In the teaching and the passion of the Gospels we follow the way of perfect life that leads to victory over death. All this may be possible in the closet, the sublimation of it may startle us as we walk along the streets. But the periodical withdrawal into these houses of service built with hands, helps us to dwell in houses not built with hands."—Ex.

HE WHO MADE THE STARS

He Who made the stars
  Made fireflies, too.
The stars were not enough
  He knew
There must be fireflies, too.

And so He made great deeds
  For us to do,
But there are not enough—
  So He made small tasks, too.

Outpouring of Manpower Expected

Indications Are That the Men's Advent Corporate Communion Will Be Largest Ever

New York, N. Y.—The Men's Advent Corporate Communion will be attended by the largest number of Episcopal Churchmen ever sharing in a common service, according to present indications. The Rev. Wilburn C. Campbell, executive secretary of the Presiding Bishop's Committee on Laymen's Work, says that his opinion is based on orders for printed matter which are overwhelming the shipping facilities of the Church Missions House; correspondence with bishops and clergy and with lay key men in widely scattered areas throughout the Church. "The Advent Corporate Communion," Mr. Campbell says, "is becoming more and more the spiritual keynote of the Episcopal Church." Sponsored by the Brotherhood of St. Andrew for more than a quarter of a century, it represents today a nation-wide outpouring of the Church's manpower.

The Presiding Bishop's committee has asked the cooperation of all Church leaders, in parishes and dioceses, in the Men's Advent Corporate Communion on the First Sunday of Advent, November 28. Specific and detailed suggestions were distributed widely; methods of organization in parish and diocese; plans for making the most of the cooperation of men's organizations, such as the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, the Laymen's League, and Men's Clubs; plans for formation of special committees to work personally to assure the participation of all men of the Church in this great act of corporate worship.

Present estimates indicate that approximately half a million men and boys of the Episcopal Church will make their Communions November 28. This is based upon the opinion of diocesan key men who have been in constant contact with over 3,000 parish key men whose responsibility it is to promote the men's participation.

Requests for literature have exceeded the most optimistic forecasts. The reprint, "Before Breakfast", by Richardson Wright, editor of House and Garden, is being ordered in unprecedented quantities. Its distribution, Mr. Campbell says, seems certain to exceed 100,000.

The first diocese to report that arrangements have been made for a radio broadcast by the bishop is Newark. The Rt. Rev. Henry Washburn will speak to all the men of his diocese as they assemble for the Communion breakfast. Similar arrangements are under way in many other centers.

Most dioceses will receive a special Advent Corporate Gift. This money will be used for missionary work within the various dioceses. In many dioceses it will be used for work in war industry areas and for laymen's conferences.

A final suggestion offered by the Presiding Bishop's Committee points out that "this Corporate Communion comes in the midst of the Every Member Canvass period. Use this service to spiritualize the Canvass. The two efforts complement and supplement each other".

"EPISCOPAL CHURCH IN WYOMING" IS FASCINATING RECORD

Laramie, Wyo.—The 1944 edition of "The Episcopal Church in Wyoming" is off press. This is the third volume of a fascinating record of a fast-developing missionary district. The book is published by the Wyoming Committee on the State of the Church, of which the Rev. Dudley B. McNeil is chairman, and the declared purpose is to provide a volume that "will give to you an up-to-date knowledge of the Church at work in this romantic but important western State; and that it will entertain and thrill you with its informal account of the adventures and experiences of the missionaries who worship and work among the cowboys, sheep-herders, oil men and coal miners, railroaders and ranchers, trappers and forest rangers, in this deep West, as well as in the towns and cities of solid foundation and aspiring destiny".

The 114-page book, bound in heavy paper and well illustrated, tells such facts as that seven years ago the District had 34 occupied and used, and 13 apparently dead churches, today there are 58 churches, all active, and in addition regular services are held in ten other places; church buildings are under construction in two places, and money is being raised in two other places, for church buildings.

In the five years, 1932 to 1937, the average number of persons baptized in a year was 297. In the last seven years the average is 270 per year. Confirmations rose from an average of 239 per year to an average of 405 per year in the last five years.

The book, "The Episcopal Church in Wyoming", gives a detailed historical sketch of the Church in that district; much information about Wyoming itself which is not known by most people; description of work in all Church centers throughout the district; information about the Indian work of the district; description of the institutional work done under district auspices.

Believes Church Thoroughly Awake

Dr. Pepper Returns from Pacific and Series of Conferences

New York, N. Y.—Upon completion of a trip which took him to the Pacific Coast for a series of conferences with diocesan officials in Christian Social Relations, the Rev. Dr. Almon R. Pepper, executive secretary of the National Council's Division of Christian Social Relations, believes that the Church is thoroughly awake to the many new opportunities and responsibilities growing out of the war.

Dr. Pepper's conferences included a session with the Rev. Walter Morley and the Rev. Benson Fisher concerning war industry and work in the Chicago area. Also participation in the Southern California Conference on Church Social Work under the auspices of the Southern California Council of Churches. Dr. Pepper spoke on Church and Community at a meeting of the Los Angeles Department of Christian Social Relations, Department of Christian Education and Forward in Service. He visited war industry area work in Westport Heights, and with Bishop W. Bertrand Stevens, visited the Hospital of the Good Samaritan, and with the Rev. Dr. George Davidson, its president, visited the Church Home for Children.

In San Francisco, Dr. Pepper met with the Diocesan Department of Christian Social Relations, and conferred with Bishop-elect Sumner Walters and the Rev. George Pratt, of Stockton, concerning war industry work.

At Alameda, Dr. Pepper was able to visit shipbuilding yards and study Church work among employees. He notes that in October the Richmond yards built 31 ships, and that within recent months there has been a population growth from 27,000 to 127,000.

At Vallejo, Calif., Dr. Pepper visited shipbuilding yards, with the Rev. Herndon Ray, and inspected housing projects and the Church program being carried on under the direction of Deaconess Florence I. Ormerod.

Turning eastward, Dr. Pepper met with the Christian Social Relations Department and the Army and Navy Commission of the Diocese of Colorado, conferring with Church leaders in these fields, in Denver, Colorado Springs and Pueblo. In the latter place the Church's program among war industry workers was discussed, and at Fort College, the needs of migrant agricultural workers.

Dr. Pepper visited the service men's Canteen in Denver, and studied the special activities of the Council of Churches for uniformed men. In Colorado Springs he had the opportunity of studying the activities of the Episcopal Church in the Camp Carson area.

"Under the leadership of our Presiding Bishop," Dr. Pepper said, "the Episcopal Church has been called upon

Admiral Cluverius Addresses Graduates

Exercises at Chaplain Training School, College of William and Mary

Williamsburg, Va.—Rear-Admiral Wat Taylor Cluverius, U. S. N., Retired, President of Worcester Polytechnic Institute, of Worcester, Massachusetts, was the speaker at the graduation exercises of Class 20-43, Naval Training School (Chaplains) located at the College of William and Mary.

Admiral Cluverius said: "Men at sea come closer to God, probably more, than any others. They behold the hand of God in the sea. In tempest and turmoil they pray for the strength of the everlasting mercy. I challenge you to fan that spark into a living flame. 'Keep that which is committed to thy trust,' wrote St. Paul to Timothy.

We of the Navy have a saying in the fleet to the effect that 'a taut ship is a happy ship'. Most chaplains I have known have brought happiness wherever they went.

The Navy requires discipline; however, it is not the discipline of the old world which is blind obedience. Our idea of discipline springs from the same Greek root as the word used in the New Testament—disciple; meaning a willing follower of a leader. In this connection one cannot forget the words of Captain Gilmore, who though injured while in command of a submarine ordered, 'Take her down!'

Loyalty is a watchword of the service. Loyalty works both up and down; to those in authority over us and to those under our care.

Self-Control, a product of discipline is essential.

Tact. Where men live close together, as on a ship, tact is the lubricating oil among them.

Devotion still is a vital part of the Navy. A Chief Petty Officer aboard the U. S. S. Oklahoma at Pearl Harbor was told to 'abandon ship'. Knowing the importance of the compressors in time of battle he replied, 'Not as long as our guns are firing'.

Energy and perseverance are ever needful. Robert E. Peary, after having been defeated in four attempts to reach the North Pole, started out on the fifth adventure saying, 'I will find a way or make one'.

Enthusiasm needs to be present. The chaplain can assist in directing this 'fire within'.

Faith is most essential. Belief in our job is indispensable. Faith is made very real at sea.

Admiral Cluverius then told the story of a man lost at sea in a plane. The man's faith in his eqquipment and in his training brought him safely through.

The war is not won. Victory is not near, but it is sure to come. Now we must have faith in God, who must be on the side of man created in His image struggling to be free."

CONFERENCE ON CHRISTIAN MISSION AND WORLD ORDER

Richmond, Va.—A Conference on the Christian Mission and World Order was held in Richmond, November 10, at Grace-Holy Trinity Church.

The purpose of the Conference was to awaken Christian peoples to their grave responsibilities in this tragic hour of history, and to prepare the leadership of the Church for a Campaign of Education to follow; "To clarify the mind of the Church regarding the moral, political, and economic foundations of an enduring peace". "There can be no just and enduring peace," they declared, "that is not built on the corner-stone of the law laid down by Christ—The Fatherhood of God, and the Brotherhood of man."

The basic principles of the Four Freedoms, and the Six Pillars of Peace were discussed and the Church's task clearly shown.

Dr. Herman Sweet, director of Youth Leadership of the International Council of Religious Education, opened the Conference and announced the theme: "A Time for Greatness—Great Leadership; Great Men; Great Women; Great Choices; Great Faith."

Dr. Ewart Turner, for many years pastor of the American Church in Berlin, stressed the confusion and the break-down of the old order, and said that we had nothing to look to but God's Order, the Kingdom of God. This was Jesus' answer to the World's ills.

Mrs. Erdman, a missionary from Syria, conducted a sectional Conference for women which brought out the Race Problem. "A barrier that must be removed to assure enduring peace," she said. "We must affirm our deep spiritual fellowship with all races, everywhere, and we must abstain from all hatreds."

Dr. Henry Crane, an outstanding leader in this new movement, likened us to a thermostat. He reminded us that we have the privilege to set our own temperature, of guiding and ruling our own lives. And he also emphasized, as did all the speakers, the importance of inner meditations to purify the soul, and acts that will exemplify the dynamic quality of our Faith. The day was valuable, enlightening, interesting, and inspiring.

CHURCH OF THE AIR

Rev. H. S. Wood Elected Dean

New Dean of Cathedral of the Incarnation to Be Installed in New Year

Garden City, L. I.—The Rev. Hubert Stanley Wood, for the last twelve and a half years rector of St. George's Church, Flushing, Queens, has been elected as dean of the Cathedral of the Incarnation to succeed the Rev. George A. Robertshaw, who resigned on July 9. The election of Mr. Wood, who is 52 years old, was announced Nov. 3 at the Cathedral. He was nominated for the deanship by Bishop James P. DeWolfe.

Mr. Wood came to Flushing from the rectorship of Trinity Church, Syracuse, where he served four years. The previous five years he was rector of St. Paul's Church, Watertown, N. Y. Born in Quebec, Canada, he became a citizen of the United States in 1919, three years after his ordination.

The tentative plan is to have the installation of the new Dean on Jan. 1.

HELPFUL CONFERENCES

Sponsored by W. A. and Department of Promotion

Detroit, Mich.—A series of unusually helpful and successful conferences was sponsored in the Diocese of Michigan during September by the Diocesan Department of Promotion and the Woman's Auxiliary.

The first of these was a conference of women held in St. Joseph's Church, Detroit, on Wednesday, September 15. More than 125 were present to hear Dr. Lewis B. Franklin's address on the program of the General Church, and an explanation by Mrs. Donald C. Stevenson, a member of the National Board of the Woman's Auxiliary and former Diocesan President of the organization, of the plans for the Triennial Meeting in Cleveland in October.

Dr. Franklin remained in Michigan for the next two days to attend the Clergy Conference, held on Thursday and Friday, September 16-17, in All Saints' Church, Pontiac. Eighty-five clergy, of the 100 active and living in the Diocese, were present,—an excellent representation.

The Laymen's Conference was held in St. Paul's Church, Flint, September 18-19, and was followed by an afternoon meeting of laymen interested in promoting a diocesan men's fellowship. About 100 were present.

The program at the Clergy and Laymen's Conferences was substantially the same. Departing from the plan of former years, the various addresses and discussions centered on the new work which needs to be done in the diocese, and not primarily on the money necessary to do it. Specific amounts and figures were mentioned, naturally, but only incidentally to the setting forth of the program itself.

Each conference opened with a brief address of welcome by the Rt. Rev. Frank W. Creighton, D. D., bishop of the diocese, followed by a keynote address, "Our Diocese in War Time", given by the Rev. G. Paul Musselman, rector of St. Alban's Church, Highland Park. Dr. Franklin then spoke at the Clergy Conference.

At the Laymen's Conference, following Mr. Musselman's address, the United Church Canvass to be held in Detroit was explained by Mr. Harold Thompson, its chairman. On the second day of each conference, following a service of Holy Communion and breakfast, "The Parish in Action" was presented. The Rev. R. E. DuPlan, of Grace Church, Port Huron, led this section at the Clergy Conference, and the Rev. Otis G. Jackson, of the host parish, at the Laymen's Conference. A Symposium on "The Technique of the Canvass" was led by the Rev. David R. Covell, L. H. D., Superintendent of the Detroit City Mission. The final address at the Clergy Conference was made by Dr. Franklin.

INCREASED ENROLLMENT AT NASHOTAH

Nashotah, Wis.—At a time when many institutions of higher and professional learning are showing a marked decrease in their number of students, Nashotah House is enjoying the interesting experience of having the largest enrollment in its more than a century of existence. For this academic year (the 102nd in the history of the seminary) there are fifty-two men enrolled in the seminary department. These men have come from 23 dioceses, representing all parts of the country. The diocese of Milwaukee is most largely represented, as usual, with 19 men. Chicago and Pennsylvania have four each. Harrisburg and Newark each have three. Northern Indiana has two. The following dioceses have one student each: Alaska, Albany, Atlanta, Fond du Lac, Iowa, Kentucky, Long Island, Los Angeles, Maryland, Montana, Nebraska, New Jersey, New York, Oregon, Rhode Island, Salina, and Wyoming. These men have had their college training in twenty colleges and universities, which have as wide a geographical distribution as the dioceses which they represent.

In addition to the fifty-two seminary students, there are 30 men living on the campus under the Nashotah-Carroll plan. This means that they are still in college. They live on the Nashotah campus and are under the Nashotah discipline, but they are taking their college work at Carroll College, some fifteen miles away, in the city of Waukesha. Each day of the school week they travel between the two campuses in the Nashotah House bus. Fifteen dioceses are represented in this collegiate department. Long Island is in the lead with six, Milwaukee second with five. New York and Northern Indiana have three each, Chicago and Pennsylvania two. The following have one: Colorado, Easton, Harrisburg, Louisiana, Maine, Montana, Quincy, Springfield, and Western Nebraska.

The members of the Nashotah House staff are devoting much of their time to relieve the situation caused by the man-power shortage among the clergy. The Dean of the seminary, the Very Rev. E. J. M. Nutter, D. D., is away many week-ends to assist by supplying. The same is true of the senior professor, the Rev. W. Freeman Whitman, S. T. D. The professor of Old Testament, the Rev. Frank H. Hallock, S. T. D., has been for several months in charge of a parish in the diocese of Chicago. The chaplain and instructor in music, the Rev. Lloyd E. Thatcher, is in charge of a parish in the diocese of Milwaukee. And the professor of New Testament, the Rev. Hewitt B. Vinnedge, Ph. D., is caring for a parish in the dioceses of Fond du Lac. Thus it may be said that five members of the staff have almost doubled their responsibilities, at a time when they have been obliged to attend to a larger number of students than has previously been under their charge.

Twelve Hours Continuous Prayer

Observed on Armistice Day at St. Stephen's Church

Wilkinsburg, Penn.—Twelve hours of continuous prayer, 8:00 a. m. to 8:00 p. m., was maintained in St. Stephen's Church, on Armistice Day, thus emphasizing the Church-wide Day of Prayer. The rector, the Rev. Dr. William Porkess, arranged the time in fifteen-minute periods, each period being taken by individual parishioners. The Forward In Service 1943 leaflet was used as a basis for meditation and prayer.

AMAZING! YES, BUT WHAT OF BRITISH MISSIONS?

The monthly report of payments on Expectations for October can truly be called "amazing" for three reasons—(1) 98.3 per cent of the amount due on Expectations has been paid; (2) 78 dioceses and missionary districts paid 100 per cent or more of the amount due; (3) 73.7 per cent of the total Expectation for the year has been paid. None of these items have been equalled in previous years.

But still there is our Aid to

BRITISH MISSIONS

Our help to the world-wide missionary work of the Church of England is still needed, and our giving to this cause in 1941 and 1942 was really generous. While some decrease in the amount of this giving in 1943 is to be expected the present outlook is very discouraging.

About one-half of the dioceses are including their 1943 giving for this purpose in their budget Expectations and from this source the sum of $47,868 will be raised. The other dioceses preferred to continue their special appeal for this fund but the amount received to November 1st from all of such dioceses is only $22,770.78.

The record stands:

|---|---|
| British Missions Gifts 1941 | $341,520.04 |
| British Missions Gifts 1942 | 172,026.33 |
| Budget Item and Specials received to Nov. 1st, 1943 | 70,638.78 |

There is still time to make the 1943 gift an adequate one.

Treasurer.

BISHOPS WRITE BIDDLE

Attorney General Discusses Racial Problems

New York, N. Y.—Bishops of the Episcopal Church in charge of jurisdictions in which there are, or were prior to internment, Japanese people, wrote to Attorney General Francis Biddle prior to his speech last night before the Jewish Theological Seminary of America, asking him to emphasize dangers arising out of present relations with the Japanese people in the United States.

Attorney General Biddle spoke at the Waldorf Astoria on Armistice Day, discussing racial problems, with specific reference to Jewish, Negro and Japanese minorities in this country.

The bishops, including Presiding Bishop Henry St. George Tucker, and Bishop Charles S. Reifsnider, formerly of Tokyo, now in charge of Japanese Episcopalians in this country, assured the Attorney General of their "cordial and whole-hearted support in your defense of the rights of all American citizens, regardless of race or creed. In particular we wish to take advantage of the occasion of your Armistice Day address to thank you for your efforts on behalf of the rights, as Americans, of citizens of Japanese descent."

"In the midst of a war in which we are dedicated to the enlargement of the freedom of all men," the Bishops say, "and at the threshold of victory in that war, it would be a defeat greater than a lost battle, if Americans were to permit the persecution of our own countrymen. The loyalty to this nation and to our professed principles of the great majority of Japanese Americans assuredly outweighs the accident of their descent from a people who are now our enemies.

"The danger that our emotions in the midst of war may inflame us against the reabsorption of American citizens of Japanese descent into the normal community life is a danger to the well-being and freedom of every American. It is the duty not only of government but of the Churches and their members to vindicate the liberties and decencies for which we are at war, and to apply in practice the moral principles we teach."

Other Bishops who telegraphed their desire to sign the letter which was delivered to Attorney General Biddle early last evening, were the Rt. Rev. Karl M. Block, bishop of California; the Rt. Rev. Arthur W. Moulton, bishop of Utah; the Rt. Rev. George Allen Beecher, bishop of Western Nebraska; the Rt. Rev. S. Arthur Huston, bishop of Olympia; the Rt. Rev. Fred Ingley, bishop of Colorado; the Rt. Rev. R. Bland Mitchell, bishop of Arkansas; the Rt. Rev. William P. Remington, bishop of Eastern Oregon; the Rt. Rev. Louis C. Sanford, bishop of San Joaquin; the Rt. Rev. W. Bertrand Stevens, bishop of Los Angeles.

Picked Delegates Attend Youth Conference

Detroit—Getting as many people as possible out to conferences has been the rule for years and years in the Diocese of Michigan, and no doubt in other dioceses as well. However, the rule was reversed by the diocesan department of Young People's Work on October 15-16, when a Youth Leaders' Conference was held at the Girls' Friendly Society Holiday House, Pine Lake, attended by only 35 persons in addition to the speakers. The 35 were selected carefully, about three from each of the 11 Convocations in the dio- [illegible] and were chosen from names sub- [illegible] day morning.

On Saturday, following the service and breakfast, the conference divided into three group periods, on the following subjects: "Corporate Worship," led by the Rev. Robert DeWitt, assistant minister in Christ Church Cranbrook, Bloomfield Hills; "Personal Religion," Mr. Junker; and "Stewardship and Evangelism", the Rev. James McElroy, rector of St. James' Church, Grosse Ile.

The Rev. Sheldon T. Harbach, diocesan director of Young People's Work, spoke on "The Youth in Our Diocese"; the Rev. John L. Knapp, rector of Trinity Church, Oxford, told of plans for the "Rule of Life", of which he is diocesan counsellor, and Mr. Junker concluded the conference with an address on "Developing a Parish Youth Program".

Rector Elected "Commissioner"

Highland Park, Mich.—At a recent meeting of the City Council of Highland Park, the Rev. G. Paul Musselman, rector of St. Alban's Church in that city was unanimously elected as a member of the Fire and Police Commission, a five-man board. He says he is impressed no end, on his customary jaunts around the city, to be smartly saluted and addressed as "Commissioner" by so many uniformed men.

FOREIGN

From the Spiritual Issues of the War

CHRISTIAN ACTIVITIES IN PRISON CAMPS

London.—News has recently reached us concerning the vigorous religious life which is making itself felt in some of the camps in which British and French prisoners are held captive by the Germans.

The following passage (taken from the International Christian Press and Information Service) describes nothing less than a missionary exhibition organized by French Christians in a German prison camp:

"I have delayed writing you so that I could tell you at the same time about the French Empire exhibition for which you sent us many documents which have been very useful for our exhibit. Between the neighboring Catholic Mission booth and our booth for Protestant Missions we hung a sign stating how many people still remain in the world to be evangelized. A large Cross mounted on the globe stood in front of this sign.

"A large stained-glass window representing the victory of the Cross over pagan idols was in the center of our booth. At the right and left were panels decorated with maps and photographs briefly tracing the history of missions and giving statistics of the different Protestant missions in the French possessions, as well as French missions in non-French territory. The Gabon was used to illustrate the details of a mission field.

"In front of the window was an open Bible on a reading desk above a New Testament in the Malgache language and a book showing specimen of translations of the Bible in 710 languages and dialects. To the right of the reading desk: a model of a missionary compound with the church, the school and the missionary's house. To the left: a collection of books on missions, with the suggestion that they could be obtained at the Protestant library. New Testaments and the book, Jesus of Nazareth, were offered to visitors until none remained.

"The exhibition lasted from June 14-23 and was a great success. The Church prepared for it by a missionary week which began with a service emphasizing mission work. Four lectures were given during the week: The History of Missions; Their Spirit; A Missionary Pioneer—Francois Coillard; Missions Today. The Whit Sunday service, followed by Communion, closed the week."

The Methodist Recorder for August 19th included a short article on the work of Methodist chaplains in the prison camps by the Rev. Joseph Firth, M. C. We quote from the article:

"One of them writes that he feels he is one of the busiest persons in Methodism. He says: 'Recently I received my fourth team into membership of the Church, the number being thirteen. We are now starting a lecture mission, and I have trained a team of six for this purpose. We have already enrolled fifty candidates, and we hope to increase this number to one hundred and forty—twenty per lecturer. In this campaign we are including all denominations. Over five hundred took Communion on Easter Sunday. In addition, we have a new course of Bible study just beginning.' Such activity, besides all the social work necessitated by the abnormal way of living, suggests the chaplain is right when he says he is busy.

"A letter from another chaplain reads as follows: 'On Sunday I had five services, besides a Communion service. In this compound I had a Communion service for the officers at 8 A. M., when seventy officers were present, and another service at 10 A. M. At 10:45 A. M. I went to another compound and about three hundred and fifty attended the service. At 11:30 A. M. I went to still another compound and had a congregation of three hundred. At 6:30 A. M. I had a service for the noncommissioned officers, and about two hundred and fifty were present. In all, over a thousand officers and men entered heartily into the services during the day. The hunger for spiritual things is amazing. I am thankful to be here because of the glorious opportunities of helping these men.'

"From the same source there comes a story about the shortage of Bibles and New Testaments: 'At the request of the men we have now services every evening, and we are going through the Gospel of St. Mark. The man who reads the lesson keeps the Bible for one day! We have to loan out our very few Bibles and New Testaments. Hundreds of men are asking for them, and, unfortunately, we cannot get any. Having no hymn books, we have to write out all our hymns.' Need I say this shortage has been relieved through the good offices of the Book Room and our own Welfare Fund.

"Another chaplain, who is in an officers' prisoner-of-war camp, tells us that, in addition to his other religious activities, he is preparing several officers to become local preachers. He adds the request that, having lost everything, he would be glad to have the necessary books and literature to help him in this work. Again we were able to meet the need."

THE DAY OF PRAYER

London—We shall not attempt to give a full account of the National Day of Prayer held on the fourth anniversary of the outbreak of war, Friday, September 3rd. The general course of the day, the striking broadcast services and the activities of churches throughout the country will be already familiar to our readers.

It may be of interest, however, to mention a few experiments which have come to our notice.

At a great munition factory where there are resident chaplains and a factory chapel, a very full programme of services was arranged. A large number of local clergy (Anglican, Free Church and Roman Catholic) were on duty at different times, so that no fewer than fourteen services were held throughout the day. The factory officials provided all the support and assistance which the church authorities could desire. In a hostel connected with this factory a special Anglican and Free Church combined service was held in the evening.

In a number of towns civic services were held (e. g., the Mayor of an East London borough invited the townspeople to join him in such a service in the Town Hall). In other towns shops were closed at a given hour (at the request of the Chamber of Trade) to allow all to attend services conducted by local clergy.

Perhaps the most striking single observance was the broadcast service conducted in Trafalgar Square at 11 A. M. (attended by 10,000 people), but it is now well known that the prayer and thanksgiving to which the King invited his people was widely observed in town and country, factories, offices, the Services, the homes and schools of the land. Services in hop-gardens and Kentish orchards were held during brief intervals between work.

The Newcastle Journal for September 3rd gives an account of an important meeting of prominent laymen held in the City Council Chamber of Newcastle on September 2nd to give active support to the "Manchester Movement." This has as its aim the bringing of Christian principles into business and economic life. The Lord Mayor (Alderman Walter Thompson), who was supported by many prominent laymen of the district, said, "No durable world settlement can be made unless it is inspired by the principles of Christianity. I have never felt it easier," he continued, "to talk of deep spiritual things than at this time and to try to practice the spirit of Christianity in our own lives".

Councillor Pugh said that in any planned society such as they were looking forward to, it was important that Christian principles should bind the people together.

After Lord Grey had added his support to the Lord Mayor's action, saying that the people of Northumberland would gladly accord him loyal assistance, Sir Cuthbert Headlam, M. P., said it was quite clear that the country was in a mood for some spiritual revival as a whole. At the same time he did not see how it was possible to start an evangelical campaign by laymen only; its success would largely depend upon the work and cooperation of the Churches.

It was agreed on the Lord Mayor's to play its part in cooperation with other churches and welfare agencies to make America more Christian. While fighting for the Four Freedoms, we must establish them more securely at home. While working for a good neighbor policy with other nations, we must establish good neighbor policies in our local community life. This means that every parish Church must know its own community and understand its local problems. The local Church must be willing to cooperate with other Churches and with all men of good will in promoting justice and righteousness among the various racial, religious, economic and social groups in the home community. This knowledge of community and program of activities should be incorporated into the worship and prayers of the congregation so that it is obvious to everyone that religion has a dynamic relationship to life."

At the conclusion of his trip, which he confesses was strenuous, Dr. Pepper declared, "The Church is doing a grand job out there."

What Will the Seminaries Do for the Peace?

Your theological faculties do not pretend to have a quick and simple formula for solving all the world's ills. Yet theological schools have much to do with the coming Peace.

They must train men who in the days to come will minister both to people bewildered and downcast by the war, and to those who must take on the heavy post-war responsibilities. Tomorrow's clergy have to furnish inspiration and hope to the laymen who make historic decisions, and to set forth the moral principles on which these decisions should be based. Such ministers need all the Theology, Bible, Church History and Practical Theology they can get. As enrollments drop, the faculties are "tooling up" and planning to make their curricula as effective as possible.

THOUGHTS FOR THE THOUGHTFUL

"Christ of the Countryside is acquainted with the agriculture of His time and country; and He believes in the dignity and worth of an avocation which has more to do with creative processes than any other. He also knows Nature in her various moods and possibilities, and uses her at every turn. Thirty-two of His sixty-four parables take His listeners out into the open country, and thirty-seven of His forty-eight miracles have an outdoor background.

—Malcolm Dana, in "Christ of the Countryside".

"He does well: That serves the community rather than His own will."

—Thomas à Kempis, in "The Imitation of Christ", I:xv.

An Eleventh Commandment: "Thou shalt inherit the holy earth as a faithful steward, conserving its resources and productivity from generation to generation. Thou shalt protect thy fields from soil erosion and thy hills from overgrazing by thy herds, so that thy descendants may have abundance forever. If any shall fail in this stewardship of the land, his fertile fields shall become sterile stones and gullies, and his descendants shall decrease and live in poverty or vanish from the face of the earth."

—Walter Clay Lowdermilk.

"If the Church has any power in the world today it will speak out against the exploitation of soil resources. It will do so, not on the basis of what will pay nor of appeal to posterity, but on the basis of a religious motivation. It will teach men to have a reverence for the Creator of the land and, therefore, a respect for natural forces. Under such a religious view men may be led into an appreciation of the soil and farmers may be brought back to the pioneers' love of their own land. If everyone can come to recognize the hand of God in the land-economy of this continent, there is hope for our most vital natural resource."

—Thomas Alfred Tripp, in "Advance".

"I have often thought that children living in the country in communion with nature and animals, are in a very definite way prepared for anything that can happen to them during the course of their lives. Life's beginnings and life's endings almost burn themselves into their youthful, wondering eyes; and if you observe these children closely, year after year, you can see how they gradually prepare themselves for all they will ever encounter of good and evil, to savor the gladness of life fully and richly; to bear sorrow without becoming embittered and without breaking. Taking all together, these experiences will coalesce, form a body of understanding—of things, of happenings and of men. Something which, with their own abilities and goodness of heart, will become what I have called God's gift of understanding."

—Jaegermester Plov, Translated from the Danish.

"Let the farmer forevermore be honored in his calling."

—Thomas Jefferson.

The Southern Churchman

"Help us to do Thy work with good courage," from Bishop Westcott's famous prayer, may well be the prayer of all today, who labor for the coming of God's Kingdom. Shall the Church, after the war, make a slow and timid retreat, or a wholehearted and inspiring advance? This is the day of opportunity.

A LETTER FROM A SOLDIER

U. S. Navy,
Fleet P. O.,
San Francisco, Calif.,

Nov. 4, 1943.

My dear Friend:

Thank you ever so much for my copy of "Forward" and the Church Bulletin. They do much for me when I read them over. I would have thanked you sooner for the little booklet, but it was so long in arriving, almost a month.

I wish that some of our Church members could attend one of our services here at the Sub Base. The Chapel is a small, wooden structure, with hard, straight-backed benches,—cold and uncomfortable—but the services are well attended and made up entirely of soldiers and sailors. We wear what we please, the general trend is to keep warm and no one cares about the mud on our boots.

The organ is about the size of a good sized suit-case, but the notes are true and strong. The singing is superb. The voices aren't good, in fact, they are seldom ever on pitch, but the little Chapel fairly rocks, because the hearts of the men are in their praising. Sometimes we have an alert, and it strikes me as being so funny to watch the men come straggling in, fully armed with gas masks, helmets, guns, etc., just as the early pilgrims did so many years ago (without the gas masks, of course).

I know that God is everywhere and that His Church is universal, but to me there is only one church like Monumental, and although I can't be there in person on Sundays, I am always "there in spirit". I make it a point to arise each Sunday morning at five A. M., it then being eleven o'clock and church time there. I do this because at that exact moment I know what all of the folks I think so much of back home are doing. The Service is so vivid in my mind, I can almost hear the organ and the choir, can almost look out over the congregation as I have done so many times before.

I have always tried, at times I have failed, but I have always tried to be at my place in my Church on Sunday morning, and now as I sit here in this lonely corner of the world, I know that I am being well repaid; for each pleasant memory and the little familiarities of each detail is so imbedded in my heart, that I find myself constantly looking forward to 5 A. M. Sunday morning and the feeling I possess for my home at Monumental and home.

With kindest regards to all,

Ever,

C.

A MAN'S JOB

Mr. Editor:

Your issue of November 13th, I, for one, am finding unusually stimulating and stirring. Hence (reluctantly) this letter. Dr. Glenn's address is extremely suggestive and will be filed for reference. Also it is hoped that "Haven" will enlarge upon his problem (page 3), "How to talk to someone about Christianity" and Christ. The Fall Campaign is on and a Bishop has been heard here delegated by our great Presiding Bishop. His addresses were clear, cogent, interesting, human, "good." But what was the point? On page 10 you tell of a Bishop who sent one of his Rectors through the Diocese with this result, "10 per cent increase on the raised quota". In other words, money. Dr. Glenn says page 5, column 2, "Man does live by bread, however; although not by bread alone". The Church must have money, but not money alone. Yet every Fall when a Church-wide effort is made, skillfully advertised and enlisting hundreds of workers, the aim is money, more money, "increased quotas". Perhaps money is easier to get than personal service. But which is the greater need? Our Lord said, "I am come to seek and to save that which was lost," and He was called, "The Friend of Sinners". We are told that "lost" and "sinners" are outworn terms. But these thousands of unchurched, all around us, are lost to the Church in which most of them were baptized. And if they are living "without God", prayerless, ignoring the Bible (pagan?) are they not the counterpart of those who caused our Lord to be jeered at because He was openly interested in them? If He was like that, must not His Church be like that? Note His call and promise, "Follow Me and I will make you fishers of men". Fishing is hard work even as a sport. To catch trout, salmon, sailfish, is "a man's job". And to "win souls" calls for and calls out the best that is in us. (But some say, "Money is the acid test".) What a day it was when some fine layman founded the Brotherhood of St. Andrew! Our men were not and it seems are not equal to that task. We have seen groups of men "led to the water" of personal service but refusing to drink, though 20 times 20 voices cried the need. Dr. Glenn says (p. 7) ministers must not "hide behind their office", saying (I suppose), "it is my duty to preach; theirs to come and hear", and so avoid the drudgery of "seeking the lost". But equally the laymen may not hide behind their lack of office, saying, "That is the Parson's job". We have been told repeatedly that in the beginning, the Church did not depend on ordained officers, but spread from man to man by lay disciples whose love ("care", page 7) impelled them to share their find. That is the high privilege of all Christians. "He rushed on danger, because he loved it; and on difficulties because he despised them" (p. 8). Plenty of dangers and difficulties for those who would be "fishers of men"; dangers of making mistakes, danger of discovering one's own weakness, difficulty of effective approach, danger of mortifying failure. (Even our Lord did not succeed every time!) But "he that winneth souls is wise" (Proverbs 11:30). It takes courage. We shall have to overcome shyness, to shake off apathy, to endure ridicule, to be despised. Whatever is "Haven's" developed technique, he will probably agree that a good stand-by is the daily prayer which Dr. Glazebrook (a layman) loved to recommend in the Bishops' Crusade, "O God, give me an opportunity. O God, make me equal to the opportunity." See also Glenn, page 6, top of second column.

HYMN ON COVER PAGE

Williamstown, Mass.

Mr. Editor:

Your readers should be told that Dr. Fullerton's hymn, appearing on cover, Nov. 6th issue, goes well to the tune, "Londonderry Air", and to that tune we used to sing the hymn in England and at the Keswick Convention. Words and tune, too, appear at 422 in the Keswick Hymn Book.

HAVEN . . .

By J. W. KENNEDY

MOTHERS ARE STILL anxious and upset when it is their boy who is sent over. It seems to be different somehow when it is one's own son. We can see what another mother ought to do and can understand the way she ought to feel when her boy is shipped and we attempt to console her and grow impatient if she will not be consoled. But when it comes our turn, that is a different story. I want all of us to think seriously and prayerfully of what God expects when this (whatever "this" is) happens to "me."

First we should be fairly certain by now (even if only a child) that the unexpected does come and one must be prepared to face it. This is even more obvious when the expected happens. The boy in the army of a nation at war where the theater of action is beyond its own shores will be sent there. The only uncertainty is time. We do not know when. But most mothers and others have had time to prepare. When the event comes it cannot be a shock if they have faced it before. Of course, if they refuse to believe he will ever go across and dismiss it from their minds (they never can from their often unwise but loving hearts) it will be a terrific shock. Many mothers feel their sons will escape, they do not know exactly how. A great many Christian mothers have been preparing for such moments all through the life-time of their sons, whom they have raised as their contributions to the world, be it much or little. In their times alone with God and His word, both written and spoken, they have stored up phrases and insights to strengthen them in time of need. It may be the 23rd Psalm memorized and repeated quietly at times of uncertainty or the words of an old hymn like "He Leadeth Me." It may have been a solid stone of belief found and held such as God is a loving Father, the universe is friendly. His laws are consistent and dependable. Unless we find and ponder and store these things when there is leisure, and do it day by day, we shall never be able to find readily the right word that acts as the key to comfort, faith and hope. There is always "So Little Time," but that little becomes much when we seize each now and tie them all together as a chain of remembrance.

SECOND, WE SHOULD see such things as a son sent to war being fought thousands of miles away in two ways. The first is in relation to similar happenings around us. We are not isolated as an island, but a part of the common-life of mankind. We should relate then our difficulty to the whole plight of man. One mother can feel very differently when she finds millions of other mothers in exactly the same situation or worse. Keep this larger view always in sight and it will help the lonely moments when we take the second sight, this time a view of our own condition through a microscope. No matter how different it is when it is "my" son, be assured that all our love and care and concern for him is not wasted as we relive the now-more-than-ever precious moments of his life. Our most difficult task is to see that now he is beyond our personal care and that we must entrust him to God. This is hard because mothers are selfish. But it is the only way to find release and adjustment to that which is beyond our control.

One last thing. Remember that the state of his mind is easily infected by ours and that the very mark of our pens in letters reveals something far beyond the words we write. We have a job to do for his sake as well as ours, as well as for the world's.

The light enkindled in our hearts by Jesus is the light of love's faith and will shine forth in our lives today as we commit our ways and our boys into the hands of God and hold to the way Jesus established as supremely good.

"The eye is the lamp of the body." Yes, the way we look at things brings darkness or dawn.

COLLECT FOR THE FIRST SUNDAY IN ADVENT

Almighty God, give us grace that we may cast away the works of darkness, and put upon us the armor of light, now in the time of this mortal life, in which Thy Son Jesus Christ came to visit us in great humility; that in the last day, when He shall come again in His glorious Majesty to judge both the quick and the dead, we may arise to the life immortal, through Him who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the Holy Ghost, now and ever. Amen.

Christian Vocation the Call of Every Man

By C. AVERY MASON, S. T. D., of Forward in Service.

THE PRESIDING BISHOP through Forward in Service urges all parishes to observe a Christian Vocation weekend, some time during the year, preferably December 3-5. In Christian Vocation God calls every man to use his talents and abilities for the Glory of God and in service to his fellow men. When a man has come to see and believe that God Almighty, Creator of Heaven and Earth, has called him to be a particular kind of person, and to do a particular kind of work, as part of God's eternal plan, he has dignity as one made in God's image. This man has Christian Vocation. The questions of human dignity and Christian Vocation are so closely bound together that they are almost inseparable.

For instance, to say that man has lost much of his dignity as a potential son of God because of the machine age is for us somewhat beside the point. To say that man has lost his vision of God and hence his dignity because of the machine age is to imply that the vision of God is less potent than the whirring of a motor. This we cannot accept, for saints of the modern age prove otherwise.

To say that the war situation has deprived man of his true dignity is again slightly beside the point, for who can equate the dignity of man made in the image of God with the manner, no matter how ghastly, in which men depart or cause others to depart this earthly realm. Some men have reached to heights of heroic self-sacrifice on battlefields, others sink to subhuman depths. It is not the war which deprives man of dignity though it does, as might any other catastrophic circumstance, reveal his personal character.

To say that totalitarianism under any form destroys the dignity of man is to contend that one's form of government can knock out the God-given character of humanity. With this we cannot agree, for though the nations make much ado, God reigns, and under all forms of government, even the most despotic, has produced His saints.

Important though these three and many other "reasons" may be, none of them is (nor are all of them together) the reason man has lost his dignity. We cannot lose that which we have eternally. We may abuse it, ignore and fail to use it, but we cannot lose it.

BUT CHRISTIAN VOCATION means more than the call of the Creator to His creature to be and do particular things for God. It is a call to work with the Creator in the world of nature which that Creator made. It is a call to cooperate with nature and with natural law. A vast portion of human misery has come about because men do not realize or have failed to act upon the fact that God calls men to work with and not against the nature He created. We are to gain our human dignity in proportion to our cooperation with, respect for, and Godly use of nature. The seed time and harvest upon which we depend should make this plain. Thermodynamics, gravity and the laws of germination tell us quite clearly that Bacon was right when he said, "We cannot command nature except by obeying her." But Bacon and other scientists of his age said that out of a long historical experience. For a thousand years Europe had been steeped in the Christian teaching of Church colleges and schools (there were no others) which had learned as the law of Christ His dictum, i. e., that in order to find our lives we must lose them. Hocking clearly points this out in his latest book, "What Man Can Do to Man." We have lost both the scientific basis of Bacon's work and the basis of a Christian life. Certainly our dignity has been impaired, for God calls us in our daily work to share with Him in creation. This gives dignity but when we reject the offer of the Almighty, our dignity is endangered.

Studdart-Kennedy is reported to have said that the sure way to go to Hell is to be content to let others go there. We might paraphrase that saying in this fashion—the sure way to lose our dignity and hence be in Hell is to refuse to hear God's call to us to work with and for other men. God does not call us in our daily work to live to ourselves. The same responsibility rests upon groups within society. Societies, organizations or unions which claim that their work can go on in disregard of mankind, generally become despicable; members of such groups "lose" their human dignity. The Summary of the Law contains two injunctions which are eternal. Both of these are essential to fullness of life. Love of God and love of man are not as far apart as may sometimes appear. How can we love God, whom we have not seen, if we fail to love the men we do see? Christian Vocation is God's call to every man to work and live in such a way that society is lifted and helped by each man's labor.

TO THINE OWN SELF be true, thou canst not then be false to any man." Shakespeare's words are aptly applied here provided we keep in mind our sonship to the Living God. Christian Vocation is the call of every man to be himself. Pressure groups, social patterns, and sometimes the mistaken guidance of our friends, ought never to be accepted as the dominant factors in determining our vocation. God has given to each man and each woman peculiar gifts which must be rightly used. There is something glorious in the stand made by the saints, discoverers, scientists and great men generally when they face the world and say quite simply, "This is my work; this I must do." It is just as glorious for carpenters, housewives, clerks, etc., when they have the same conviction. In an age of regimentation, Christian Vocation means, among other things, that each man is called before the bar of God's judgment to render a personal account of his life and work.

GOD WILL HELP YOU, James Gordon Gilkey. Macmillan, New York City. 114 pages. $1.50.

Dr. Gilkey, minister of the South Congregational Church of Springfield, Massachusetts, writes here for the layman who is touched by the deep problems a time of crisis brings to our living. In well illustrated chapters, in clear and direct style, Dr. Gilkey leads men and women to the resources of the Christian faith. We like especially that chapter entitled, "God Knows Your Name". It is a book worth giving the puzzled and distrait person. F. J. W.

The Goal of Liberty

By WILLIAM MOODY

No. 4.

ON A CERTAIN Sabbath Day, in the old town of Nazareth, in Palestine, many centuries ago, the people were gathered together for the Service. The leader of the Synagogue took the Holy Books out of the place of honor where they were kept, and sent them down to a young teacher who had come back to His home town just that week, fresh from triumphs as a preacher and as a healer in the Province of Judea, to the southward. Everybody in town was at the synagogue that morning to hear what that young man would say, for they all knew Him, and they had heard of His mighty work, which was then in the full power of its beginning.

He rose in His place, received the Book, opened it at the words of that great Prophet of the Jewish Exile, and began to read:

> "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me; because the Lord hath appointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek; He hath sent me to bind up the broken-hearted; to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of prison to them that are bound; to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord, and the day of vengeance of our God; to comfort all that mourn; to appoint to them that mourn in Zion, to give them beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness; that they might be called trees of righteousness, the planting of the Lord. Then shall they build up the old wastes, they shall raise up the former desolations, and they shall repair the waste cities, the desolations of many generations."

When He had finished reading, He closed the Book, and went and sat down in the teacher's seat. And He said to them, "This day is this Scripture fulfilled in your ears."

Thus the goal of the new liberty which God appoints for mankind through Christ was proclaimed. Thus the old wounds of the judgment of liberty we have not proclaimed are to be healed. Thus the task of the Church, and of all those who love true liberty, is defined.

We say that we are fighting a great war to preserve our liberty. Yet the majority of the people who must do that fighting would be hard put to it to tell you what liberty means, or why we should fight for it.

ARE WE FIGHTING simply because we have been attacked? Are we fighting out of revenge? Are we fighting because we are afraid of what might happen to us if we did not fight,—because we fear we might lose our property,—because we are afraid of the concentration camp? Are we fighting for the freedom of religion? Are we fighting for the Bill of Rights?

All these things are mixed up in it,—that is true. But, behind it all, we are fighting for something that is bigger than any of these things. We call it "liberty"; and we have been working out a definition of it here on this continent since the first settlers built their cabins on these shores.

Just think over our history and you will realize how many have come here, in the centuries since the first settlement, because they could not abide some tyranny at home! The United States has the richest heritage of any nation on earth of men and women determined to escape tyranny, and to find freedom. The desire for liberty is born in our blood, and bred in the bone of us. If that is not so, then America has lost its reason for being.

You cannot bring together so many people who have run away from tyranny, and who, with their children, have tasted a new and unaccustomed lack of restraint, without generating tremendous problems,—personal problems, social problems, and problems of government. We have had those problems. We still have some of them today, unsolved. But we have always worked those problems out, here in America,—sometimes at high cost,—but never losing the broad vision of that thing which has been our genius,—liberty!

We, here in these United States, have been building a definition of "liberty," not in theory, but in fact,—not a dictionary definition, but a definition in actual human living,—for these three hundred years.

It is a matter of ascertainable fact that not a single war we have fought in that time has been unconnected with the writing of that definition. And the battles we have fought in our internal affairs,—social struggles, struggles in government—have been on that same issue.

NOR ARE WE to suppose that what has happened here has had small effect upon the rest of the world. These things were not done in a corner! It is the witness of history that the American Revolution had as deep and as determining effect upon the development of democracy in England as it had in America. We have been writing a new definition of liberty, not only for ourselves, but for mankind,—and with mankind,—and as that definition takes form, slowly, and at great pain, in the actual life of our people, we are startled to see how closely it conforms to the broad principles of the Gospel of Jesus, laid down centuries ago! As we look, we get the feeling that modern man, today, is building, in pain and travail, a highway through a wilderness, along a route which the great Pioneer of Nazareth marked out, long ago!

That is why I said, just now, that this nation is not fighting for any small, partial aims in this great, world-filling conflict today. We are battling for a greater thing, for a thing as much a part of our life as breathing, and which to deny would be to deny ourselves.

We are not fighting just to "remember Pearl Harbor," nor to avenge Bataan,—not just to make the sea-lanes safe for our ships, nor just to defeat Hitler,—not just to protect our property, nor to preserve the Bill of Rights:—we are fighting to fulfil our destiny under God, that destiny to "proclaim liberty throughout the land unto all the inhabitants thereof."

God help us if we set our sights lower than that!

We, here in America, have not finished writing our definition of liberty. We know that. There are many short-comings. But we are far enough along with that definition to say some very clear things about it.

We know where the kind of liberty we are trying to build comes from. It comes from God.

We know, out of our own history, that the kind of liberty we are trying to build is a costly thing.

We know that liberty is a matter of balance in a community, rather than a matter of law. It is equal justice under law: it is equal opportunity to rise according to merit and ability.

We know that tyranny is not the total lack of liberty, but liberty unbalanced: too much liberty for some, too little for others.

We know that liberty is a community affair. There is no such thing as liberty for me, without regard for the people who live about me.

And we know that liberty is not a static thing. It grows as man's understanding grows. It changes as society changes, and as the needs of society change, so that what is liberty in one age may be less than liberty in another. We know that true liberty is the following of God toward that high goal which He has set for all mankind.

THE FINAL GOAL of liberty, like a great mountain seen from a distance, is farther away from us than we realize. Yet we see it. And in general outline we know what we aim for.

Suppose we should tell our own people,—and make them believe it to the depths of their hearts,—that we are not fighting just to protect ourselves, but to accomplish a high and noble mission for mankind, to which God has called us, and which we, only, can accomplish—would that make a difference?

Suppose every executive in America, every worker in the mills, every soldier bearing arms, should say to himself with deep conviction every morning when he opens his eyes, every day when he goes to his work, every night when he returns to his bed,—"The Spirit of the Lord is upon me; because the Lord hath appointed me to bring good tidings to the oppressed; He hath sent me to bind up the broken-hearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of prison to them that are bound; to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord, and the day of vengeance of our God!" Would that make a difference?

Suppose we would make the voice of that united resolve of our nation penetrate Europe. Suppose the people of France—poor, broken France—could know that to this high purpose the people of the United States of America had dedicated their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honor, "to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of prison to them that are bound!" Would it not make a difference in Norway, in Holland, and in Poland, in Greece, in the Philippines, and in China?

Suppose we could penetrate that iron ring of hatred and cruelty which the pagan leaders of Germany, and Italy, and Japan have built around their own people. Suppose we could make those common people in Germany, whose sons poured out their blood upon the bitter fields of Russia, those common people in Italy, whose sons died in Libya, and in Abyssinia, those common people in Japan, who get their sons back in an ever increasing stream from all over east Asia, a hand-full of ashes in a little polished box—suppose we could make those common people hear our voice, and believe it, that we fight not for hate, and not for greed, but because of the vision from the Holy God that is upon us, to build that world in which all mankind may have "beauty for ashes, and the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness, that they may be called trees of righteousness, the planting of the Lord!" Would that make a difference? The time is coming when it would!

WE ARE SPEAKING now in the time of tumult, and in the day of vengeance. We are speaking now out of that terrible valley of destruction in which the judgment of God falls upon the disobedient. We live under the curse of liberty unproclaimed. Let us not, in this place of bitterness, forget that great and noble vision which it has been given us to see! If we lose that vision, it is lost indeed!

Think back to that scene which I pictured for you as we began,—to that young man in the synagogue in Nazareth. He finished reading the splendid, burning words of the ancient prophet. He took those words upon Himself. They were the goal of His life. He was the incarnation of them. With those words still in the ears of His hearers, He went and sat down in the teacher's seat.

He sits there today.

Out of the valley of judgment and humiliation, out of the welter of hate and shed blood and tears, the world may look to Him and see the way,—the only way,—to restitution and redemption.

Let no clouds of this mortal life hide Him from our eyes! Amen.

BOOK NOTES

By F. J. Warnecke

DAILY LIFE IN BIBLE TIMES, Albert E. Bailey. Sribner's, New York. 360 pages. $3.

This is a fascinating book! It answers and explains so many of the things we have always wanted to know about life in Biblical times. Dr. Bailey was eminently qualified to write this book. He tells us that apart from his own study he has conducted nineteen tours of Palestine! His interest in archaeology and history do not mean, however, that this is a dry-as-dust volume, or a mere catalogue of ancient customs. He tells us about Solomon's Tempie, for example, by letting us listen in as Ahijah, a royal scribe, escorts the visiting Crown Prince of Tyre on a sightseeing tour. Many illustrations, a Biblical index and a general index increase the usefulness of the book. It is a "must" for your Sunday School library.

---

WHEN CHRIST CONTROLS, John M. Versteeg. Abingdon-Cokesbury, Nashville, Tenn. 148 pages. $1.50.

This book is well timed for the Every Member Canvas of our Church this fall. It is a book on stewardship. It is the best presentation of the spiritual necessity for giving that we have seen. So often the Church asks for support somewhat apologetically. This volume reminds us that such sharing is imperative and fundamental in the Faith, and implicit in our way of life. "We live our lives in a money economy. There is no other way of living. If we are to let our lights shine so people will glorify God, they will have to be economic . . . When Christianity concretes itself, the result is stewardship." There is a wealth of illustration and sermon material in this book of "economic evangelism".

THE RELIGION OF THE PRAYER BOOK, Walden Pell and P. M. Dawley. Morehouse-Gorham Co., New York City. 218 pages. $1.50 paper, $2.50 cloth.

We are glad that this book has been written! As its authors state there have been many books written in respect to the historical development of the Prayer Book and in regard to its proper liturgical use. "But the Prayer Book is more than a treasury of the Church's ancient devotions or a vehicle for the Church's corporate worship. It is a guide to the Christian Faith."

Though the book is planned to be used as a course of study—and is an excellent course for the older young people—it is so pleasantly written that it may be read with profit by anyone. It's use might be supplemented by Dr. Griswold's "The Teaching of the Prayer Book," wherein the Prayer Book passages relating to the various doctrines of the Church are codified and printed together.

We would like to see all our young people firmly grounded in the essential material in this book.

Church Training Counts

We publish this week, in the "Letters to Editor" column, a communication which should be of interest to all readers. It is a letter from a soldier to his rector. Of course there are thousands of such letters being written every day. The significant thing about this letter is that it shows the value of regular church attendance. The Rector of Monumental Church in sending the letter to us, stated that this young man was not the "pollyanna type." He is a normal boy, who grew up in the Church School, in a perfectly natural way. He loved the Church; he was regular in his attendance.

This letter manifests a loyalty that is more than encouraging. It expresses in plain language that which the pulpit often obscures—a simple faith in spiritual ties. This soldier feels his fellowship with his Christian family, though he is thousands of miles away. His Church has become a real spiritual home to him.

We are prone to say that Church training does not matter. The curriculum of our Church Schools often overlooks this important fact. We hope that many Church School Superintendents and Directors of Religious Education will read this letter. We hope that from it they will receive inspiration to tie the Church School program more definitely into the main services of the Parish Church.

Church training does count.

Advent

A new Church Year begins. What promise does it hold? For the next four Sundays we will stand on the very threshold of that year. The four Sundays in Advent are preparatory Sundays. The first Sunday sets the keynote for the season. It asks us to acknowledge our guilt, confess our weakness in penitence and thus prepare ourselves to receive the full significance of God's coming to us, in the birth of our Lord and Saviour.

The second Sunday shows us that there is an instrument that God has placed in our hands—His Holy Word,—that will be a "lantern unto our feet," to guide our footsteps into the way of peace.

The third Sunday, teaches us that in addition to God's Holy Word, He has given us ministers and stewards to help us prepare our lives, to be true repositories of His love.

The fourth Sunday, portrays for us the fact, that because of our weakness, we may not always understand His word, and accept the prophetic ministry of His stewards, He can by His Power, succor and save us.

We need to learn these lessons today. In the global chaos of a world at war, we need to see clearly that we, as individuals, are a part of the corporate guilt of the world. We need to sense this feeling, because the plans that are being made and will be made to bring order out of chaos, as Christians, we must hold them up to the searchlight of Christian teaching. We cannot do this unless we are truly penitent. We cannot interpret God's Word rightly unless we have cast off all pride. We surely, as ministers, cannot be true prophets and acceptable stewards "of the mysteries of God," unless we are humble in heart. As ministers and people we cannot recognize God's power, if we continue to boast in our own strength.

We are listening to many voices today from many quarters that are telling us about the building of a new world. Because of our sinfulness, we are destroying a world today. The new world that we will build cannot be built upon the ruins of the old world, unless we lay the foundation perfect, which is Jesus Christ.

As Christians we are committed to the task of building the Kingdom of God. Advent is the season of the Church year, that brings home clearly to us the responsibility of that task. We should be interested in all of the plans that men are making. We should study them very carefully. But above all we should seek God's guidance realistically when we are humble and truly penitent.

Advent means "coming"—but it means also on our part, a coming to God in lowliness and meekness, that He may give us the strength we need to build His Kingdom in this world.

The Padre's Hour

By T. E. JESSOP

PADRES WHO, like the bulk of our people civilian at heart, have joined the Army for the "duration," have often been disappointed in their new sphere. The eager hopes that prompted them to volunteer have very commonly been found to outrun the feasibilities of the camps. True, when they have crossed the seas and gone into action with their untender flocks, the sense of worthwhileness has been born and fed to the full—with many of them for a short time only, for the casualties in the Chaplains' Department have been higher, proportionally, than in any other branch of the Army. But at home a sense of frustration has been frequent. One reason is the fewness of their numbers in relation to the men they have to serve. Partly because of the needs, or supposed needs, of the civilian churches, their increase has not kept pace with the phenomenal increase of the units. What this has meant in practice is best indicated by an illustration: to work through a single padre's area I once had to give two to three addresses a day for five days, the area being more than sixty miles long. This was two years ago, and the many chaplains since sent abroad have not all been replaced.

The chief reason of the sense of frustration, however, has been the difference between the work that the chaplains had hopd to do and the work that they discovered they had to do. Apart from the parade-services their time was largely taken up with the odds and ends of welfare work—arranging entertainments, begging books and wireless sets and sports tackle, showing men how to fill in forms, helping them with problems of pay, discharge, separation proceedings and so on. All this was necessary and excellent work, of course, and no chaplain wanted to be rid of it entirely; it was the engrossment in it, the tyranny of it, that irked. After all, it was not the sort of thing for which they had undergone their priestly or ministerial training. They were specialists, and it was to do a specialist's job that they had joined up. They were there to keep or make men religious, so far as the men would let them, and the platform of the weekly parade-service was not big enough for so big a task. They wanted larger mid-week opportunities for getting at the men who did not come to them spontaneously.

The Padre's Hour has met their need. It was started in a division well over a year ago, and has since spread widely. It is not universal, and is not in the strict sense imposed on the units, though it is on the men; it is a regular hour, at best weekly, but inevitably subject to training and operational requirements, which, at the instigation of the Chaplain-General, certain G. O. C.'s have strongly recommended commanding officers to allot within training hours to the padre, to be used by him as he pleases. I know some padres who are conducting twenty a week, and a few thirty, which amounts almost to heroism. Usually officers are not present, so that an informal atmosphere is possible.

BUT IT WAS to meet the men's needs, not the chaplains', that the Hour was introduced. Not only the recent magnificent sweeps across North Africa, through Sicily, and into Italy, and the earlier conquest of all Italian East Africa, but also the testing retreats they had to make in our days of weakness, prove that the men are as fine a body of soldiers as the British Army ever had. But outside their military concerns there is a mental trouble; they are not as happy as men ought to be, even in an imperfect world. Many of them are bothered, some are apathetic, and a minority are bitter. They feel themselves to be the victim of baleful forces beyond their understanding and control—except some of the bitter, who know by inspiration of Marx, without the labor of study, that every evil is due to an economic system called capitalism. That is, of course, natural, since the world is topsy-turvy; but the world is certainly not altogether unintelligible, and in order both to bring the fun back into the lives of the men and to fit them to help in the righting of things when they return home, a concerted effort is required to make plain to them whatever can be made plain about the causes and conditions of human stability and instability. Their education, in the wide sense of both schooling and social conditioning, has not prepared them for this historic crisis—which is one of the reasons why the crisis has come.

Their education has given them neither a knowledge of the affairs of the world nor a philosophy of life. The first of these wants has been met since 1940 by the Army Education Corps, the Army Directorate of Education, the Army Bureau of Current Affairs, and the Universities (every one of which is daily sending speakers to the camps). The cumulative result of this educational venture will be less an amassing of information, since the conditions are not favorable for study, than an awareness that more knowledge is required for democratic citizenship than the daily newspaper provides, and higher standards of thinking in political discussion than bars and drawing-rooms have so far exemplified. The follow-up of this spade-work after demobilization will be the duty and opportunity of the various bodies concerned with Adult Education.

THE CHALLENGE to seek, and the help to find, a philosophy of life comes appropriately from the chaplains. Their preaching, however, as they are painfully aware, is not adequate, for at least two reasons: firstly, the distinctive language and ideas of religion have no meaning for the now large body of men who have grown up without contact with the churches, and, secondly, in the pulpit the preacher can neither be asked questions nor be answered back. The Padre's Hour supplies the needed complement. Here the chaplain is facing the men on their own level, struggling with their problems, inviting their questions and criticisms, and speaking with a concreteness and bluntness which the sermon, being part of a service of worship, scarcely allows. There is the knock-about of argument, a frank exchange of rebukes, a mutuality of contribution, a straight confrontation of men with men. If ever there was a time for plain speaking, for the destruction on all sides of the humbug with which modern propaganda has fouled public controversy, it is now, and in the Padre's Hour the destruction has begun.

The effect on the men now accustomed to the Hour has been encouraging. Their essential decency and fairness have been brought out. After initial hesitation and suspicion and the trotting out of the silliest of the objections to religion, they have dropped mere heckling and got down to the business of serious discussion.

Many of them have come to see that, whatever may be the difficulties of the Christian creed and however imperfect the churches and their members may be, Christianity is a meeting of very real problems which this age has done its best to overlook, the problems of the moral and spiritual advancement that can alone prevent the collapse of the elaborate, interlocking, world-wide institutions now required to sustain our lives. Christianity is more than that, but it is a step forward to see it as at least that. As for the chaplains, they feel that the Padre's Hour has put them on their mettle, re-evoked forgotten scholarship, and brought them into a virile fellowship which they hope to introduce eventually into their own churches.

The American Red Cross

Boys and Girls, Seventeen Million Strong Labor for the Armed Forces

A civilian army of American school boys and girls, more than seventeen million strong, labors valiantly for the American armed forces.

You will find them busy in school carpentry shops, machine shops, sewing rooms, packing rooms; collecting scrap; planning ways and means of raising money. Their work is nonetheless valuable because it is accomplished without flourish.

They are the American Junior Red Cross, organized under the auspices of President Woodrow Wilson in the last war. In that conflict they rendered a sizeable service of production. In the ensuing interval of peace they have been fulfilling one of their original reasons for existence—namely aiding needy children of foreign lands. In the present war, the Junior Red Cross has assumed a new importance in that it is continuing to carry out that obligation and, in addition, has taken on an enlarged job of production for our armed forces; creating and supplying an impressive variety of articles greatly in demand in Army and Navy hospitals and elsewhere.

Sixty-five per cent of America's public, private and parochial schools have Junior Red Cross groups. All but five per cent of the American Red Cross far-flung 3,757 chapters have them.

In the last fiscal year these energetic youngsters have produced and sent to the armed forces more than nine million articles of wearing apparel, for comfort and recreation. These articles include such things as afghans, bed jackets, bedroom slippers, card table covers, cushion covers, lap robes, bedside tables, canes, floor lamps, folding tables that may be easily placed on a patient's lap, and table lamps. The list goes on and on! It even includes such items as gay little decorations, menu covers and cards which lighten the tedium of men on duty or in hospitals.

And every one of them ordered in advance, made according to specifications, and rigidly tested before being sent to the areas where they are needed.

Here is one way the Junior Red Cross operates. A request comes in to a Red Cross chapter—possibly from a nearby military hospital. A dozen pairs of chintz curtains are needed for sick rooms; or a number of flower boxes are sought to brighten the lives of the bedridden. The chapter's Volunteer Camp and Hospital Service does not have the supplies immediately at hand. But the Junior Red Cross is busy over at the local school. The order goes to them. Work begins with enthusiasm. Soon the items are completed and delivered.

When wounded men were being brought into a Pacific port from the desolate battlefields of Attu in the Aleutians, an insistent cry went up for bedroom slippers, far many more than the Pacific area volunteers could supply. But Junior Red Cross members at the port's local high school had been working on these very articles and had more than were needed on hand. "The Junior Red Cross did it!" heralded the local press.

A request came in for a lot of ping-pong tables for able-bodied men at the Air Force Classification Center at Nashville, Tenn. In jig time forty tables—all that were asked for—were made and sent in by a Nashville high school.

The Benson High School Junior Red Cross at Portland, Oregon, made 100 cribbage boards. The Wichita, Kansas, Junior group made sixty writing tables, 40 book cases, 30 magazines racks, 40 end-tables, 10 lamps—all of which had been requested and all from their school workshop.

For materials from which to make these needed articles, the Junior Red Cross often goes out and roots it up by salvage campaign. The scrap thus raised is sold and the money used to purchase what they must have. Again they take scraps and left-overs and put them to good use. For example, slightly defective pieces of khaki cloth discarded by uniform makers were seized upon by the Junior Red Cross to make army kit bags; these were filled with the small necessities and luxuries which soldiers prize so highly. Worn turkish towels make the finest kind of wash cloths—homely and essential items!—for military and naval hospitals. Ask the Junior Red Cross, who made 'em by the thousand!

The Kansas City Chapter, American Red Cross, had on hand one old trailer chassis—minus body. The local Junior Group gathered the necessary material and constructed a mobile canteen unit out of it, putting in floors, shelves, sink, stove and coffee boiler. When last heard from, the chapter canteen had taken over the unit and were servicing the nearby camps, handing out cups of coffee to the soldiers.

One could go on indefinitely, telling how these school boys and girls put one old mule and one old dump cart together down in North Carolina, and with this "mulemobile" gathered many tons of scrap in the neighborhood; now bicycle corps, organized in Pennsylvania communities and other places, are efficient messengers for the adult Red Cross, thus saving precious gasoline; how another group "gleaned after" the adult salvage crew, and gathered together 400 tons or more of it; how another group went to where a building project was being wrecked and got 400 pounds of nails.

"The amount of initiative these young people display is heartening," says James T. Nicholson, Vice Chairman in charge of the Junior Red Cross. "They are not only rendering a vital service to the armed forces, they are putting into actual practice some of the things they have been studying at school. They are learning the value of doing a good and workmanlike job—whether it be making stout canes on which convalescents can walk about, or sewing articles of wearing apparel, or making bright greeting cards and other cheerful things."

And between times it should be noted the Junior Red Cross sends to refugee children overseas 100,000 gift boxes a year purchased with the funds they have raised.

SONG SERVICE

The birds are busy people,
As busy as can be.
They've homes to build and food to find,
The same as you and me.

But this one thing I've noticed
(And I should like to say,
If it were only really true,
That it is just our way.)

Although they hurry-scurry
And work like everything,
They never have too much to do
To lift their heads and sing.

They do it very often—
A thousand times a day.
How nice if we could understand
The lovely words they say!

Could we but learn their secret,
And fill each flying minute
With work and play and happy song
With all our heart's love in it.

We would not give our fortune
For any millionaire's;
For gold could never buy delight
As pure and sweet as theirs.

ROD AND REEL

"Johnnie," Daddy called as he parked the car in the drive, "come in the house. I've something to show you."

Johnnie dropped his bat and ball on the porch and ran into the house. Daddy was opening a big package on the library table.

"O Daddy," gasped Johnnie, "new fishing tackle!"

"Yes, Son. We'll go fishing this summer, so I thought some new tackle would be good. Now there's one thing I want you to remember. You are not to use this new tackle unless I am with you. I know you'll always be sure to think of that."

"I will, Daddy," Johnnie answered.

But the new tackle was very tempting. All next day Johnnie kept stealing looks in its direction.

On Saturday they went fishing, after Daddy finished day shift in the defense plant. And using the new tackle made Johnnie want to use it often.

The next week Mother had to go to help Aunt Jane take care of Cousin Betty who was sick; so Johnnie was alone much of the time. Oh, how he longed to use the tackle now! Only something kept saying, "Don't do it, Johnnie! It would be wrong!"

Johnnie sighed. Bravely he tried to resist the temptation; but at last he gave in. Down to the lake he went, with the new rod and reel.

How he enjoyed casting far out into the water! Maybe he'd get a muskie or a trout. And wouldn't it taste good, fried a beautiful brown? But then, that little voice kept saying, "You oughtn't to be doing this, Johnnie."

And he grew more miserable every minute. Angrily he shook the new rod, and then cast again into the still blue waters of the lake.

Suddenly something went wrong. The hook, instead of touching the water, had caught in Johnnie's sun-browned leg.

Painfully, Johnnie hobbled home; but there was no one there. Mrs. Barclay, the next-door lady, fixed his bleeding leg for him.

Then he went back home and put the rod and reel away. Sadly he looked at it. Daddy would see that the line was broken and rod bent slightly. What would he say?

"It's your own fault," conscience whispered. "You know you shouldn't have done it."

Later, when Daddy came home from work, he patted Johnnie on the shoulder and said, "Would you like to go fishing, Son? I promised Mr. Jensen I'd go."

Johnnie made no reply for a moment. Then he said slowly, "I'm tired. I'd rather stay at home."

"Well, all right," Daddy said, looking keenly at Johnnie. "If you're tired, you'd better go to bed as soon as you eat your supper."

When Daddy had gone with Mr. Jensen, Johnnie sat down on the porch step. He could almost see Daddy's face when he discovered that new tackle had been used—and broken.

The time until Daddy came home again seemed endless to conscience-troubled Johnnie. When at last he walked into the comfortable living room, Johnnie was lying on the couch, fast asleep. "Old thing broke!" he muttered.

"Johnnie!" Daddy called. "Not in bed yet?"

Johnnie woke up, blinked his eyes and yawned.

"We'll have prayers—then you can go upstairs to bed right away."

Wearily, Johnnie nodded.

Then Daddy read solemnly from the big family Bible, "Children, obey your parents". Johnnie kept his eyes on the floor. At last he was safe in bed.

"All right, Son?" Daddy asked, his brown eyes meeting Johnnie's blue ones, as he reached to turn off the light.

"Yes, sir," said Johnnie, dropping his eyes.

"Sure?" Daddy questioned, bending down to look at him more closely.

"Yes," Johnnie repeated. And when the little voice of conscience whispered, "Tell Daddy now," he said to himself, "I won't".

Morning came. Outside the rain was pouring, and inside Johnnie's leg ached, where the hook had caught in it. He sighed, as he sat down to breakfast.

"What's the matter?" Daddy asked quietly.

"Not much," Johnnie replied, still trying to fight down the little voice inside. But the pain grew worse, and Johnnie couldn't eat. Then, when Daddy looked at him kindly, he suddenly broke down.

"Daddy," he choked ever so slightly. "I'm awful bad."

"Yes, Son?" Daddy said gently.

"I used the rod and things, and I got hooked in the leg. The line broke, and I got awful mad. Everything went wrong. I thought you'd see it when you went fishing, but—"

"I did see it. I was waiting for you to tell me. I knew my boy wouldn't try to keep things from Daddy very long."

"I tried to keep from telling you, but I felt so bad inside. I'm awful sorry, Daddy."

"I know you are, Son; but being sorry doesn't repair the tackle. No more fishing for a while. Don't you think next time you'd better listen to that little voice?"

"Yes, Daddy," said Johnnie in a very small voice. "It'll be the best way, I know."—Marjorie Jury, in Burning Bush.

IF IN DOUBT

If in doubt, don't say it—
If it's something which could harm
If you think that there is someone
It might worry or alarm.

If it's something that tomorrow
You may wish you could recall,
There's a simple rule to follow—
Don't say it at all!

If in doubt, say it—
If it's something kind and true,
(Never mind how unimportant
It may appear to you.)

If there's one chance in a thousand
It might make some sad heart gay,
Then don't hesitate a moment—
Say it right away!

More Confirmations Reported

Clergy Compelled by War to Leave Are Returning to Mediterranean Area

London—More confirmations are reported from the Mediterranean war zone by Harold Buxton, Bishop of Gibraltar, who now writes of forty-eight confirmed at Holy Trinity Church, Algiers, where he was acting for his neighbor bishop of North Africa, who is detained in England. At St. Paul's, Malta, part of the extensive Diocese of Gibraltar, Bishop Buxton confirmed ninety-two, all service men but four or five.

While at Malta he visited a Greek ship in the harbor and was most cordially received by the captain, who asked him to have a requiem on shore next morning, in memory of Greek shipmates who had been killed a year ago. This the bishop did, reading parts of the service in Greek.

Although the war compelled many clergy of this war-ridden diocese to return to England, the diocesan office in London now reports, "There are many signs that the territory of the diocese is beginning to emerge from its long night. The chaplain who ministers to the British community in Athens has his bag packed for an early return to that city. Another has his eye cocked for the resurgence of Florence, and there are others whose hopes are similarly attuned to the possibilities of the early future."

Meanwhile work has steadily continued in at least nineteen of the diocesan chaplaincies, and in some of them has been greatly increased by the war. Besides Gibraltar and two places in Malta, clergy are active in Lisbon, Oporto, and Estoril, Portugal, in Beaulieu, France, in six places in Spain and six in Turkey. Letters come through showing that the Church's work continues even in places where the diocesan clergy cannot as yet return. A Churchwoman now in London, who has a house in Taormina, Sicily, has heard from an army chaplain that he is quartered in her house, is holding services in St. George's Church, which has not been harmed, and is using her books as a much appreciated lending library for the troops.

CONVENTION TO ELECT SUCCESSOR TO BISHOP THOMAS TO MEET IN JANUARY

Florence, S. C.—The vestry of St. John's Church has invited the Diocese of South Carolina to come to Florence for the special diocesan convention scheduled for next January to elect a successor to Bishop Albert S. Thomas, of Charleston.

Bishop Thomas submitted his resignation in September to take effect December 31, and his resignation was accepted at a recent convention of the church. He was elected bishop of the diocese in Florence in 1929, at a regular diocesan convention held at St. John's Church. The election was held by candlelight. A heavy rain and windstorm had cut off all electric power and flooded the church yard with water ankle deep. Candles were secured and the election, the closing feature of the convention program, proceeded by candlelight.

The special convention will be composed of clergymen residing in the diocese and four lay delegates from each church. A committee of five clergymen and five laymen will recommend a new bishop. Clergy members of the committee are Rev. F. W. Ambler, Summerville, chairman; Rev. W. S. Poynor, Florence; Dr. William Way, Charleston; Rev. H. D. Bull, Georgetown, and Rev. BRITISH BROADCASTING CORP. MARKS 21ST ANN.

London, England—On the occasion of the 21st anniversary of the British Broadcasting Corporation on November 14, the Archbishop of York spoke on religious broadcasting in England.

Describing how churches were at first doubtful as to the suitability of radio for broadcasting religious services, the Archbishop told how these doubts were overcome, and how a joint committee, including representatives of the various churches, had been set up to advise the B. B. C. on religious questions.

The Archbishop said that religious broadcasting enabled the Christian message to reach large numbers of people who do not habitually go to Church. It has also enabled listeners to hear well-conducted services in churches of different denominations, thus helping to break down prejudice and misunderstanding among the various denominations.

The Archbishop said that during the war there has been a considerable increase in religious broadcasting.

BISHOP BURTON ROYALLY WELCOMED

Nassau—When the Rt. Rev. Spence Burton, Bishop of Nassau, visited Grand Bahama and Abaco for the first time, he was greeted by a crowd of people, and a small girl delivered an address of welcome. The whole company proceeded to the church, singing "Onward, Christian Soldiers". When the Bishop left the next day the whole congregation came down to the shore singing "God Be With You Till We Meet Again" as he went aboard his ketch, the "St. Mary of Stafford".

The same kind of thing happened at each landing, and in one place the bishop was carried ashore and up to the church in the arms of a tall man from Turks Island, with a stout matron waving the Stars and Stripes.

Moscow Declarations Analyzed

Characterized "a Notable Step" by Federal Council of Churches Chairman

New York, Nov. 16—The Moscow Declarations were characterized by John Foster Dulles, chairman of the Commission on a Just and Durable Peace of the Federal Council of Churches, as "a notable step toward realizing international order as envisaged by our Six Pillars of Peace" and "a great development from the Atlantic Charter."

"The Christian forces of this country can be grateful that their government has cooperated with the governments of Great Britain, Russia and China to make a sound beginning for world order," said Mr. Dulles.

"We can legitimately feel that we have done much to create here a public opinion that has made this possible. We must NOT, however, be complacent or relax our efforts. The Moscow Declarations go only part of the way. Even then they are still words. To move words into functioning institutions infused with the spirit of Christian fellowship remains a political and spiritual task of immense proportions."

Mr. Dulles' analysis of the Moscow Declarations in the light of the Six Pillars was approved by the Executive Committee of the Federal Council of Churches. He said the Moscow Declarations marked a great development from the Atlantic Charter, which proposed no international institutions and made no references to religious and intellectual freedom.

The Moscow statement, he said, omits dealing with colonial and economic matters as advocated by the Six Pillars and contains some ambiguities, but asserted "that the positive aspects of the Moscow declaration are sound, rejecting as they do any attempt to base world order merely on the military alliance of a few". "But," as said in our 'Long-Range Peace Objectives' (Sept. 18, 1941), 'the end of the present war will find an overwhelming concentration of power in one or two nations. That power will be a reality the implications of which we cannot avoid. Our task will be to make it a beneficent reality. That requires that we use our power, not to perpetuate itself, but to create and support and eventually give way to international institutions drawing their vitality from the whole family of nations'. That appears to be the spirit and objective of the Moscow Decisions."

The first and basic proposition of the Commission's Six Pillars is that there should be established "the political framework for a continuing collaboration of the United Nations" and that "such collaboration should as quickly as possible be universal".

The Moscow Declaration pledges that "united action . . . will be continued for the organization and maintenance

Presiding Bishop Radios Thanksgiving Day Message

New York, N. Y.—A Thanksgiving Day message by the Rt. Rev. Henry St. George Tucker, Presiding Bishop, went to all parts of the British Empire, the South Seas ,and some parts of South America and the West Indies Thanksgiving Day. Bishop Tucker's message was sent by short wave radio under the auspices of the World-Wide Broadcasting Foundation, a non-profit organization interested in educational and inspirational broadcasts over short-wave channels.

Bishop Tucker pointed out that, through all the stresses of war, there is yet "common ground for expressing gratitude to God".

"Let us thank God for the coming Victory," the Bishop said, "because through it the way will be cleared for positive advance towards the attainment of the goal which God Himself has set before us. Then our gratitude will not degenerate into complacency. It will not be a feeling of relief because our task is accomplished. Rather it will be a renewed dedication of ourselves, in deep humility and in recognition of our dependence upon God, to press forward towards the mark of our high calling."

Bishop Tucker declared that the immediate goals of the Allied Natinos are world freedom and world unity, two qualities which, he said, may at times seem incompatible. "One aim of countries like Germany and Japan is unity. The way by which they seek to reach it is the destruction of freedom. Freedom, they say, results in diversity, and diversity inevitably leads to chaos. In order to obtain the unity which is essential for peace and well being, they claim the irresponsible many must be brought under the control of the superior few. By taking away the freedom which produces diversity, by enforced regimentation, they aim to mold mankind after one pattern.

The only hope of eradicating such principles from human society is to find a better solution of the problem caused by the apparent incompatibility of freedom and unity. Bishop Tucker proceeded to make the point that answers to such problems are impossible with man, but possible with God. "Whatever else we do in our effort to attain world freedom and world unity will be inadequate unless at the same time we bring men into contact with Christ. I suggest, therefore, to the Christian Church, this formula for making its contribution to the cause of freedom and unity: 'Through World Evangelism to World Unity in Christ.'"

The Bishop's address was shortwaved from station WRUL in Boston, headquarters of the Foundation. It was sent at 5 P. M. Eastern Wartime, which was 10 P. M. in England. The Foundation is providing transcriptions of the address for the use of other radio stations in this country.

The World-Wide Broadcasting Foundation announces that it puts on the air over shortwave, educational, inspirational or religious programs each

BISHOP ZIEGLER'S SON REPORTED MISSING

Laramie, Wyo.—Lieutenant George H. Ziegler, son of the Rt. Rev. Winfred H. Ziegler, bishop of Wyoming, and Mrs. Ziegler, is reported missing in action in the European war theater. No further details are as yet available.

Lieutenant Ziegler is an air force bombardier stationed in England and has participated in a number of spectacular raids on German targets. It was announced only last October 5 that he had been awarded the Air Medal for meritorious participation in five bombing attacks on enemy occupied Europe by the eighth air force.

Lieutenant Ziegler is reported missing as of about October 10. On that date American Flying Fortresses shot down 102 enemy planes as the big bombers tore through stubborn defenses to blast the important German transportation centers of Muenster and Coesfeld. Thirty bombers and two fighters were lost by the American formation, which also hit an enemy air field near Enschede, Holland. A German communique of the same day, broadcast from Berlin, said that 51 Allied planes, nearly all of them four-engined bombers, were shot down in attacks over western Germany.

Before entering the air force Lieutenant Ziegler was a student at the University of Wyoming.

Last August national press associations carried a report from fellow

NO WORD OF IDENTIFICATION

Honolulu, T. H.—A sailor came into the office at St. Andrew's Cathedral in the absence of the rector, the Rev. Ardys T. Dean. The office worker who saw him reported, "He seemed to be a very fine boy. Said he was an Episcopalian, that he didn't know you, and just came in to make an offering. Said it was the first time he had been in town since he got back from some action in the Pacific. Was just thankful to be alive. Said the Cathedral meant so much to him this morning. He left this envelope for you."

The envelope contained a $20 bill, and no word of identification.

Albany Observes 75th Annsversary

Festal Evensong in Cathedral Addressed by Bishop Oldham

Albany, N. Y.—At a service of Festal Evensong in the Cathedral of All Saints, November 14, the Diocese of Albany celebrated the seventy-fifth anniversary of its setting apart from the original Diocese of New York. Two hundred choristers from the capital district choirs led the procession, in which marched also one hundred wardens and vestrymen of neighboring Churches, thirty of the clergy and representatives of the diocesan schools and hospitals. The choir of St. Peter's Church sang the anthem, "How Lovely Is Thy Dwelling Place," as the primary convention of the diocese was held in St. Peter's Church and its rector, the Rev. Wm. Croswell Doane, was elected the first Bishop of Albany.

An effective feature of the service was the singing of "We gather together to ask the Lord's blessing," heartily rendered by the huge congregation that taxed the seating capacity of the Cathedral.

Bishop Oldham made an address in which he reviewed the important incidents in the formation of the Diocese of Albany and briefly visualized its development through three-quarters of a century. He paid tribute to his predecessor, the Rt. Rev. Richard H. Nelson, second bishop of Albany, and to the Rt .Rev. Wm. Croswell Doane, the first bishop and founder of the Cathedral and other important diocesan institutions. Bishop Oldham, however, mainly dealt with fundamentals and emphasized "what we are as a Religious Body".

"We do not," said Bishop Oldham, "realize the full value of our heritage or the strength and unique opportunity it gives us in our own time. Catholicity, pure and primitive, is what Christendom is longing for today. Leading Protestant thinkers are almost at one in frankly acknowledging this. One of their number recently characterized the last century as one of missionary effort while this, he said, will be known as 'the Century of the Church'. Individualism has run its course and everywhere, in Church and State, men's minds are turning toward something more of discipline, authority and order. In the Church the trend is unmistakably toward catholicism. Protestants, however, will never accept it in either the Roman or Eastern form, but may be willing to receive it at our hands." Bishop Oldham then warned that for this reason we must never misrepresent or let our catholicity go. Neither, he said, should we hoard it or allow it to engender within us "that pharisaic pride which makes us feel that we are not as other men". "Rather must we be ever ready," he said, "to share its blessings with those who have it not. And the best way, my brethren, perhaps the only way, to commend it to them is to show forth in our lives fruits worthy of such a heritage and so demonstrate its necessity and value."

Bishop Oldham read a greeting graciously sent by Bishop Manning on behalf of New York, the parent diocese from which Albany sprang.

The anniversary was observed by parishes and missions throughout the diocese and a thankoffering made for the benefit of the Cathedral of All Saints.

BISHOPS HOBSON AND SCARLETT APPOINTED LIAISON OFFICERS

Washington, D. C.—Two Bishops of the Episcopal Church, the Rt. Rev. Henry W. Hobson, and the Rt. Rev. William Scarlett, are among the nine religious leaders appointed by the General Commission on Army and Navy Chaplains to serve as liaison officers with the nine service commands. The Commission, in announcing the appointments, said that plans are laid for a closer tie-up of the work of home churches and on non-Roman Chaplains in domestic posts of the armed services, through a program of visitations by civilian Church leaders.

The purpose of the plan, it is stated, is to carry to the chaplains assurances of the interest of home churches in their work, and to bring back to the various denominational committees on chaplains, reports on the aid that churches can render to their representatives among soldiers and sailors.

The other appointees are: Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam, Methodist; Dr. Frederick L. Fagley, Congregational; Dr. Daniel A. Poling, Baptist; Dr. Benjamin R. Lacey, Southern Presbyterian; Dr. Jesse Halsey, Presbyterian; Dr. M. E. Sadler, Christian; Rev. M. E. Bratcher, Northern Baptist.

GOVERNOR DEWEY ACCEPTS ELECTION TO CHURCH VESTRY

Governor Dewey made St. Peter's his parish Church when he took up residence at the Mansion in Albany. The rector is the Rev. Erville B. Maynard.

Nothing a Burden That Helps

Every Member Chairman Proves Case by Arithmetic

Birmingham, Ala.—E. T. Beatty, Every Member Canvass chairman for St. Andrew's Parish, proves his case by arithmetic. He points out in a letter to people of the parish, that the Diocese of Alabama "wants to raise $50,200 next year from the red side of the envelope," and that there are 12,000 Church members in the diocese. Says Mr. Beatty, "Get your pencil and paper and see something! If every single member would give 10 cents a week to the red side, we would have $62,400, and the diocese is asking for only $50,200!"

The same amount, 10 cents a week, the letter continues, would bring $1,560 from St. Andrew's parish, which is asked for only $1,200.

Continuing, Mr. Beatty says, 'Before the war lots of us thought the cost of living was so high we could hardly make ends meet. Lots of us thought the State's 2% sales tax was terrible and we doubted if we could stand it. The Government has raised taxes and they are not through raising yet, and it looks as though we might have a 10% Federal Sales Tax in addition to what we now have. Yet we still live and pay taxes and like it. And when they are raised still more we will pay them and still like it. Why? Because our heart is in winning the war and nothing is a burden that helps to win it.

"I want to pass along to you the thought that if we get our hearts into the Church's business, realize its responsibilities and its importance, familiarize ourselves with its needs, and last but not least, think of what a place this would be to live in if we did not have the Church . . . we will all contribute to the limit of our ability, and LIKE IT. It will not be a burden but a pleasure."

St. Andrew's has been making steady strides forward for the past several years. The Rev. J. W. Brettman is rector.

BISHOP GILMAN BACK IN FREE CHINA

New York, N. Y.—"It would be hard indeed for anyone to have more satisfaction than I feel in being able to write the Hsichow address at the top of this letter," writes A. A. Gilman, Bishop of Hankow, who recently arrived in free China, eager to resume work among the scattered units of his diocese now refugeeing in that southwestern area. Ever since Hua Chung College fled from Wuchang in 1938, Bishop Gilman has been eager to visit it, but felt obliged to stay at his post in occupied China as long as possible, and on leaving there he had to return to the United States before getting into free China.

"By a wonderful combination of circumstances, I almost made the trip from Kunming to Hsichow in one day," he continues. "Although everyone is having a very hard time of it because of the inflation, they put on a brave face. Our mission is spending enormous funds to keep our clergy and their families alive and to educate a small number of children. Of course, the sum is infinitesimal in comparison with what is being expended upon armaments. However necessary these may be at present, the life of the Chinese Church is far more important for the future. I urge upon the Church the necessity of meeting this charge under this period of special emergency."

THE KEYNOTE OF THE CANVASS will be sounded by the Rt. Rev. Stephen E. Keeler, D. D., Bishop of Minnesota, over the Columbia Broadcasting System on Sunday, November 28, from 10-10:30 A. M. Eastern War Time. Urge your people to hear a timely word for trying times.

HUNDREDS OF BIBLES FOR LIFE-RAFTS

Mare Island, Calif.—A navy chaplain recently amazed a visitor at his office by handing him a copy of a New Testament with the remark, "Here is a Bible which we literally hope will never be read".

"Do you mean," the visitor asked, "that you really give away Bibles which you do not want people to read? Why, then, do you give away?"

The chaplain explained that the book was one of the thousands of New Testaments which are enclosed in waterproof containers for use on life-rafts.

"After the Rickenbacker party's experience on the life-rafts," said the chaplain, "the American Bible Society offered to supply these Testaments to Navy ships. Hundreds have been sent to this office to be placed on vessels. We sincerely hope that this Bible will never be used, but we do want it there in case some one in the future is forced to climb onto a life-raft.

Then the chaplain added, "A newspaper reporter cabled that there were no atheists in fox-holes, I would like to add that there are no atheists on life-rafts out on the vast expanses of the Pacific."

Detroit, Mich.—Success of union evening services sponsored by eight Detroit churches in the North Woodward section this fall has been so marked that the services will be continued through next Easter, the committee in charge has announced recently. The eight churches, located on "Piety Hill," as this section of Detroit is called, are close enough together so that services are rotated among the group. At the tenth week, the services had attracted an average attendance of nearly 600 persons.

The eight churches united in sponsoring the service, known as the "Woodward Sunday Evening Hour", are the North Woodward Congregational, Woodward Avenue Presbyterian, Central Woodward Christian, First Congregational, First Presbyterian, First Baptist, Westminster Presbyterian and St. Joseph's, of which the Rev. Wm. C. Hamm is rector.

Generally the preacher is the minister of one of the co-operating group of churches. However, once a month or oftener a noted guest is presented.

Mr. Dulles, in his analysis, said "the phrase 'peace loving States' might, of course, cover an intent to postpone indefinitely membership by States which are now our enemies; or it may mean to defer such memberships only until their peoples have installed governments genuinely disposed to cooperate with others for peace with justice. If the latter is intended, then the Moscow Declaration conforms in all substantial respects with our first and basic Proposition (First Pillar)."

members of his crew, telling how Lieutenant Ziegler prevented a bomb from his Flying Fortress from falling in English territory. The feat almost cost him his life. The incident occurred as the craft was returning to England after a raid over Holland. Lieutenant Ziegler was standing over the bomb bay, working to secure one bomb which had not been dropped. Suddenly the bomb bay opened and the explosive started to fall out. Ziegler grabbed the bomb, held on to it with one arm and to the edge of the bay with the other until Technical Sergeant Alexander Szwickie, of Three Rivers, Mass., dragged him to safety and also pulled the bomb inside.

Lieutenant Ziegler received his training as a bombadier at Santa Ana and Victorville, California. His twin brother, Second Lieutenant Fred Ziegler, is stationed in the North African war theater with the field artillery.

THOUGHTS FOR THE THOUGHTFUL

"Our Father in Heaven has no stepchildren."

The first and paramount task of Christian Churches remains that of bringing more persons to subject their lives to the will of God as revealed in Jesus Christ.—J. F. Dulles.

Sometimes a light surprises
The Christian while he sings;
It is the Lord who rises
With healing in His wings.
—Wm. Cowper.

Knowledge of that Living Presence here and now is the essence of the Christian life. I don't know how you interpret the doctrine of the Second Advent—but never so emphasize the wonder of a future glorious day that you forget the thrill of the real presence of the Saviour with you in every moment of the present.—G. M. McAdam, in Australian Baptist.

All who enter the strait and narrow path in good earnest, soon find themselves in a climate extremely uncongenial to the growth of pride.

To go out unto all nations to preach the Gospel of Christ and Him crucified must ever be the paramount duty of the Church. To raise and recover the fallen, to comfort and uplift the wounded and despairing, to help our brother man and sister woman in every time of need in every way we can; these things must be done, these things cannot be neglected by any who call themselves followers of Christ.
—The Rev. Thomas Veitch.

Religion is the love of the eternal and infinite; and no one who seeks after the knowledge of God as diligently as other men seek after wealth and honor, ever come away empty-handed.
—Canon Brereton.

A common expression of childhood is, "See what you made me do". But when we become older, it is well for us to put away childish things and acknowledge wherein we ourselves are at fault.

Not content with merely reading your Bible, study it. Instead of skimming over whole acres of truth, put your spade into the most practical passages, and dig deep.
—Cuyler.

"Father, hear the prayer we offer;
Not for ease that prayer shall be,
But for strength that we may ever
Live our lives courageously."

The good man feels old age more by the strength of his soul than by the weakness of his body.
—Thomas Overbury.

"Faith is the subtle chain
Which binds us to the Infinite;
The Voice of a deep life within
That will remain
Until we crowd it thence."

Christianity is here to realize justice, all justice. The highest justice, both in the individual and in society.
—Walter Rauschenbusch.

TO THOSE SERVING THE CAUSE OF CHRISTIAN CIVILIZATION

In response to numerous inquiries, we supply below the text adopted by General Convention in sending greetings to "MEN AND WOMEN IN THE SERVICE OF THEIR COUNTRY."

The General Convention of the Episcopal Church meeting in Cleveland is aware of the absence from home parishes of many now serving the cause of Christian civilization in almost every part of the world. We take this opportunity of assuring you of our gratitude and of our continuing prayers for the success of our cause and for you and for your welfare. While you in your place train and sail and fly and march and struggle for victory, we would assure you that all our efforts are being bent to uphold the banner of the Cross in all fields of the Church's activities. May God bless and keep and guide you and at length bring you home in safety to enjoy the fruits of a peace to which you are so bravely contributing.

Valid Parish Records

Mr. Editor:

During my travels this summer I took a baptism in a church in another state. When I asked about signing the register, the parish secretary told me that the record had been entered and signed with my name by her. She said further that she always signed the register. I was amazed.

I wonder if this is the custom elsewhere. Attention should be called to the fact that the register is an official record with legal status, and that the validity of the entries depends upon the signature of the officiant. There is no more excuse for a secretary's signing the register than there would be for her signing, say, a marriage license.

Too much emphasis can hardly be placed upon accurate and valid parish records. Three or four times a year I am asked for true copies of entries in my register. Unless I am sure that the signature is valid, the record is useless.

DIOCESE OF KENTUCKY

Panel Discussion

Louisville, Ky.—Under the auspices of the Diocesan Department of Christian Education a Panel Discussion was held for the clergy and Church School Superintendents in the Louisville area on the subject, "Is Faith in God a Necessity for Parents and Children Today?" Some forty clergy and leaders in Christian Education attended the Forum, the outcome of the discussion led to the calling of another meeting in January, 1944, to continue further this tremendous subject confronting our Schools in this Diocese, at which time, concrete problems confronting each Church School will be discussed and some post-war planning will be made to meet the situation.

Progress

On Sunday afternoon, October 24, visitors saw the progress being made at Trinity Mission, under the splendid leadership of the Rev. S. Hughes Garvin, Canon of Christ Church Cathedral. In the newly decorated Church, the Bishop congratulated the congregation for the excellent work they had accomplished for their Lord. He expressed his gratitude to the Department of Missions, the Dean and the Chapter of Christ Church Cathedral, under whose supervision Trinity now operates. Some 170 people gathered despite inclement weather, some being former members of the Mission, having been baptized and confirmed there, and had taken up their church work elsewhere in the city. The following Sunday the congregation conducted a survey of the neighborhood for the unchurched, particularly was the survey made in nearby Clarksdale Housing Project, where steps, looking to the future progress found. This is one of the many future steps, looking to the many future of the Mission, being made for a well-rounded Forward Movement Program for 1944.

Endowment Fund Made Available

The John N. Norton Memorial Hospital of the Diocese of Kentucky has taken an important step forward toward Charity Patients' care. The entire income from Endowment Fund made available for needy cases. This step is in keeping with the religious and charitable spirit which has made Norton what it is today. This spirit lay behind the original impulse to create a Church hospital in our community. It was this same spirit which prompted the many gifts which built Norton Infirmary and which created its Endowment Fund. We of the present generation in the Diocese of Kentucky can take pride in our Church hospital and in the Christian spirit which motivates its present administrators. This is the only church hospital in the City of Louisville which employs a full time Chaplain. It was the first hospital to establish a Clinic for the poor and the first one to inaugurate a Blood Plasma Bank for the citizens of Louisville.

HAVEN . . .

By J. W. KENNEDY

CHILDREN and ADULTS both feel loss keenly. Little children feel it sharply but recover quickly. Older persons feel it less sharply but take longer to recover from the anguish of it. If we could only get it across to them (and it is as hard to make an adult understand as it is a child) that no matter how grievous the loss, something of value always remains. I should like to write a book entitled "Something always remains" and send each one a free copy so that loss of any kind might become a revealer of blessedness rather than a creator of bitterness.

The practice of fasting as an act of piety (so many practice it as the outward, visible sign of their mourning over loss—they can't eat or sleep), and the incompatibility of the old and the new form one of the story blocks in the early pages of Mark, Matthew and Luke. The disciples of John were critical of the disciples of Jesus because they did not fast regularly. Jesus made it quite clear that there was no need for fasting at this time. Ascetic practices did no flourish in Jesus' presence, although they developed fairly rapidly in the life of the Church. There is no mistaking Jesus' emphasis upon the happiness of the disciples' life. He compared it to a wedding feast. No one is sad at a wedding unless it be the mother who mourns over what she feels is the "loss" of son or daughter, or the one who failed to be lucky in this particular love game. Such persons are shunned. Jesus indicated that the custom of fasting, when it took on the outward signs of sad countenance and droopy head and lagging feet, was not God's desire for any man. If there was to be sorrow and the discipline of fasting for a reason—sorrow for sins possibly—then it should be done like prayer, apart and known to God alone. He that blows a trumpet for his sorrow over loss or anything else is simply saying, "Look how sad I am—please feel sorry for me—am I not a pitiable sight—isn't this suffering awful?" I recall trying to gain attention in my younger days through carefully staged fasts. When I was ignored it was no fun and the fast soon ended. The will of God is for us to exemplify the joy of living, and if there must be sadness, to work it out with God in close contact with Him and trap not others who could but furnish an audience for our monologish tragedy.

THE PARABLE or story saying concerning new wine and old wineskins, (a new patch of unshrunken cloth on an old garment with no stretch left in it) is one way of saying "you can't mix up two types of religion without spoiling both of them." "Double parables are a feature of Jesus' style" and produce an emphasis akin to the echo style of the psalms where the second half of each verse repeats in different words the same idea contained in the first half of the verse. But they do not seem to have any particular application to the question about fasting. The point seems to be the damage which the new does to the old in stretching it (as the wine the wineskin) and straining it (as the patch) beyond its capacity to change and adapt, and to become one with the new. Jesus was most assuredly contrasting the new day that He affirmed was dawning with the old order. Each day that passes makes this parable have greater point for our time. In the upheaval among men and nations, drastic adjustments must be made, and a new order established with as many defects as possible removed from the old which it will replace. Jesus' parable has sharp points when we cry for and plan for a new world. The early church was courageous enough to apply this parable to the structure of the permanent fellowship, and something new and different emerged.

Loss, whether it be the, as first felt, irreparable loss of a life partner or the old familiar ways and landmarks, will never be adequately dealt with by grinding teeth and dabbing eyes. No matter what goes, something remains and that which remains will abide. If we hold to it and carry it into the new day we shall once again be able to rejoice.

COLLECT FOR SECOND SUNDAY IN ADVENT

Blessed Lord, Who hath caused all holy Scriptures to be written for our learning; Grant that we may in such wise hear them, read, work, learn and inwardly digest them, that by patience and comfort of Thy Holy Word, we may embrace, and ever hold fast, the blessed hope of everlasting life, which Thou hast given us in our Saviour Jesus Christ. Amen.

"When the Son of Man Cometh?"

By F. W NEVE

THESE ARE the words of our Lord, but He added to them these further words:—"Shall He find Faith on the earth?" The word Faith is one of the most important and significant in the New Testament. If, however, we wish to grasp its full significance, we must examine the meaning given to it by our Lord Himself. As it is used in our own day it seems to mean little more than a mere acceptance of the truths of the Christian religion as they have been handed down to us as a part of our Christian inheritance. For instance, when we are asked a question as sponsors in the service of Holy Baptism, "Dost thou believe all the Articles of the Christian Faith as contained in the Apostles' Creed?" we are quite ready to give the required answer, "I do." This, it is true, is a confession of faith, but it indicates little more than a mere acceptance of form of belief which we have been accustomed to regard as the right thing for us to do. But this faith of acquiescence, as we may call it, is not the kind of faith which Christ taught as a necessary part of the Christian life and which He questioned as to whether He would find as a dynamic reality in His Church at His second coming.

Christ's Own Definition of Faith

In order to make clear what Christ Himself meant by Faith, it is necessary to quote His words spoken on two separate occasions. There is first of all His remarkable statement:—"If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye shall say unto this mountain, Remove hence to yonder place; and it shall remove; and nothing shall be impossible unto you." This shows that faith not only belongs to this physical life of ours, but has a far wider range than this because it operates on the spiritual plane as well as on the physical and therefore is not limited to what we are accustomed to regard as possible. Difficulties which seem to us to be impossible to overcome, and which may be so in our own strength, may be removed by that higher Power which comes to us by our union with our Lord Jesus Christ. On the same occasion when these words were uttered He also said to the man whose child He was about to heal:—"If thou canst believe, all things are possible to him that believeth." Faith, in its higher and spiritual sense, is in contact with spiritual forces, the possibilities of which cannot be measured from the merely human standpoint.

The Possibilities of the Soul

We must remember that the soul is a part of our nature, endowed with possibilities reaching far beyond this present life into the higher life beyond and, in addition, we have the assurance that our union with Christ, by faith in Him, does mean that our spiritual life has been placed on a higher plane by virtue of our being fellow workers with Him. This is made clear by other still more remarkable words of His, spoken by Him the night before His Death. These words were:—"Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father." These words certainly imply that our union with Christ enables Him to use us in such a way as to bring His power and influence to bear upon the life of the world. Faith, therefore, from Christ's own words, may be regarded as having a dynamic quality which should make Christianity the greatest power in human life and in human history.

The Example Set by Natural Science

The reason why Natural Science has transformed human life on its material side is because it has been busily at work in exploring the possibilities which lie hidden in Nature. If the same diligent work of research had been carried on in the resources of the spiritual world a still greater transformation would have taken place in the spiritual life of man. I have myself made a beginning along these lines in the Order of the Thousandfold, the prayer of the Order being as follows:—"Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, Who with Thy Son Jesus Christ hast given unto us all things in heaven and earth, we beseech Thee to make us a thousandfold more useful to Thee than ever before; that so Thy power and blessing may flow through us to multitudes of others who are in need, and also make us more willing and loving servants of Thine to Thy honor and glory for Jesus Christ's sake. Amen." And my reason for starting this Movement is given in these words:—"The Church stands now pretty much where the world stood before the great resources of physical energy were developed. She has scarcely touched as yet the illimitable stores of spiritual energy which God has placed at her disposal." The need for such a movement was soon demonstrated by the rapid spread of the Order, not only throughout this country, but to many parts of the world, in spite of the fact that it has no organization and no financial backing. It spread itself, or rather its members spread it, by passing it on to others in much the same way that Christianity was spread in the early days of the Church.

A New Advance

The wonderful way in which the Prayer has been answered has encouraged me to make a still further advance in developing the resources of the spiritual world for the benefit of mankind. This consists in seeking to prove that Christ really meant what He said in His promise to His disciples:—"Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father." If these words mean anything they mean that faith in Christ admits us to such a complete union with Him as to give us not only a share in His work but also a share in His Power which will make the work effective. We may, therefore, expect things to happen which go far beyond anything which we ourselves could accomplish from any resources of our own. If there are any who would like to take part in this spiritual adventure I should be glad of their aid. but I am quite ready to make it alone. I might say that I have for some considerable time been praying that God would take every gift and faculty and talent that He has given me and bless and inspire and equip them for the highest possible kind of service open to man here on earth. And the greatest service which anyone can render to his fellowmen is to make clear to them the vision of the far greater possibilities of the Christian life lying open to us all by the express invitation of our Lord as contained in His own words, as quoted above.

When They Come Home

By P. B. CLAYTON

An Overture:

This Open Letter has its origin in the appointment of the Rev. J. Thom, M. C., to the Living of Melton Mowbray, in the Leicester Diocese, England. The Bishop of Leicester himself a veteran Chaplain of distinction, has thus brought to his Diocese a man who was a household word in Flanders.

The Rev. J. Thom, with more Bars to his Military Cross than any other Chaplain, has just retired reluctantly on age-limit. His work will be not only his own parish, but in a wider way his experienced energies are to bear fruit throughout the Diocese. This Open Letter is addressed to him, at the Bishop's suggestion.—P.B.C.

My Dear Old Friend:

There can be no three friends, within the Church of England, who are bound by deeper fellowship than you, your Bishop, and myself. You both are heroes of the war in Flanders; where I did very little in the line, but, far more safely, was the "Innkeeper" of Talbot House, whence, Toc H has emerged. It was at about this stage in the old war, when I submitted to Archbishop Davidson a plan in outline for the Church home-coming of officers and men. Then time ran short. The foe collapsed, as you remember, in the same year as his last great offensive, and March 21st, 1918, was a strange contrast with November 11th. The British are wrought iron, improved by blows; the Germans are cast iron, standing (apparently) incredible strain, but finally just snapping. Within a year from now, if all goes well, this is indeed most likely to occur.

A week or two ago I saw your Bishop, and heard from him the most delightful news that you are going to be the Parish Priest of Melton Mowbray. You will bring them blessing; but, more than that, you will be on his staff, endeavoring to assist more widely within the Diocese, on his behalf. The Bishop asked me whether any plan was in my mind, which you could illustrate. This question drove me back to the old plan, submitted to Archbishop Davidson. The old plan perished in the London blitz; but this is an attempt to note some features, which you may care, yourself, to amplify.

WHEN FINALLY the officers and men begin to reach their homes, would it not be the happiest of customs in the Church that we should have a simple plan prepared for them? I am not thinking of crowded services, with hymns and sermons, but of something quiet, which would assist to reunite the home in the best way, within the Living Presence of Our Lord. Nor am I thinking here of their Communion, for many families have not yet learnt the joy of their Communion side by side. Our plan must be for every kind of home, not only for the Church folk in our midst, but for the wide variety of views; and it must be most tactfully set forward.

May I suggest that every wife and mother should soon write out and ask that her good man, now overseas, would send his glad agreement to the arrangements which I here put down. It is that every man, on his return, should come with his dear wife, and with the children, and a few friends (if so desired) to their old Parish Church and there kneel down; and in a very simple form of prayers, together with the blessing of the priest, reconsecrate their home relationships and render their thanksgiving for his safety. This little plan would surely be most wholesome, and completely English in its tone; for it would be domestic and informal. For a few moments they would kneel together, acknowledging their debt of gratitude and promising to dedicate their home, even more truly, in His love and friendship.

I feel that by some very simple plan, such as here described, the homes of England, especially within the country parishes, would come together in the happiest way. It would mean far more than large Services, attended by considerable numbers.

YOUR BISHOP cordially agreed, and asked me to draw up the tiny Service I would suggest for use on such occasions. This I will try to do, with your advice, and we can get it printed later on. Copies would then be distributed throughout the Diocese, and there would be a picture of the Church, and a blank space, so that the family could add their signatures. The Service could be framed as a reminder that their own home had played a real part in answer to Her Majesty's true message in the darkest days of war. Our beloved Queen spoke to her people in the following words:—

" . . . . speaking as I do to-night from my own dearly-loved home, I must say that I keenly look forward to a great rebuilding of family life as soon as the war ends."

Would you then be prepared, from Melton Mowbray, to undertake to spread the whole idea, and to get every Leicester parish to follow your example in the matter? The Diocese of Leicester could then stand as having made this simple preparation, and written out to their men for their agreement. If the results came in without demur, for the whole plan requires some moral courage, I hope that it may spread to other Dioceses and thus become a big united front, affecting many thousands of the homes now looking forward to that great reunion which peace will bring, when Victory is won.

Yours ever,
TUBBY.

Dr. Speer writes in his preface that the material in this book was gathered by him for his own personal use, and not for publication. We are greatly indebted to those who persuaded Dr. Speer to publish this excellent little volume. For each day there are verses from the Bible, a poem and a prayer. There are no comments on the Scripture selection, nor any meditations. It is nonetheless a book of great personal help and satisfaction. It will win a place in the devotional library of any who use it. We should add our gratitude to the publisher for printing it on such thin—the properly opaque—paper that despite the number of pages it remains a slim little book that will slip easily into the pocket.

For Upholding of Highest Standards of Sex Behaviour

The Federal Council of the Churches Appeals to "the Moulders of Public Opinion" to Join in a Nationwide Remedial Program

A FAR-SEEING LOVE of country demands that we keep home ties strong. Upon these the essential strength and well-being of the nation depend. The Christian Church, regarding marriage as sacred and human personality as a creation of God, has always stood for the highest standards in the relationships of men and women. We therefore set ourselves against the widespread lowering of standards of sex behavior as a degradation of human personality and a threat to the American home.

The home is the heart and essence of America. Happy married companionship and the joys of parenthood and family affection are normal outgrowths of the sexual drive guided and enriched by spiritual affection. But the misuse of sex is one of the greatest causes of individual disaster, family disintegration and social corruption. It is of supreme importance, therefore, that this part of human nature should be thought of on a level of understanding and reverence rather than upon the level of irresponsible gratification or exploitation.

The home, the church, and the school should see to it that children and young people receive sound sex instruction and character training. Especially is it necessary that youth should have right teaching and good example from those who are more mature. If the life of adults is at loose ends that of children is sure to be disturbed.

We note the wide prevalence of a "last fling" philosophy of grasping the indulgences of the moment without regard to the future or to the homes that are to be. Against this, we appeal to all young people to think of marriage with a determination to build their lives into such family relationships as shall make America strong in its inner integrity as well as in its world position. We take great satisfaction in the fact that most young people do think of marriage in this way.

WE APPEAL to educators, artists, authors, publishers, the press, the motion picture industry, the broadcasting interests and all other makers of public opinion, to recognize with us a great national responsibility for upholding high standards of conduct in the relations between the sexes, and for preparing youth to be builders of the future homes of America.

We protest against the exploiting in newspapers or magazines of material which degrades thought and emotion. We protest also against the protrayal of the human body in ways that are sensually provocative and which detract from the reverence in which men and women should be held as creators of homes and guardians of the sacredness of family life.

In view of the large amount of sexual delinquency involving young girls, we apepal to parents and to communities to give special attention and guidance to those among the teen-age girls who are in danger of entering into promiscuous ways or drifting into prostitution. We urge also that men both in and out of service be impressed with their own responsibility for the increase of promiscuity and prostitution.

Because of the spread of venereal diseases through sexual promiscuity and commercialized prostitution, millions of American men and women are unable to serve their country as they ought. Of the first two millian men from 21 to 35 years of age examined for the armed services, about 90,000 were found infested with syphilis. According to the United States Public Health Service reports, there are from 3 to 8 cases of gonorrhea for every case of syphilis.

It should be emphasized that infections of men in uniform come from voluntary contacts with the civilian population. In 1942 more than a million cases of these diseases were reported among workers in war industries. Although methods of diagnosis and treatment of venereal infection have been improved there is no certainty that the effects of these diseases can always be eradicated.

Prostitution is an enemy within the gates and a threat to community and national well-being. In it bodies are bought and sold, health destroyed and the spiritual nature degraded. It mercilessly victimizes the nation's youth. The large majority of new infections now occur among those who are under twenty-one years of age. The danger of such infection is greatly aggravated when young people have lost their discrimination of values, their caution and their self-control through alcohol.

The House of Delegates of the American Medical Association has taken the stand that the elimination of commercialized prostitution is necessary for the control of venereal disease and has further stated that no form of medical inspection of prostitutes can be effective. This enemy sabotages the war effort and does incalculable harm to present and future homes. It allies itself with other forces of corruption in community life and thus strikes in many insidious ways at the well-being of the home, the community and the nation. Against military foes we spend fabulous sums of money and marshall vast forces. We must face the foe of venereal disease with equal seriousness.

WE CALL UPON good citizens to press the enforcement of laws against this treacherous evil and we urge that those engaged in it be rehabilitated and assisted to enter some form of service useful to the nation. In addition to this, such wholesome surroundings must be created for men, women and children, that it will be hard for prostitution or any other form of sexual degradation to gain ground.

Finally we urge that understanding of family relationships and loyalty to family ties be universally inculcated, and the religious significance of family life so emphasized that even out of this world catastrophe of war, secure family life may emerge as a firm foundation for the rebuilding of the world.

"The Prayer Book Office"

We received from the Morehouse-Gorham Company a few days ago a brochure on a forthcoming publication—"The Prayer Book Office." This book is said to contain "Morning and Evening Prayer according to the American Book of Common Prayer." That is fine. Then something in addition is offered. "With Invitatories and Hymns, Antiphons to the Gospel Canticles And Other Enrichments." We looked inside at the specimen pages. Something seemed a little strange. Why the printer's mark after every use of Mary, Holy Ghost, Jesus, and Lord? If the sign of the cross is meant, why not say so, and put it there? Why give an antiphon for a black letter saint? (Memorial of St. Sylvester B. C.) We were not aware that we celebrated "black letter saints days," in the Protestant Episcopal Church.

We think a Prayer Book Office would be fine and valuable. But why not keep it according to the use of the Book of Common Prayers?

Bible Sunday

Our brethren of other denominations call this Sunday Bible Sunday. Being liturgical we know it as the Second Sunday in Advent. We know that the theme as expressed in Epistle, Collect and Gospel is that of emphasis upon the value of Holy Scripture.

Few of us who were reared in the Sunday School of thirty years ago, escaped memorizing the Collect for the Second Sunday in Advent.

"Blessed Lord, who hast called all holy Scriptures to be written for our learning, etc." The world needs God's Holy Word today. The world needs to hear, mark, learn and spiritually digest the great fundamental truths of God's Word. So we are happy to pay tribute to the American Bible Society, on this Second Sunday in Advent, for its work in spreading God's Word throughout the world.

We have never been taught to look upon the Bible as a magic fetish. Fortunately we were reared in a home where a sympathetic critical study of the Bible was encouraged. This has kept it a live book. One turns to it with an open mind and the Bible opens new vistas to the meaning of life.

To the American Bible Society and its affiliated organizations we pay our tribute of respect, for the work they have done and are doing and will continue to do, in keeping the world supplied with its perennial "best-seller."

This Church of ours has made its contribution in this field. We have an item in our National Budget for the work of the American Bible Society. It is the custom in many of our parishes to devote the offering on the Second Sunday in Advent to the work of the American Bible Society. We make as wide a use of the Bible in our services, as do the non-liturgized bodies. We wish they understood this fact. After all, the Book of Common Prayer is nearly three-fourths directly from the Bible.

May God's Holy Word continue to be the foundation of all our planning for the future. It does contain the Hope of the world—Salvation for all mankind.

The Bishop-Elect of Washington

We congratulate the delegates to the special Washington Diocesan Convention on the wisdom of their choice of Angus Dun, as their next Bishop. We hasten also to congratulate Dean Dun. He has been chosen for a high and responsible post. It is no light task to be the bishop of the diocese that contains our nation's Capital. We have not heard Dean Dun's decision. We doubt if he has made it. He now occupies a responsible position. The Episcopal Theological Seminary at Cambridge offers a man of Angus Dun's scholarly qualities many challenging opportunities. Many men now in the armed forces will be in our Seminaries after the war. They will need the type of guidance in their studies and the personal problems they will face, that Dean Dun is so splendidly capable of giving. At the same time Washington is bound to be the center of a great deal of Post-War planning. For the Church to have as the Bishop of Washington a man of Doctor Dun's vision, would be inspiring.

To both the Diocese of Washington and to Dean Dun —congratulations. We hope you work out a real partnership!

Address to Woman's Auxiliacy

By CHARLES P. TAFT,

Director, Community War Services, Federal Security Agency

TWO AND ONE-HALF YEARS ago I went to Washington to undertake the stimulation of soldier hospitality in communities near camps, and to stir up adequate community services for the millions of civilians already on the move toward camps and defense industry. Since then, I've had a reserved seat at an extraordinary show. Ingenious and neighborly Americans have gradually made new homes in difficult circumstances, while producing steadily increasing munitions of war to a total which for once justified the adjectives "super-colossal".

There have been failures and successes in that story of 30 odd months. The hardboiled babies that called schools and hospitals and play space and recreation opportunities "frills" caused untold delays and damage to people, especially youngsters, and caused also interference with production. Responsible industrialists and government officials and war and navy department personnel officials are now devoting more and more attention to the multifarious conditions outside the plants that affect turnover and absenteeism, conditions usually involving lack of community services. Some communities have just lain down and quit, but they are the exceptions. Most of our war towns, the old timers and the newcomers, have hitched up their galluses and straightened their skirts and gone to work to get things done that needed to be done, first things first, and then the amenities. The home front job can be seen in the President's figures of 123,000 planes, 53,000 tanks, 9½ million small arms.

THINK BACK to March of 1941. The draftees were just beginning to get to the camps where the National Guard had been for several months. Letters came back, but there was little realization of what was going on. You didn't see many soldiers around and the first USO campaign for funds ran into tremendous inertia. A congressman told me at a hearing that spring that he didn't see why they had to put up money for soldiers going to town—he never went to town in the last war. In many towns was a fear of soldiers or at least a dislike. We sent out sixty or more skilled recreation people to those towns and I think we can claim to have turned the tide. Fifteen hundred War Recreation Committees have been set up who have done the job with the help of the USO and of our men, but primarily out of their own local steam and enthusiasm.

In all that picture, especially in the small places with least resources, the churches took the lead. They had the Christian idea of friendly greeting and fought the occasional isolationists who thought the stranger within their gates was a proper recipient of the animal that dies of itself.

Now those War Recreation Committees, made up of city or county officials, of church members, representatives of women's clubs, from luncheon clubs, from veterans and fraternal organizations from serving agencies, from social work, are turning their attention to war workers, meaning not only workers in war plants, but in essential service trades, paid much less, and suffering from the same congestion and bad conditions. Part of their job is playgrounds and recreation opportunities for the toddlers, and for the girls too young for the USO and the boys too young for the army.

Community organization is not easy. You can always get together a paper committee but to get real planning from representative people and real carrying through, that is an art. It always seems easier to some people to run a show without consultation, to issue orders on the basis that you really know what is best for others. Yet the conference method of getting things done develops a program far stronger than the plans of any one of those in the conference.

OUR DEMOCRACY is fundamentally pluralistic. It denies that any leader knows what is best and insists that among a diverse group of people, each has some contribution to make. As Dr. Lindsay points out, it really stems in our modern day from Luther's doctrine of the priesthood of all believers, which the left wing Puritans made the very heart of our Christian democracy, where each person has a right to contribute his share toward community living.

In this job of mine we have run into various denials of our democratic inheritance. Many towns were afraid of soldiers at first. Nearly all that were blitzed by construction workers from the new plants, and then by the new workers in those plants, looked down their noses at these lowbrow strangers as dangerous and uncivilized. And always the lines of race and sometimes the lines of creed hardened.

Nevertheless the constant resources for facilities, for leadership, and for friendly tolerance were the Christians of good will and the churches generally.

In all those strains and stresses the basic element is the character of our people. War is evil and its evil is long enduring. Nothing can hold the line in that fight for a nation in the long run except Christian character. Some individuals get along with character and without Christian faith and a non-Christian religious patriotism can perform miracles for a young nation. But the solid foundation of a God of love is perfection and a God of love and perfection built this nation, and has seen it arrive at sound maturity. The character of our young men is daily seen on every battle front, and the seamy side is a fraction of the total, and a fraction of any previous war.

There is an increasing publicity about promiscuous girls exploited by their patriotic impulses toward the boy in uniform leaving for the front. The situation is serious enough, and in the case of those girls as well as the soldiers involved, it represents a failure of home, church, and school in character education. But the girls involved aren't five percent of the total, if that, and the proportion of soldiers and sailors is no greater. The increased number, and character and place of the chaplains is a great influence.

But the glamor of the uniform must not distract the Church from its primary job with the civilian boom towns near war plants, with the low-paid service workers in laundries and restaurants living alongside the higher paid war workers. Church officials and national staffs know their problems and struggle with them, but they have not yet told the story to their rather complacent congregations who are not living in this welter of mud, trailers, malodorous privies and adjoining wells, bursting buses, doorkey children, and disrupted homes. That is where the battle of production is being won and lost. Absenteeism and turnover come from many causes, but in the end they are licked and production schedules outdone by the spiritual fiber of individuals. There is the challenge, a home missionary challenge to a missionary Church.

BOOK NOTES

By the Faculty of the Church Divinity School of the Pacific. Edited by Randolph Crump Miller.

A PRAYER BOOK MANUAL. By the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship. Cloister Press. $1.00.

A sane and helpful introduction to the use of the Prayer Book in public worship. A perfect confirmation gift.

WILLIAM LAWRENCE. By Henry Knox Sherrill. Harvard University Press. $2.00.

Bishop Sherrill writes of the last years of the life of the great Bishop Lawrence.

THE INTENTION OF JESUS. By John Wick Bowman. Westminster Press. $2.50.

THE CASE FOR CHRISTIANITY. By C. S. Lewis. Macmillan. $1.50.

A fine presentation of an intelligent faith, written by a layman, with insight for our modern problems.

PERSONAL RELIGION. By Douglas C. Macintosh. Scribners. $3.00.

One of America's great theologians writes of evangelism with simplicity and power.

FROM JESUS TO PAUL. By Joseph Klausner. Macmillan. $3.50.

Highly technical study by noted Jewish scholar from point of view of Jewish nationalism.

STORY OF THE BIBLE PEOPLE. By Muriel Streibert Curtis. Macmillan. $1.50.

A grand book for children, 9 to 14, about the people who wrote the Bible.

ARTHUR SELDON LLOYD. By Alexander Zabriskie. Morehouse-Gorham. $3.00.

The intimate story of the man who made possible the present organization of the Church.

THE NATURE AND DESTINY OF MAN. Vol. II. By Reinhold Niebuhr. Scribners. $2.75.

No scholar can understand the present situation unless he understands Niebuhr.

SCIENCE, RELIGION, AND THE FUTURE. By Charles E. Raven. Macmillan. $2.00.

Canon Raven writes as an expert in both science and Christianity, and while his lectures go over ground familiar to many, they are full of the penetrating insights of a profound English thinker. The book is full of challenging statements, it is forthright in its statements concerning what we must do with modern science, and it suggests a positive incarnational theology based upon the "new philosophy" of "organism." The writer is at the forefront of the theological problems of today, for until our religious beliefs are revised to meet the scientific world we shall have no theology worthy of being the "science about God". What Thomas Aquinas did for Aristotle some modern thinker must do for Whitehead, Lloyd Morgan, Bergson, and others. Perhaps Raven is the man to do it. In developing his thesis, there are interesting sidelights concerning the development of the theory of evolution, what he thinks of Niebuhr (in a footnote), and the mystical nucleus of religious faith. This is a little book and easy to read, but its direction is right and its conclusions sound.

JESUS OF NAZARETH. By Joseph Klausner. Translated by Herbert Danby. Macmillan. $2.50.

This is a reissue of the book that made Dr. Klausner famous among Christians, caused by the great interest in his latest book, From Jesus to Paul. The author is a Jewish nationalist who resides in Palestine and his book was written in modern Hebrew. It is invaluable to students of the life of Jesus because of the author's knowledge of ancient Hebrew sources, his careful use of Christian materials, and his ability to reconstruct first century events in terms of the Jewish mind. Klausner establishes once and for all the Jewishness of Jesus, although in his later book he goes too far in blaming (or crediting) Paul for all the non-Jewish innovations in the early church. The Jewish nationalist can never accept Jesus as the Christ or as a prophet, but only as a great teacher of morality. R. C. M.

CHILDREN NEED ADULTS. By Ruth Davis Perry. Harpers. $1.50.

This is a book about pre-school children only, and is based upon wide experience with these children at the Riverside Church in New York. It is full of wise counsel for parents, with illustrations galore to make concrete the situations in which children and parents find themselves. It covers all aspects of the children's relations to parents and nursery teachers in terms of discipline, routine, science, art, and religion. The book comes alive with four-year olds' bright remarks and behavior, and theory and common sense are combined in the advice which is given. It is for every young parent and every nursery Church school teacher. R. C. M.

O LIVE YE BY THE CHURCH KALENDAR

With Advent we the year begin:
Prepare the way for Christ, our King;
Now Christmas sees in manger laid
Jesus in swaddling clothes arrayed.
Twelve days more the Epiphany star
Leads us like wise men from afar.
Ash Wednesday fast begins our Lent:
Forty days in prayer are spent.
Good Friday sees Christ crucified:
For one and all the Saviour died.
Easter! The Lord is risen today:
From the grave the stone is rolled away.
Ascension! Now the ascended Lord
Is to His home in heaven restored.
The Holy Ghost on Whitsunday
Comes down on earth, with us to stay.
On Trinity the heavenly host
Praise Father, Son, and Holy Ghost.

THE STURDY CAMEL

Did you know that a samel can close his nostrils tightly or open them wide at will? During the terrific desert sand storms of Arabia the camel closes his nostrils to keep out irritating sand until the storm is over.

Did you know that camels sometimes fly into sudden fits of extreme rage? It is wise not to go too near a camel's head. Sometimes, for no visible reason at all, camels become so angry they try to bite and kick the person nearest.

Did you know that an adult camel can carry 500 to 600 pounds of commercial goods for hundreds of miles across barren, sun-scorched deserts? About 25 miles a day is the limit for baggage camels, but riding camels, with only a light pack and rider, can cover up to 80 miles of desert country in 10 hours. Starting their third year, camels will carry heavy loads for 15 to 20 years, and are able to do light work until 30 years old or more. Some live to be 50 years old.

Did you know that, given a handful of dry beans or hard dates after a hard day's journey, the camel can fare very well? For his required green roughage he crops twigs, thistles and thorny shrubs that grow here and there in the desert. He can actually go a whole week without a drink of water because his stomach is a honeycomb of tiny cells that hold the moisture, allowing it to be released as needed by the camel's body.

Did you know that riding the camel—"Ship of the Desert"—will make you seasick? This is because he lifts both feet on one side at the same time, tilting his body sideways. To ride properly you must allow your body to roll over and back. Tossing and pitching, heaving and rolling, you might feel that you were in a sailboat on a rough sea.

Did you know that there are no records of wild camels? In the Bible we read that Abraham took on his journey "sheep and oxen and camels". Job had at one time six thousand camels, and the Amalekites possessed "camels without number".

Did you know that in 1857 the United States tried to introduce the camel into Arizona and New Mexico?—Our Dumb Animals.

JANE'S SECRET

"What can be the matter, Phyllis?"

"Nothing at all is the matter."

Phyllis hurried down the walk so that Jane should not see the sudden tears in her eyes. She did not like to cry.

Jane followed Phyllis, deep in thought. A secret is a terrible thing, especially when you can't tell it to your best friend. Jane knew that Phyllis felt bad and she was sorry, but she couldn't tell her this secret yet.

When the children reached the school yard Jane was quickly surrounded by three or four girls. Phyllis went off by herself.

After school Phyllis and Jane had a great deal of fun making paper-doll clothes. Jane had several sheets of tissue paper, blue and yellow and pink. She had even found some plaid paper for trimmings. With cutting and fitting and pasting the little girls soon made the paper into dresses.

"I do love paper dolls," said Phyllis. "Sometimes I think I had rather have them than real dolls. I asked mother to give me only paper dolls for my birthday."

"That's tomorrow, isn't it?" asked Jane, and she smiled to herself.

"Will you come over after school? Mother said I couldn't have a party this year. But she's ordered some ice cream, and maybe there'll be a cake."

Jane had a queer look on her face, "I can't come right after school, Phyllis, I promised Helen I'd go over there."

"Helen didn't ask me."

"I—I know."

"But it's my birthday."

"I'm sorry," said Jane, but she didn't look sorry.

Phyllis jumped to her feet. "If you don't like me any more I'm going home."

She ran out of the yard.

All the next day at school Phyllis kept away from Jane and from Helen. More than once she saw them giggling and talking together, but every time she came near them they grew quiet.

She felt hurt and went home by herself. Phyllis had a habit of sulking when things did not go to please her, and, even though today was her birthday and there was ice cream at home, she circled round the house to the back yard. She could do something to make those girls feel bad, and she intended to do it.

The paper dolls!

Lightly she ran across the back yard and down a side street to Jane's playhouse. She knew just where everything was. She picked up a box of colored papers that she had decided to burn or tear or spoil in some way. But when she took the cover off the box a scrap of white paper fluttered to the floor. She thought it was a paper-doll dress and stooped to pick it up, but then she saw that it was a note.

"Be sure to be on time," it said. "Won't it be a lark! Mrs. Cummins said—" The rest was torn off.

Mrs. Cummins? That was Phyllis' mother. What did she know about all this? Phyllis hadn't told her that the girls had a secret. Slowly she put back the box of paper dolls. She would go home and ask her mother what the note meant. Slowly and thoughtfully she walked up the front walk and opened the front door.

"Surprise! Surprise!" a dozen merry voices shouted.

Then Phyllis realized what the note had meant and why the girls had avoided her and why Helen had not asked her to play. A surprise party! For her! Of course! It was her birthday!

Jane was hugging her tight. "Come on, Phyllis. The table is all set. There's a great big cake, and you are to have the first blow at the candles."

Of course, it was intended that Phyllis Cummins should be the happiest little girl here, because it was her birthday and her party; but she wasn't, because she felt ashamed of herself.—Marguerite Murphy, in The Youth's Companion.

"Christian Invasion" Showing Results

Pioneer Work in China Supported by "Self-Denial Fund" of King's Daughters

New York, N. Y.—Finding their way somehow from Peking across occupied China and over the lines into free China south of Anking, two young Churchwomen, Miss Li and Miss Tang, well educated and trained, are a welcome addition to the small mission staff at Maolin. Here Bishop Robin Chen and others from the Anking diocese are developing extensive new work and are faced by opportunities too many for their small numbers.

"This is a pioneer work," writes Miss Elda Smith, who is supported by the self-denial fund of the Daughters of the King. "It is hard and lonely. These two young Chinese workers will have a salary based each month on the cost of bare living with not a cent for clothes, shoes, medicine and other needs. Prices are 300 times what they were two years ago."

The diocesan middle school, called Kuang Yih, which moved down to Maolin from Anking and Wuhu when those Yangtze Valley cities were invaded, has more than 500 boys and girls attending, some who came in as refugees and some from regions roundabout. This is an undeveloped part of China; community life though ancient is still fairly primitive and the people are conservative. Results of the Christian "invasion" are already beginning to appear, however, Miss Smith adds, "We have finished our third annual vacation school and I do believe we have made a dent in the crust of the hearts of some of these people. We have included illiterate and non-Christian children. Last year we had to go hunting for them and coaxing their parents, who could not see why anyone should wish to help their children and felt that education was not very important anyway. This year we posted notices all over the village. Attendance increased from 40 to 65. Only four were Christian. The others had never heard any Christian teaching. When they left they had learned a little about praying and had memorized a dozen or more Christian songs, which we hope they are now singing to their parents at home."

Missionary ingenuity had to devise a handcraft program entirely out of local resources. "How I longed for some odds and ends of colored paper," Miss Smith says. "Last year we had some old magazines and used the colored parts from the advertisements to make little Chinese lanterns and pictures. This year we had nothing, not even an old Christmas card. The older children could use bamboo, which grows in abundance here. We had one knife, which we bought on the street for twenty dollars, and an old saw with which we sawed and split the bamboo. The children scraped it smooth with pieces of broken glass and made 800 swab sticks, which they gave to Miss Emeline Bowne's clinic. Out of wheat straw the girls made shoes and fans. The teachers were some of our own Kuang Yih Christian students, who willingly gave up most of their holidays to help these little non-Christian illiterates."

CHURCH SERVICES INAUGURATED IN SHIP YARDS

Portland, Maine—Both the "Yard Bird" and the "New England Keel", tabloid papers devoted to the interests of men and women who are building ships in the Portland area, comment on the inauguration of church services, both non-Roman and Roman in the shipyards. The Rev. G. Melbourne Jones, defense chaplain of the Diocese of Maine, conducted the non-Roman services, Fr. Daniel F. Dwyer, S. J., the Roman Mass.

The "Keel" editor says that Mr. Jones is of the "high Episcopal Church", but comments sympathetically with his first regular service, noting that it was well attended, and that workers in the yards want the services and will be helped by them. Altars have been built in the East Area Tin Shop, and the West Area Assembly Building of the New England Ship Yards.

In his sermon, Mr. Jones said, "there is one thing that we need, every one of us here today, without which our nation is but a ship in a drydock. That is the tide of an unfailing faith in Almighty God. We must open the dock gates, which are the gates of our own hearts, and let in the strong tide of the immeasurable power of the Eternal God. We must let in the tide of faith, the tide of hope, the tide of love. We must put our dependence upon the good will of God, and in the redeeming power of His Eternal Son, Our Blessed Lord. If we do that, our Ship of State will reach the harbor of a worthy victory, a righteous peace, and a new day of Christian brotherhood."

STATESMEN BROADCASTING FOR UNITED CHURCH CANVASS

Three statesmen of national and international prominence, Vice-President Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson, and Mr. Wendell Willkie, are broadcasting in December over the blue network, on behalf of the United Church Canvass, according to information received from the Canvass headquarters in New York. The time of the broadcast is the same in each instance, 10:45 to 11 P. M., Eastern Wartime. The dates are December 4, Vice-President Wallace; December 10, Secretary Stimson; December 11, Mr Willkie.

Missionaries Due On Gripsholm

Repatriates and Friends to Attend Holy Communion Service on Arrival

New York—Latest word from the S. S. Gripsholm, bringing to the United States exchanged prisoners of war from the Orient, among them a number of our missionaries, indicates that the ship will reach New York City before 11 A. M. on December 1.

From the experience of the Gripsholm's previous trip the request has been made that friends and relatives shall not attempt to meet repatriates at the pier. Apparently the Red Cross is the only agency which will be assigned headquarters on the pier.

Episcopal repatriates and their friends will attend a celebration of the Holy Communion at Calvary Church at 11:45 December 4. Presiding Bishop Tucker will be the Celebrant, assisted by, it is hoped, Bishop W. P. Roberts and Lloyd Craighill, both of whom are on the Gripsholm. Arrangements are being worked out for a luncheon for the group at 1 P. M., and announcement will be made by mail, and at the service, as to final arrangements.

FIFTIETH JUBILEE CONVOCATION

Phoenix, Ariz.—The Fiftieth Jubilee Convocation of the Missionary District ofArizona was held at Trinity Cathedral on November 8, 9, 10. In spite of wartime difficulties almost every parish and mission was represented, both in the Convocation and in the Woman's Auxiliary.

Bishop Mitchell, in his opening address, urged world living on the Christian scale of love. The other highlight of the Convocation was the Joint Session on the second day addressed by Bishop Gooden, of Los Angeles. He told of General Convention and brought a special message from the Presiding Bishop. Reports were also made by the delegates to Convention.

Both the Convention and the Woman's Auxiliary completed their business with dispatch and laid excellent plans for the coming year. A feature of the Convocation was its participation in the Annual Arizona Convocation sponsored by the Arizona Federation of Churches, of which Bishop Mitchell is President.

Delegates to Synod were Rev. C. E. Huntington, of Tucson; Very Rev. Edwin S. Lane, of Phoenix, and the Rev. O. W. Nickle, of Morenci. Alternates elected were Rev. E. L. Freeland, of Bisbee; Rev. David Trimble, of Prescott, and Rev. W. F. Thompson, of Mesa. Lay delegates were Messrs. W. J. Jamieson and H. S. Reed, of Phoenix, and W. T. Birmingham, of Mesa; alternates, Messrs. Roy Kincannon, of Flagstaff; H. B. Leonard, of Tucson, and H. R. Brisley, of Douglas.

Chaplain Awarded Legion of Merit

Capt. Chadwick's Ministrations Inspirational to Both Officers and Men

Washington, D. C.—Chaplain (Captain) Clifford Chadwick, rector of Trinity Church, Hamilton, Ohio, has been awarded the Legion of Merit, with a citation which read: "Captain Chadwick was continually forward with the troops, and often beyond the lines. His ministrations to the wounded and dying were inspirational to both officers and men. His leadership and calmness while assisting in the evacuation of the dead and wounded made many difficult situations easier. With complete disregard for his own safety, when there was every chance of his becoming a casualty, he gave moral and spiritual support to the members of his organization."

Chaplain Chadwick, who served with an infantry regiment, was one of the first Chaplains to be awarded the Legion of Merit in this war, and is well acquainted with warfare from actual experience. "Being pinned behind a log by Jap machine gunfire that is chipping off the bark right in front of your nose," the Chaplain admits is not a pleasant experience, "and when a hill of South Pacific red ants resent your intrusion, the unpleasantness is more than doubled."

Chaplain Chadwick endured the combined ant and machine gun attack while helping minister to the wounded in the front lines during one of the advances on Guadalcanal. He was behind the log only five minutes, but with the ants supporting the Jap attack, he said, it seemed like all day.

The Chaplain has had other narrow escapes. In the course of aiding the Medical Corps remove wounded, he came upon a Japanese stretcher lying in the weeds. After picking it up and carrying it a short distance, he discovered it was broken and unusable. Later it was discovered that the stretcher was a Japanese booby trap and was wired to a grenade. Had the Chaplain carried the stretcher but a few feet farther, the trap would have sprung.

During his stay in Guadalcanal he at times worked among the natives and he reports that Christianity has found its way into the Melanesian tribes. While working among the natives, he assisted a missionary in holding religious services and passed out badly needed medical supplies.

Chaplain Chadwick was born in Providence, R. I., and was educated at Brown University and the Virginia Theological Seminary in Alexandria, Va.

CHAPEL IN STATION HOSPITAL DEDICATED

Little Rock, Ark.—Camp Joseph T. Robinson, Little Rock, now has a chapel in the Station Hospital. It has just been finished and dedicated by Chaplain Crawford W. Brown, formerly rector of the Church of the Redeemer, Elgin, Ills., and now Station Hospital Chaplain.

The new chapel, formerly a hospital ward, has a seating capacity of 250, and it houses also the Chaplain's office, an office for his assistant, and a reading room for visiting patients and quarters for the assistants. A complete schedule of Roman and non-Roman services has been prepared to suit the convenience of everyone connected with the hospital. Frequent programs of organ music are to be given, with music arranged by Corporal Ernesto Barbini.

At the dedication service, addresses were made by Colonel Grover C. Graham, Camp Commander; Colonel G. L. McKinney, Commanding Officer of the Hospital, and Chaplain (Major) Robert S. Woodson, Camp Chaplain. Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Alvin E. Teichart, Chief Chaplain of the 66th Division, read the Lesson, and the Prayers and Benediction were given by Chaplain Brown.

Keys of the chapel were presented by Chaplain Woodson, as Senior Camp Chaplain. He passed them to Chaplain Brown with the admonition to "leave these doors unlocked that they may be always open to those who labor and are heavy laden."

WAR WORKERS' VILLAGE BUILT ON DIOCESAN SCHOOL PROPERTY

New Orleans, La.—A war workers' village of 97 homes is being built on the farm lands of the Gaudet Normal and Industrial School, New Orleans. Gaudet is a school for Negro children, owned by the Diocese of Louisiana, and a member of the American Church Institute chain of schools.

Gaudet School owns about 120 acres of land located in the eastern suburbs of New Orleans, fronting a section of the Chef Menteur Highway, the main eastern highway outlet of the city, part of U. S. 90, and which leads to the immense shipyards and aircraft building shops of the Higgins Industries, the Delta Shipbuilding Company, the Pendleton Yards, and others. About ten acres will be used for the village, leaving ample space available for the school farm and dairy divisions. The school campus is not affected.

The homes are all individual prefabricated plywood units, with the last word in efficiency equipment, with sewer, drainage and electrical connections, and with a small garden plot near each house. It is to be a colony for white families. Two main entrance concrete roads lead off from the public highway, with lateral spurs serving every home.

DR. SHERMAN RESIGNS FROM FORWARD IN SERVICE

New York, N. Y.—The Rev. Arthur M. Sherman has announced his resignation from Forward in Service, effective January 1, and his acceptance of a position on the staff of Grace Church, New York City, January 15.

Dr. Sherman had a long and fruitful experience as missionary in China, including the presidency of Boone College, and after his return to the United States in 1931, he became national secretary for missionary education in the National Council. When the Forward Movement was inaugurated in 1935 he was called to serve in that new endeavor, and when the Presiding Bishop announced the ten-year plan, Forward in Service, Dr. Sherman worked on behalf of that movement. He has traveled widely through the country interpreting its message and the Presiding Bishop's call to the Church to go forward in service.

Joint Services

The Second in the series of Interfaith Services was held at Washington Cathedral Sunday, November 21, at 4:00 P. M. with the Rev. Justin Wroe Nixon, D. D., of Rochester, New York, as speaker.

The Washington Federation of Churches and Washington Cathedral jointly sponsor the monthly services entitled: "A Service on Behalf of a United People in a Time of National Emergency." In addition to the Canons of the Cathedral, the following local clergy participated: The Rev. L. Ralph Faber, Pastor of Luther Place Memorial Church; the Rev. Peter Marshall, Pastor of N. Y. Ave. Presbyterian Church and the Rev. Edward Clark, Pastor of Chevy Chase Baptist Church.

Dr. Nixon is a graduate of Denison University and has been college preacher at Cornell, Chicago, Yale, Smith, Mt. Holyoke and Princeton. He was a delegate to the Oxford Conference and was one of four American speakers at the Plenary Sessions. At present he is professor of Christian Theology and Ethics at the Colgate-Rochester Divinity School, and has been active as an arbitrator of labor disputes.

Memorial Tablet to Dr. Phillips Unveiled

The late Very Rev. ZeBarney Thorne Phillips, D. D., LL. D., S. T. D., dean of Washington Cathedral and chaplain of the U. S. Senate, was honored by the unveiling of a memorial tablet to his memory Thursday, November 18, at 5 P. M. The tablet is on the South wall of the South crypt aisle opposite the entrance of the Chapel of St. Joseph of Arimathea. The service was held in this Chapel.

Leaders to Visit Chaplains

Bishops Scarlett and Hobson Among Nine Appointed

New York—Nine religious leaders have been appointed by the General Commission on Army and Navy Chaplains to visit chaplains in the nine service commands. Of the nine, two are Episcopalians, Bishop William Scarlett, of Missouri, and Bishop Henry W. Hobson, of Southern Ohio. They are to work for a closer tie-up of the work of home churches and non-Roman chaplains in domestic posts of the armed services. The visitors will carry to the chaplains assurance of the interest of home churches in their work, and bring back to the various denominational committees on chaplains, reports on the aid that the Churches can render to their representatives among soldiers and sailors.

COMMITTEE APPOINTED TO NOTIFY DR. DUN OF ELECTION

Washington, D. C.—Dr. Angus Dun, Dean of the Episcopal Theological Seminary, Cambridge, Massachusetts, was elected Bishop by the delegates—clerical and lay—to the Recessed Convention of the Diocese of Washington meeting on November 23 in the Church of St. Stephen and the Incarnation, on the third ballot.

The Convention spent little time in presenting the names of the candidates, Justice Owen J. Roberts placing the four candidates named in the report of the Nominating Committee—and seconding speeches were limited in time. Although other names were placed in nomination from the floor, one only secured a considerable following in the voting, namely, Dr. C. Avery Mason, associated with the National Council in New York.

The three leading nominees—Dr. Angus Dun, Dr. Donald B. Aldrich and Dr. C. Avery Mason—ran very close on the first and second ballots, the third ballot, however, disclosed that Dr. Dun had secured a majority in both orders and was elected.

The election having been speedily concluded the Convention turned its attention to the appropriation of an additional $5,000 to the budget of the Church's Program for 1944, making provision for an enlarged organization in the work of City Missions. This has been a matter of considerable concern for some time and will allow the church to take a more active interest in the welfare of the many people who have come to Washington and are occupied in government service.

The committee appointed by the Rev. F. J. Bohanan, D. D., president of the Convention, to notify Dr. Dun of his election are Justice Owen J. Roberts, associate justice of the Supreme Court and Senior Warden of St. John's Church; Dr. Chas. W. Sheerin, rector of Epiphany Parish and the President of the Standing Committee, included by resolution, being the Rev. F. J. Bohanan, D. D.

It is understood that Dr. Dun will shortly come to Washington to confer with diocesan officials and acquaint himself with the work of the Diocese, the College of Preachers, and the Cathedral before giving his answer of acceptance or declination.

Memorial Windows Dedicated

St. Paul's Church, Rock Creek Parish, Washington, is richer in its interior appointments through the dedication of windows in memory of Conrad Becker, Olivia Mary Deakins Becker, the Rev. James Albert Buck, Louisa M. Serpell Deakins, William Frances Deakins and Emma Victoria Smeltzer by the Rt. Rev. George W. Davenport, D. D., Bishop in Residence, on Sunday, November 14, at its morning service. This old parish, one of the oldest in the diocese, thus completes a plan for enrichment begun several years ago and now presents an attractive interior harmonizing with the architectural features expressive of the period in which it was built.

Bishop's Fund Officially Endorsed

New York General Convention Approves Wholeheartedly of Appeal

New York, N. Y.—"The General Convention here assembled approves wholeheartedly of appeals made in the name of the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief; and in full recognition that these human needs unhappily grow ever more desperate, urges upon all men and women throughout the Church to give with the utmost generosity to this our Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief."

With the adoption of that declaration of approval, the General Convention placed itself officially on record on behalf of the Presiding Bishop's Fund.

Presiding Bishop Tucker has said: "The need for world relief is great and continuous—we must match it with our support."

The list of receipts and allocations from January 1 to November 1, 1943, totals $80,309.40. Thirty-four relief agencies and individual pieces of relief work have been aided by the Fund in this period. Largest single item is $25,482.24 to the Church Committee for China Relief. In the long list are such organizations and agencies as the American Bible Society, American Committee for Christian Refugees, American Friends Service Committee, War Prisoners' Aid through the Y. M. C. A., British, Norwegian, Greek, Russian, Polish, and Italian relief committees; the Episcopal Japanese-American Student Fund; relief in Puerto Rico through Bishop Colmore, special work by the Rev. Kimber Den, Bishop Tsu and Bishop Shen, and many others. It would seem, as Bishop Tucker said at General Convention, "The Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief is the means largely used by Church people today."

Among groups making contributions recently are a group of Mexican girls of Hooker School, Japanese, in a relocation center, a Soft Ball association

A Masterpiece of Beauty and Color

The beautiful rose window of the Cathedral of Notre Dame, a work of infinite beauty and splendor, is perhaps the masterpiece of all art glass windows. Built in the Thirteenth Century, it stands today unsurpassed in beauty and excellence of workmanship. WINNSBORO BLUE GRANITE

"The Silk of the Trade"

It is found, also, that the beautiful colors of Winnsboro Blue Granite come from the various crystals it contains, which are identical in substance to many of the finest of precious stones and jewels of the order of the amethyst and moonstone. When the surface of this granite,—which is a composite of these actual precious stone crystals,—is highly polished, all the beauty and color of these jewels become visible. Could a more beautiful monumental stone be found anywhere than this?

Winnsboro Blue Granite is most lasting because it is composed of the most durable minerals known. It is superbly beautiful because it is made up of the substance of precious stones and gems. Inscriptions on it are clearly legible because of the marked contrast between cut and polished surfaces.

BOSTON, MASS., AND BOSTON, ENGLAND, HOLD SIMULTANEOUS SERVICES

Boston, Mass.—International significance was attached to the Thanksgiving service on the morning of November 25 in the Cathedral Church of St. Paul when the Very Rev. Edwin J. Van Etten preached at the same hour that the Archbishop of Canterbury preached at a twin service in St. Botolph's Church, Boston, England. An outstanding feature of the New England service was the presentation to the Cathedral Church of a battle flag carried by the Lincolnshire Foot Regiment, while the latter were quartered with American soldiers in Iceland.

The wooden staff of the battle flag is an ancient baluster from the pulpit railing in the famous church of Old Boston, England; and it is believed that John Cotton must have placed his hands upon it many times when he arose to preach before he came to America to found a new Boston with his Lincolnshire associates. The implications of this presentation are tremendous historically, for the Lincolnshire Foot Regiment of Revolutionary Days took part in the engagements in Concord and Lexington and two of its members are buried beside the old Concord Bridge.

Allan Forbes, Esq., active in the raising of the contribution sent by the New Boston to preserve the tower of the great church in the English Boston, some years ago presented the flag to the Cathedral Church in behalf of Canon Cook of St. Botolph's. Assisting in the ceremony were Sir Anthony George, British Consul in Boston, and two officers of the Lincolnshire Regiment. The Cathedral Church was crowded with British and Canadian residents of Greater Boston and a detachment of British sailors. In old England, St. Botolph's Church, Boston, was attended by a congregation, in which American soldiers were a prominent feature. This simultaneous observance of Thanksgiving Day by the two churches in the new and the old Boston, is but one of a chain of happy collaborations which have extended over many years.

CHURCH NEWS IN BRIEF

Bishop's Daughter Joins WACS

New York—One of the newest WACS is Private Frances Nichols, of Salina, Kansas. She is the daughter of Bishop Shirley Nichols and Mrs. Nichols. Most of her life was spent in Japan, while her father was bishop of Wyoto. She was born in Tokyo. Her work in the WACS will make use of her knowledge of the Japanese language. Her brother, Walter, is a Lieutenant in the Navy, her brother, James, is an M. P. in the Army, and her sister, Cecil, is soon to join the Red Cross foreign service division.

Bishops Elected Accept

The Presiding Bishop has received acceptances from all the men elected missionary bishops at the Cleveland General Convention. In the near future it will be possible to announce details of consecration arrangements.

Population Increase

As just one example of the need of Church work in war industry areas, the Rev. Dr. Almon R. Pepper points to Richmond, California. In October the Richmond yards built 31 ships, and within recent months there has been a population increase from 27,000 to 127,000.

Need of Aid to British Missions Continues

Aid to British Missions is a continuing need. About one-half of the dioceses are including their 1943 giving for this purpose in their budget Expectations, and from this source $47,868 will be raised. The other dioceses preferred to continue their special appeal, but the amount received to November 1 from all of such dioceses is only $22,770.78. The record stands: Gifts in 1941, $341,520.04; in 1942, $172,026.33; Budget items and specials received to November 1, 1943, $70,638.78.

Dr. Wei Writes Enthusiastically

President Francis C. M. Wei, of Hua Chung College, now at Hsichow, Yunnan, China, reports a smaller student body for the present term, due to the removal of the college from the locality where adequate middle schools were "feeders". The student body is now 128, of whom 94 are men and 34 are women. He writes enthusiastically of the religious life of the college, noting special offerings for relief and work done by students in relief, cholera inoculations, instruction in health and hygiene for the country people. Attendance at Church services is good, he says, and the refugeeing students have a fine choir.

for a business session. This was conducted by Miss Priscilla Graddy, the diocesan president. Considerable interest was shown and much inspiration gained in the reports of the leaders and presidents of the various parish and mission groups.

In the late hours of the afternoon there was a period of discussion led by the Rev. Llewellyn Catlin, the diocesan Youth Advisor. The Theme of the discussion was "The Parish and the Mission Church".

The Convention Banquet was held in the Parish Hall, and the delegates listened with great interest to two inspiring speeches, one by the bishop of the diocese, the Rt. Rev. H. P. Almon Abbott, D. D., and the other by the Rev. Curtis Junker.

A good representation of the young people attended the 8 A. M. celebration of Holy Communion on Sunday and the Convention concluded with Morning Prayer, at which service the Rev. Curtis Junker preached.

TRAINING FOR THE MINISTRY

"The Church can fulfill its mission only as its clergy are men who in the surrender of mind and heart and will have discovered the meaning for the whole range of human living of the Christian doctrine of God. Theology is nothing less than this and for its incorporation in the lives of eager young men, theological education asks the support of every faithful member of the Church."

THOUGHTS FOR THE THOUGHTFUL

The lowest ebb is the turn of the tide. —Longfellow.

That charity which longs to publish itself, ceases to be charity.
—Hutton.

The strength, and the weakness, of the Church lies in the lives that are lived by those who call themselves its members.

Men show their character in nothing more clearly than in what they consider laughable. —Goethe.

Christians can despair of no generation, and certainly there is no need to despair of that which is growing up today. We can pray and plan and work. We can influence and help. We can set an example. We must not discourage or decry. Today's problems sound a trumpet-call to greater and more devoted service in His cause and in His Power.—The Bishop of Manchester (Eng.).

"Not silent is the Voice that stilled of yore
The stormy sea and led men safe to shore;
Nor empty are the Hands that on a cross
Redeemed mankind from sin and utter loss."

O Thou good Omnipotent, who so carest for every one of us, as if Thou caredst for him alone; and so for all, as if all were but one!
—St. Augustine.

There have been many creeds, many ideologies, but all these have been found wanting. Each in its own way has offered us the Golden Age; each one has failed us. Slowly but surely we are forced back to the realization that the teachings of the Son of Man are the only ones which hold the seeds of human happiness.

Face your difficulties and acknowledge them; but do not let them master you. —Helen Keller.

In the moment that a man acts because Christ commands, trusting in Him, venturing on Him, in that moment Christ is able to touch the will with new strength, to touch the emotions with new feeling, to flood the intelligence with new light.
—Selected.

Humility and patience are the surest proof of the increase of love.
—John Wesley.

"Nothing lies beyond the reach of prayer except that which lies outside the will of God."

The Jews made no mistake in choosing six verses from Deuteronomy as the essence of their religion, which Jewish lads were required to commit to memory before being admitted to membership in the Synagogue (Deut. 6:4-9). Jesus, who was fond of Deuteronomy, makes Deuteronomy 6:5 the first and greatest commandment.
—Dr. J. R. Sampey.

METROPOLITAN OF KIEV ON ANGLO-RUSSIAN CHURCH RELATIONS

Nikolai, Metropolitan of Kiev, writes as follows in Soviet War News, 21 October, 1943:

"The Archbishop of York's recent visit to Moscow was an outstanding event for the Russian Orthodox Church. It was not only a demonstration of friendship between the English and Russian peoples; it was also a clear expression of the sympathy of the Church of England, and of its feelings of brotherhood towards us.

"The friendly relations between these two Churches have their own history, about which I should like to write a little.

"The rapprochement of the two Churches was to a considerable extent due to Birkbeck, that enlightened Englishman, who paid frequent visits to Russia during the second half of the last century, first with the special object of studying the structure, life and form of service of the Orthodox Church, and then, in his own words, in order to take part in the prayers of the Orthodox Church festivals, particularly during Passion Week and Easter. Russian churchmen of the time called him 'the friend of the Orthodox Church'. On his return to England after each of these visits Birkbeck, in lectures and books, acquainted members of the Church of England with what he had learned of the Russian Orthodox Church.

"In 1897 Archbishop Antony (Vadovsky), of Finland, afterwards Metropolitan of St. Petersburg, visited England as the representative of the Russian Orthodox Church. The representatives of the Church of England, whose guest he was, welcomed him with honor and expressions of brotherhood. He celebrated the ceremonial of the Orthodox Church in London. The service was attended by many English churchmen. It was said that after his visit to England, and after the English churchman had made a closer study of the Orthodox Church service, the Russian Orthodox Prayer for the Dead was introduced into the Church of England Order of Common Prayer. (We think the Metropolitan has in mind the insertion of the Russian Contakion for the Departed in the English Hymnal.—Ed.) Oxford University bestowed an honorary degree on Archbishop Antony.

Thirty Years Ago

"Before the First World War of 1914-18, four bishops of the Church of England visited Russia as guests of the Russian Orthodox Church. They visited St. Petersburg and Moscow, attended many Church services, and were welcomed in a friendly and brotherly way by the Russian churchmen. When they visited St. Petersburg Ecclesiastical Academy, at which I was then a student, I welcomed the guests in the name of the whole student body, expressing in my speech our pleasure at such a manifestation of friendship between the two Churches.

"For a number of years before the war of 1914-18 a committee for the rapprochement of the Church of England and the Russian Orthodox Church was working at St. Petersburg, studying the faiths and forms of service. During the last years of its existence the committee was headed by Archbishop Sergii, of Finland, now Patriarch of Moscow and all Russia. The war, and later difficulties in maintaining connections with the Church of England, caused the committee to leave its work unfinished.

"The present war against the evil forces of Hitlerism has shown the two Churches' complete community of attitude to the brutal common foe. This community of feeling unites our Churches in sacred wrath. We have a common belief in the ultimate triumph of light and truth over the darkness and abomination of Nazi banditry. Metropolitan Sergii's message to his flock and the Archbishop of Canterbury's message to the Church of Eng-

HAVEN . . .

By J. W. KENNEDY

ONE OF THE HARDEST disciplines a Christian has to keep is to carry through his normal daily period of devotion in spite of circumstances that often give him valid reason for let-down. Sickness is one of these little demons, fatigue is another, upset plans still another. When we feel badly, especially with a walking sickness like a cold, we give in easily to ourselves and lose the larger view. It is quite natural, although unChristian, to make the center of the universe somewhere near a very sore nose or throat. Weariness also makes us open to temptation and we tend to be easy on ourselves for the body's sake without too much concern for the soul, which should control the attitudes we have even toward bodily weariness. We find in both cases of bodily condition a growing irritableness and consequent unhappiness for us and all who are around us. These things are true, as well as the rather more strenuous condition of disappointment, when plans go contrary to expectations. Instead of lifting them up and finding new directions from the change, we hold them down and mutter over the chestnutty phrase "Why does this always happen to me!" In reality things go pretty much according to schedule ninety per cent of the time.

I SAY IT IS difficult to maintain our Christian standard and disciplines when abnormal conditions exist. But these are the times of greatest possible spiritual growth. These are opportunities for demonstrating the ascendancy of spirit over body, of exercising control, of rising above the hurts of world and the weakness of mortality. It is not hard to keep our times apart with God when everything is on the up and up and not a care breezes our way. But God has given us the wherewithal to meet the unexpected, and unless we use it we are poor followers indeed of the Christ who charged us with the responsibility to make His way of dealing with adverse situations perfectly plain and victoriously evident.

BUT, AND THIS is the human part of us, we cannot always bear to take the blame for our reaction to sickness and tiredness and blocks to carefully laid plans. We go to great lengths to blame some thing or some one for our condition. Because it gets our goat we must use some other goat to hang our failings on to 'scape them. The moment a thought of blame of another for any present predicament crosses the mind, try singing snatches of that old Negro Spiritual, "It's not my brother, nor my sister but it's me O Lord, Standin' in the need of prayer".

Jesus said "Blessed are those who have endured . . . for the kingdom of Heaven belongs to them." (Matthew 5:10.)

We make allowances and excuses for those afflicted with these brief diseases of the spirit, but we should simply understand that they are what they are because they are not what they can be. We let them down when we feed their blindness and cowardice and childishness. I've often wondered what Paul would say in person to one who lets a minor ailment or bit of overwork or disappointment chase the sun from the sky and God from the heart? Probably what he did say to the Romans (8:38-39) that "nothing shall be able to separate us from the love of God". How easily he could have slipped behind his physical pain and discomfort, the often desperate weariness of his travels, the frequent and violent miscarriage of his plans. But, no, in each instance he dedicated the moment to God and sought the possible way of Glory in it.

These yowls and howls so often heard from the depths of a personal situation can be changed, if, when they come, we seek to keep our moment of quiet, ever turning to God and crying "O God, keep me from self-centeredness; help me to stay unentangled and free; show me ways to use whatever is amiss and to find in it a new slanting ray of Thy divine light."

Let no possible excuse make you fall from your highest spiritual self, as you keep Christ in heart and mind to guide both thought and feeling throughout the day and night, even until another of God's days dawns with the endless offer of hope and happiness.

O Lord Jesus Christ, who at thy first coming didst send thy messenger to prepare thy way before thee; Grant that the ministers and stewards of thy mysteries may likewise so prepare and make ready thy way, by turning the hearts of the disobedient to the wisdom of the just, that at thy second coming to judge the world, we may be found an acceptable people in thy sight, who livest and reignest with the Father and the Holy Spirit, ever one God, world without end. Amen.

Can We, As a Nation, Give Thanks in the Midst of This World-Wide War?

Sermon on Thanksgiving Day, 1943, in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, New York City.

By WILLIAM T. MANNING

We are here to keep Thanksgiving Day and I give you, as a text, some words out of the heart of the ancient Jewish religion, the words of the wonderful Psalmist of Israel—"O give thanks unto the Lord, for He is gracious, and His mercy endureth forever".

The words of that text call us to realize how much as Christians we have in common with our brethren of the Jewish faith and with all who believe in the One God from Whom comes the eternal moral law, that law of righteousness and justice which is binding upon all men everywhere, and which must be obeyed if there is to be peace, or order, or any civilized life in this world.

All normal men and women of every race, all men and women who are spiritually alive, know that they ought to give thanks to God, but the observance of an annual day of national Thanksgiving is a distinctly American institution. This institution comes to us from our earliest history as a people. Each year, at this time, the President of the United States, and the Governor of our own State, call upon us to gather in our Churches and houses of worship and offer up our thanks to Almighty God for His goodness and mercy and for all that we owe to Him as a nation and as individuals.

But today we face a situation such as has never before existed in this world. We see today, over a large part of the world, bloodshed, ruin, destruction, and unspeakable human suffering, on a scale such as was never before known.

Can we, as a nation, gives thanks in the midst of this world-wide war? Certainly this Thanksgiving Day does not call us Americans to a smug satisfaction and self congratulation that our lot is better than that of other nations, that we have food to eat and clothes to wear, while those in other lands are cold and starving, and that our homes and churches still stand while those of other nations are bombed and destroyed. There would be nothing Christian, and there would be nothing admirable, in that kind of thanksgiving. We know well that although we, as a nation, are more fortunate than others, this is not due to our superior moral excellence. We know that a heavy share of responsibility rests upon us for this calamity which has come upon this world. We know that our selfishness and attempted isolationism, our unfaithfulness to the ideals of Christianity and of Democracy, our widespread unbelief and irreligion, our forgetfulness of God, and our unwillingness to recognize that this world is one, and that as God's children all men are our brothers, had its part, its very real part, in bringing the present world tragedy. But recognizing these stern facts, and facing the tremendous realities of this time, we can still see abundant reason for thankfulness to God, we can still say with the Psalmist—"I will give thanks unto the Lord, for He is gracious, and His mercy endureth forever".

1—We can give thanks with all our hearts that victory is more certain and peace is nearer than it was a year ago.

2—We can give thanks that, whatever may be said about other wars, in this world conflict we are fighting on the side of justice, mercy and freedom. We know that it is God's will that justice, mercy, and freedom shall reign on this earth, and therefore with full confidence, we pray for victory. We are fighting not only for our own land but that there may be justice, right, and freedom, for all men everywhere. God grant that we may hold true to this ideal and purpose when we come to making the Peace!

3—We should give thanks for the spirit of the men and women who have gone from their homes, and from their normal ways of life, to serve in our Armed forces, and for the great service given by the men of our Merchant Marine, and by the vast majority of our civilian defense workers. We should give thanks for the spirit of our nation as a whole. And we should give thanks for the determination of our people not to listen to any proposals for a false and delusive peace ,a so-called peace which would be a betrayal of peace, but to carry this struggle through to complete victory for the true welfare of all men, victors and vanquished alike. But while our nation is giving itself in this supreme world struggle we must realize that there are grave dangers threatening us in our own internal life. All of us in this land should now demand and insist that our government shall without further hesitation adopt an adequate, courageous, non-political, financial policy, to save our country from the untold evils of inflation which at this time gravely threaten us.

4—We should give thanks for those true spiritual heroes in the conquered and enslaved countries, most of them unrecorded and unknown, who, in the face of inhuman cruelty and at the cost of their lives, have continued to struggle for right and justice. In France, in Norway, in Holland, in Greece, in Yugo-Slavia and in other countries men and women have borne their noble witness, and by their witness to the death have strengthened the cause of right and justice everywhere. Let us thank God for the example of those men and women. As we think of their sufferings and sacrifies we are humbled by the thought of the small sacrifices that most of us in our land have yet been called to make.

5—We should give thanks that, as a nation, we now see that we cannot escape our share of world responsibility and that our nation must join with other nations in some form of world organization which shall maintain world security and peace, and which shall have armed force at its command to deter any would-be aggressor. In the recent Moscow Conference we have seen the most real and encouraging advance that has ever been made towards this great world ideal. There are great difficulties to be met in effecting such a world fellowship, but the difficulties will be solved. We now see the vision of a world of united nations and we shall not go back from it. The world will not go back to the level of isolationism or imperialism. With God's guidance we shall go forward to such a fellowship of nations, and to such international cooperation, as shall make possible a truer and more Christian world order and a lasting peace.

6—Fearful as this world conflict is there are still many reasons for thankfulness, but for every Chris-

The Three Levels of Life

Address to the Fiftieth Annual Convocation of the Missionary District of Arizona

By WALTER MITCHELL, Bishop of Arizona

Gen. 1:28; St. Matt. 22:39; St. John 13:34.

THIS PRESENT WAR is following somewhat the pattern of the other World War. At first, the other side had all the advantage—Paris was saved then as Britain was this time, almost by a miracle. We have now reached the stage, as we did before, when the people on our side—not our leaders, however, to the same extent—are discussing the kind of world we should have, once the War is over. We are to hear a lot about that.

Our leaders are not agreed among themselves as to that. Our President and Mr. Churchill have agreed upon what they call the Four Freedoms, but, as I have said, they did not agree at all as to the application of these Four Freedoms. Our President says they are to apply to all peoples and to us here. Mr. Churchill says he did not become his Majesty's Prime Minister with the idea of handing back to him less of an Empire than he received from the King. That is, the Four Freedoms are not to apply to India, Burma and the rest. The moment Churchill and Roosevelt proclaimed the Four Freedoms as the objective of our side, and our President, time after time, insisted that the Four Freedoms applied to all peoples and races, a ferment of such power was begun that when the attempt was made to stamp it out by force, hate and trouble were bound to follow. That ferment will brook no inconsistency. The Chinese writer, Lin Yutang, in his "Between Tears and Laughter" puts it very well indeed:

> (P. 155)| "The English", he said, "are fighting to be free and at the same time fighting the Indians who are fighting to be free, and the Indians are fighting to be free in order to help the English fighting to be free in this war for freedom. . . . One just does not discuss the Four Freedoms in India, nor hear them mentioned. It is a little awkward, isn't it? . . . The Viceroy of India's report on killings in India (showed) 940 killed, 1630 injured, 60,299 arrested, 26,000 convicted, 18,000 detained without trial—since August, 1942."

WHAT IS TRUE of the British Empire would necessarily be true of all other empires, if Mr. Churchill has his way. The other nations having empires in remote areas have been equally silent as to the application of the Four Freedoms to the people of their empires; and, according to a recent writer, in these other empires there are 125,000,000 subject peoples!

To date, so far as the public knows, Churchill is winning out. We should be using our influence to induce Great Britain to resume negotiations with India right now. It would be presumptuous to say that any given decision should be reached; but we should insist that negotiations looking to a decision acceptable to both parties should be resumed and continued until a decision shall have been agreed upon. If we do not get our good offices accepted now, when Britain needs us so badly, the chances are we shall never be of use in that matter later. After the war Britain would probably pay no attention to us. So far are we from having any influence whatever in the matter, according to the paper, when our diplomatic representative was leaving India to report to our Government, he was not permitted by the British Government to see Gandhi. We did not demand insistently enough that he should. The people of India must feel that we are standing by Britain against the application of the Four Freedoms to them. On the other hand, Chiang Kai Shek, in the midst of an all engrossing war, went himself to India. For some reason, he was allowed to see Gandhi and other Indian leaders. The people of India are confident that China is with them. It ought to be equally clear that we are, but it is not.

Messrs. Churchill and Roosevelt do not agree with our Chinese allies as to the application of the Four Freedoms to China, nor as to the treatment of our enemies after the war. Almost the first thing Madame Chiang Kai Shek said upon arrival in this Country was that there must be no Hate. None of our English or American leaders have said that, nor has England said anything about releasing Hong Kong and other such holdings.

AT LONG LAST we are conferring with Russia. To the man in the street, it would seem obvious that every one of the United Nations should be represented in the making of plans for the New World. The small nations and ones never having had empires have never broken the peace of the world. They could be depended upon to mend it in such ways that it would be more apt to last. Now is the time for us to press for these things while we are needed.

The people, both here and in Britain, should bring their governments into line and the Churches should take the lead everywhere as they have in England. At present, the pronouncements of the Church leaders in England do not agree at all with those of their government. Mr. Churchill is the very man of the hour to win the war. By reason of his life-long convictions frequently expressed, as a dyed-in-the-wool Tory he would seem to be the last man in the world to influence the making of the Peace.

I have used the expression "our side" frequently. That seems to be the proper description. Politics are said to make "strange bed fellows". This war finds nations first on one side and then on the other. Time was when we lauded Finland to the skies. Now she is our enemy. Russia, once against us, is now on our side. So was Italy. It is, therefore, safer to speak of "our side" and "the other side", for the membership of these changes. But these changes show how difficult it is going to be if we mean to hate.

THAT IS NOT the whole of it. The most popular slogan in this country with respect to the peace is that it must be "Just and Durable". From the truly Christian point of view, the words "Just" and "Durable" would seem to contradict each other. Man lives on three different levels of life. He began on the first, the merely or purely human level of life. When man was first created, God blessed them and said unto them, "Be fruitful and multiply, and replenish the earth, and subdue it; and have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowls of the air, and over every living thing that moveth upon the earth". (Gen. 1:28). The earth and all that therein is was given to man and he has been subduing them ever since. But dominion over man by man was not included and never intended. It has been man's determination to dominate other men which has caused most of the misery in the world from that day to this. The injunction to subdue the earth, was given as a blessing; man immediately turned it into a curse. In the second generation, murder became the established order and has persisted ever since.

What our Lord said thousands of years later, was true from the beginning: "Man shall not live by bread alone" because he cannot. A man may live as a good human animal should and millions do so still. Even many a so-called Christian does that. But, as we know perfectly well, human nature alone is too weak a foundation to carry the weight of the world as man has made it. Brute force is not sufficient. Realization of this was summed up many years later in what became known as the Golden Rule. (St. Matt. 22:39). What man wanted for himself was to be limited by how he would like it if the same action were taken against him. Man thus moved up to another and higher level. From the brutish, merely human level to the moral level of the law. That was a great advance. Indeed, even among Christians, it is still regarded as the Christian level and way of life. It is strange that Christian leaders still harp upon the Golden Rule as the solution of all economic, racial and international problems. Experience has proved that it is not. After all, while the considerations which should rule our behavior, were immeasurably heightened when we moved up from the purely brutish level of human nature, to that of consideration for the other fellow; we are still on a human level albeit a moral level. The Golden Rule makes me the measure of my duty or relationship to other men, even though it be on the moral level. I am still using a selfish, personal, human yardstick. It is true that human nature, as human nature, never changes. There is no reason to expect that man, as man, will ever be able to control the situation which he has produced. The Golden Rule leaves us down on the level of Duty, of what I ought to do, without supplying the power to make me want to do it. And in practice, it gets turned around. I am writing this on a train returning home; across the aisle sits a little girl and a smaller boy. I happened to hear her say to him "I'll be good if you'll be good to me". The Golden Rule lacks the power to do much more.

BUT IT IS the level upon which it is natural to talk about "Rights", "Justice" and the like. That is, my rights, justice for me. The grand thing about living on this level of the Golden Rule, (inadequate as it is to meet the needs of our everyday life as individuals and nations in normal times much less in such times as these), is that while we start out to make good our own rights and to secure justice for ourselves, the Golden Rule will not let us stop there. Take the situation before and after Pearl Harbor. The rights of nation after nation had been invaded. Awful injustices were committed. Millions of innocent people were suffering in consequence. If it were right for us to go to war on this basis at all, surely we should have then. On the contrary, we did nothing of the kind. We continued to sell scrap, oil, etc., to Japan. It was only when our own rights were invaded, when we were treated unjustly at Pearl Harbor that we went to war. Once in, however, we found self-preservation too unimportant and associated with our own rights and justice for ourselves, the restoration of these priceless possessions to all who had had them, but had lost them.

Our President, as I have said, would go further. He would give these rights—justice—freedom, to all people even to those who have never had them. The Chinese certainly, and perhaps the Russians, would agree to that. Pressure must be brought to bear upon Britain and other imperial nations to become willing to do so. Life and convictions on the moral level, however, will never bring freedom to the peoples now lacking it. Morality, Duty, Justice, all such self-regarding motives, are too weak. They are not sufficient. They lack the power. As our great Presiding Bishop said at General Convention, our situation is "insoluble on the human level".

We see this weakness operating right here amongst us in the matter of race relations. The Golden Rule had broken down completely here. In fact, before we can consistently urge the imperialist nations to apply the Golden Rule to their subject peoples, we must apply it ourselves to the Indian, the Mexican, the Japanese and others right in our midst. What mockery it must be to these brethren of ours to hear us singing about and pledging ourselves to Freedom for all people everywhere! "Let Freedom ring"! But for whom? "America, the land of the free"! If your skin were red or black or yellow, with what feeling would you sing that?

No, the moral Level, the Golden Rule Level, will not do. It puts first what must be put last. "Self-preservation is the first law of nature". The Golden Rule, the moral way of life, is on that level. It can win the War. It cannot win the Peace.

TO WIN THE PEACE, to win freedom for all, we must live and act upon so vastly a higher scale that in describing it our Lord could only speak of it as an entirely new way of life. It was not simply an improvement on the old Golden Rule way of life. That way did not require a God-filled man to live it. It was the best, the law, the Old Testament, could do; it is not Christian at all. This third, and final, level of life does not seek to make us better. We must be made over. It is not just a gradual improvement on the old, moral, way of life, which as time goes on we will gradually achieve. It is an altogether brand new way of life. It is such a radical break from the old that, according to our Lord, we have actually to die to the old and then be born into the new. Nothing makes as radical and complete a change as death, or birth. Both must occur before we can move up to and live upon the spiritual level of life.

There everything is different—reversed, in fact. The first—ourselves—under the Golden Rule, becomes last. We forget all about our rights in our determination to see that all who have had their rights taken away have them restored; and that those who have never had them have their rights given to them. Instead of the rights of our own race, we forget about race in our concern for men. The Golden Rule would have us say to others, "Be ye perfect as I am perfect, and I'll help you to do that." But on the spiritual and final level of life the objective for all, including ourselves, is "Be ye perfect as your Father in Heaven is perfect." The motive power is no longer duty, but a much more powerful one—love. Love to the nth power. To love others as our Lord loves us. "Rights" become righteousness; demanding things for ourselves becomes sacrificing our things, aye, our very selves, for others.

That is why I say a "just peace" cannot be a

What is Meant by Catholic?

"I dare suggest a program. First: let every priest who calls himself a Catholic stop playing with the Mass. Let him offer it every day, not just on Sunday, and on Thursday at ten o'clock. Let every priest bear witness to the faith, after this manner, and he will gather about him souls who will see that this is the central discipline. We often hear Christian people wish that Christ had given us a program. He did: on the night of His betrayal. If we followed it, we would know its fruits and so would others.

"Second: we must bear witness. We must be evangelists. The only people who have the right to be evangelists are Catholics (boldface ours). We are the only ones who have anything to be evangelistic about. Only Catholics can be liberal (again boldface ours). Some of you may come from parishes that you find barren. Bear your witness: in the parish guilds, in the Church School, anywhere in the parish where you can. Your witness will bear fruits."

These two paragraphs are a direct quotation, from an address given by the Bishop of Chicago, Bishop Conkling, before the American Church Union, meeting in New York on this past Armistice Day. They will be found in the Living Church issue of November 21, page 8. The Living Church characterizes the address of the Bishop of Chicago as "one of the great addresses in the history of the Anglo-Catholic Movement in America."

There are several questions that we would wish to ask the Bishop of Chicago. But before we do that, may we develop the background of that address a little more clearly. The American Church Union is an official organization of clergy in this Church. This is perfectly permissible, as we have many such organizations. The purposes of the American Church Union are clearly stated on page 117 of the Living Church Annual of 1943. It was in line with the purposes of that organization that the Bishop of Chicago made his address. If you read the statements of purpose you will note that whenever the name of the Church is used the word Protestant is omitted, although the official title of our Church is the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America. Our reason for calling attention to this fact is that we are fearful that the Bishop of Chicago was limiting his use of the word Catholic, and by inference suggesting Anglo-Catholic.

Therefore the first question we would wish to ask is: In your statement that "the only people who have the right to be evaneglists are Catholics." whom do you mean by Catholics? Would the Bishop of Chicago include in his Catholic evangelistic group the founders of the Church Missionary Society of the Church of England? They were not sacramentalists. Yet they displayed tremendous evangelistic zeal. We think of John Payne the first missionary bishop of Liberia. We think of Lucien Kinsolving, William Cabell Brown and Jim Morris, whose evangelistic zeal took them to Brazil. We cannot think of any of these men urging the clergymen working with them not to play with the mass, but to celebrate it every day. They were evangelists and they were not Catholic in any modified sense.

Next would the Bishop of Chicago say that the late William Appleton Lawrence, who would never have found congeniality in the A. C. U., was not a great liberal? We mean liberal in the best sense of the word. How about a Bishop Potter; a Bishop Williams of Michigan and a host of others that we could name. They were liberal in their approaches and were evangelical, and yet were not associated with the Anglo-Catholic Movement in this country. We leave out some of the great spirits in the Church today—who are making a positive contribution to its life, and in no sense are they allied with the Anglo-Catholic Movement. They are, however, evangelists and they are liberal.

As Catholic and as Protestant members, of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America, we believe that we can be and are real evangelists of the "good news." We believe that we can be and will continue to be liberal through our Protestant heritage in interpreting the good news to all men. We are still "Catholic for every truth of God and Protestant against every error of man."

Please, Bishop Conkling, give those of us who differ from you, at least a small part in the spread of the "good news," as evangelists; and a little credit for being at least liberal in our interpretation of that "good news," to this generation!

"Forward in Service"

We have watched with interest the development of "Forward in Service." We pay tribute to the excellent work that Avery Mason and Arthur Sherman, have done in guiding this movement. We regret to learn that Arthur Sherman is leaving the staff of Forward in Service. We wish for him much happiness in his continued work for the spread of God's Kingdom.

We do feel that some bit of an evangelistic spirit is needed if "Forward in Service" is to continue to capture the imagination of the clergy and laity. Excellent pamphlets, tracts and so forth are not enough. Nor are regional conferences sufficient. We feel very strongly that a positive approach that will arouse mis-

The Swiss Alphorn in Legend and in Fact

By MARIE WIDMER

TRYING TO EXPLAIN the origin of the Swiss Alphorn, a pretty legend relates how a lonely young herdsman in the Alps wished constantly for something that might help him brighten the long hours of his solitude. One evening, after he was already in bed, he heard voices in the room below his sleeping abode. Peering down he perceived three strangers around the fireplace. In the huge kettle that always hung there, one of the man was boiling a mixture.

Presently one of the nocturnal visitors went outside and strange sweet music began to float through the air. The herdsman listened spellbound, but all too soon the music stopped and the player rejoined his companions. "Come down" the three men now urged the youth in the loft, and trying to show himself fearless, he promptly obeyed.

Amazing things then began to happen. The stranger tending the boiling mixture took one of the three glasses which stood on the table and filled it. The liquid was of a brilliant green color. He gave a rap with his dipper, then filled the second glass, the same appearing bright red. With another rap he filled the third glass and that fluid showed the transparency of pure crystal.

"Drink" urged the men. "The green liquid will make you victorious in many battles" promised the first. "The red beverage will bring you countless riches" enticed the second. "Neither glory nor riches can I give you" declared the third, "but I offer you the happiness of real music and my alphorn."

Without hesitation the youth drank the clear liquid. The visitors and the glasses vanished and the bewildered herdsman climbed back to his sleeping quarters. Recalling the strange happenings in the night, he ran outdoors next morning and beheld, leaning against a tree, a wooden horn some six feet long. He placed it to his lips and soon found himself playing some familiar herdsmen's tunes.

More matter of fact data on the alphorn indicates that it had its origin in Northern Asia. From there it migrated southward with nomadic tribes, then finally reached the Swiss alpine regions. According to Tacitus, the Romans used horns of this type for signaling.

Historic records dealing with this now characteristic instrument of the alps are more definite from the 9th century on. In those early days, in the Bernese and Valaisan mountains, the alphorn reached a length of over 13 feet. In other sections, especially in Central Switzerland, where the Rigi and Mythen districts near Lucerne were its favorite haunts, the instrument was sometimes shortened by bending the upper part of the conical pipe to run parallel with the lower part. The average length of Swiss alphorns is now only six feet. Nevertheless, even these shorter instruments can be heard at 1 1-2 hours' distance.

Slender cembra pines or young firs furnish the wood preferred for alphorns. They are cut in two, lengthwise, carefully hollowed out, then bound. The hooked end for the sound-hole is made of the root. At first the horn was covered with tree-bark, mostly of birches, or with hemp yarn soaked in tar or pitch. Later on, roots of young fir trees, about as thick as a pencil, were used, also rattan cane which, while excellent and attractive, proved, however, rather expensive. Today birch-rind or thin oakwood chips are generally used as protective materials.

The Lauterbrunnen Valley in the Bernese Oberland, Switzerland, with the Staubbach Falls, is a region where the Alphorn is frequently heard.

Seeing that the octave scale of the alphorn is not complete, players have been advised not to attempt the rendition of entire songs on this instrument. Nevertheless, in spite of its limitations, the music of the alphorn in alpine regions is an unforgettable delight, especially when it is mingled with the sound of tinkling cowbells and joyous waterfalls.

Since the aesthetic effect of alphorn blowing depends not so much on the sound as it does on the echo, the instrument is most effective out-of-doors where it enjoys the advantage of open spaces. Interesting observations have been made regarding the quality of the echo. It has been found that the first echo usually retains the key of the original melody, while the second echo may be a quarter note lower and rhythmically less precise.

Alphorn melodies, although limited, have frequently found a place in the work of great composers. Outstanding examples are the beginning of the fourth movement in Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony; the prelude to Mozart's pastoral play "Bastien and Bastienne", composed in 1768; the beginning of the overture to Rossini's "William Tell"; also the respective passages in Meyerbeer's "Dinorah" and Wagner's "Tristan and Isolde". According to a research on the alphorn made by S. Elkan, Wagner, when composing this opera, had suggested that a special instrument should be made for the herdsman's horn, taking the Swiss alphorn as a model.

Good alphorn playing is undoubtedly an art, for it takes skill to acquire the lip technique necessary for producing the desired notes and for giving musical variety. While there is no complete record of alphorn artists in days gone by, a few outstanding players are mentioned in small chronicles. Thus the "Berner Taschenbuch" of 1892-1894 remembers one Jakob Henzi of Chateau d'Oex, who lived in the 16th century. He was the son of very poor people, but admirers of his alphorn music found a position for him as one of the guards of the Duke of Anjou in France.

In the 19th century there was a general revival of interest in Swiss folklore. As a result renewed attention was also focused on the alphorn. Thus Major Fr. von Mulinen arranged for a course of study in alphorn playing for young people, to be given in the Bernese Oberland by the composer Ferdinand F. Huber, a teacher at the Fellenberg School at Hofwyl. Huber accordingly spent yearly two weeks at Grindelwald and gave lessons on six alphorns. He was the first musician to attempt the tuning of several alphorns in the same pitch and to have alphorn melodies played in three parts.

Composer Huber's efforts evidently bore fruit. Since the middle of last century alpine festivals, with competitions in excellent alphorn playing, have become annual events in Switzerland.

The alphorn is without doubt the characteristic instrument of the Swiss Alps. Limited as its range is, its music, when floating and echoing through the wide spaces of the alps, has a magic of its own which fills the hearts of natives of the Swiss mountain regions with a strange tenderness and love for their homeland.

THE THREE LEVELS OF LIFE

"durable peace". Once we start on the moral level of justice (which inevitably and inexorably becomes justice for our side and punishment for the other with ourselves as prosecutor, judge, jury and sheriff) we sow the seeds of another world war. The greatness of Lincoln was not more clearly shown than in his treatment of the Confederate soldiers and the Confederacy.

A "DURABLE PEACE" must be made on the higher spiritual level of love, whose only concern is to love the other fellow so completely that he is himself won to this sacrificial way of life. We forget our rights. We forget his sins and crimes against us in the sense of determining to punish him ourselves for them. To punish him might satisfy us and our sense of justice, but it leaves him with a smouldering sense of injustice (because we do not punish ourselves or permit him or any one else to punish us for our part) and this sense of injustice will certainly break out in another and even more horrible world war. You see, he will do what we did. Take things into his own hands and get justice for himself as we did for ourselves.

On the other hand, if, by loving him as our Lord loves us and says we are to love him, just as we apply the sense of guilt, for our sins to ourselves, he will do likewise to himself and will realize the enormity of his sins and crimes as he would never be able to do otherwise. Confessing the other fellow's sins has never helped him or us either. Love never stops to ask what is going to happen to us. It is only concerned about what is going to happen to the other fellow; and most of all, what is going to happen to God.

The Golden Rule, moral level, will never give us a durable peace, nor settle the race problem. Peace on our Lord's level of self-sacrifice as the law of spiritual life, will do both. Empires must go. Domination on the basis of race, in ourselves as in the Nazis, must go. No matter what happens to the white race, self-preservation must go. The fact is it is going to go any level of life, whether the purely human or the moral level.

Russia is united and half of Russia is Asiatic. China is united and has the weapons we have supplied to her and taught her to use. It would be no trick at all for Russia and China to supply India and other subject peoples with weapons and teach them how to use them. The white race is overwhelmingly outnumbered, and its doom clearly seen if it persists in trying to rule other races, however benevolently as it seems to us; and to exploit their resources, however kindly we mean to do it. But we still have the situation in our hands. It is within our power to have the spirit of our Lord, incarnated in His disciples, dominate the peace at that table.

THE CHANCES THAT that will happen will be greatly increased if, in our own country, we ourselves—we white people—begin and begin now to live on that basis of self-sacrificing love, ignoring all differences of race or color. And that will have a much better chance if we in Arizona treat this person not as black or that person as Japanese, but treat every person as our Lord does and expects us to do, as our brother beloved whose needs we stand ready to supply as we hope he stands ready to supply ours—brothers all; sinners all; sons of God all.

Living on this level, we see that nothing else matters and we shall have a durable peace indeed because founded, not upon the human level of force or the moral level of justice, but upon the eternal spiritual level of love, with a life of freedom for every man, no matter what his temporary station or color or race.

Let us carry away with us this message from that great saint and Christian statesman, Bishop Brent: "The hope of Christianity lies in its boldness. The Church is strong when she is daring, and only then; her strength rises and falls with her courage . . . victory is faith . . . The breadth of the Christian's vision is exceeded only by its height, and his influence is coterminous with nothing less than the human fabric of which he is a part . . . The Christian ideally loves as high as God and as widely as the boundaries of humanity."

CAN WE, AS A NATION, GIVE THANKS IN THE MIDST OF THIS WORLD-WIDE WAR?

tian there is one reason for thanksgiving far above all other reasons. As Christians, we give thanks, because there is, reigning over this World, the Eternal Lord God in Whose overruling providence we trust, no matter what may befall us in this life, and He, the Father of all men, has revealed Himself fully to us and to all who will receive Him in the person of His Eternal Son. This supreme reason for our thanksgiving is brought before us and expressed for us in that noble prayer in our Prayer Book which is called the General Thanksgiving. In that majestic and beautiful prayer we thank God "for our creation, preservation, and all the blessings of this life", we thank Him "above all" for His "inestimable love in the redemption of the world by our Lord Jesus Christ", we thank Him "for the means of grace, and for the hope of glory", and we ask Him to give us such a due sense of all His mercies that we may show forth His praise "not only with our lips, but in our lives."

For every Christian, the words of that prayer express the reason for thanksgiving that is far above all other reasons. We give thanks because as St. Paul, the great Apostle, tells us "neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord".

EDITORIAL

sionary enthusiasm and zeal is needed, and needed badly. The post-war world is not a far off dim event. It may be nearer than any of us know. If the Church is to move forward into that new world of after the war, it must move in with enthusiasm and zeal. We hope that those who are planning the next steps in "forward in service" will bear this in mind. Our Lord Jesus Christ calls to each of us to rally around His banner. If it means repeating let's put the emphasis again on evangelism. We cannot move forward unless the ranks be filled.

JULY'S CARE

Molly May opened her eyes wide. Before her stood a little Indian girl, just about as tall as she herself was and just about as plump. But Molly May had not heard a sound in the woods, she had been busy looking at July doll. "Grandmother sent you all the way from Boston. You'll take care of Molly May," she had crooned though her heart was thumping a little. She had slipped out of the stockade gate behind the women going to the river for water, then she had trotted off along the path leading into the woods. Molly May had always had someone with her when she went through the trees, but today everyone was running around inside the stockade and talking about Indians. "But aren't the Indians our friends?" Molly May had asked and dady had groaned. "If only they were!"

Molly May was glad of the quiet woods. "July will take care of me," she kept repeating and when she got tired she sat down on a big root. She was straightening the ribbon in July's yellow hair when she looked up straight into the little Indian's eyes. Black they were, shiny black and July's were sky blue. The little Indian reached out a finger and touched the ribbon. Molly May did not know what she said, but she did know what the little Indian's begging arms meant. She wanted to hold July doll. She wanted July.

"No, no," Molly May hugged July tighter. She shook her head, shook it again. The little Indian girl turned away. She ran. She stumbled. She fell. Molly May started running, too, but she ran for the Indian girl. Her face buried in the pine needles the little girl would not get up. Molly May tugged, she laid down July on the pine needles beside the little Indian girl and tugged harder. The little Indian girl twisted her head, she saw the doll beside her. Eyes ablaze with joy she looked up at Molly May. She seized July doll and sprang away.

Suddenly Indian men seemed to spring up all between the trees ahead of Molly May. She heard steps behind her, too, she felt daddy's hand on her head. "Still, keep still," she heard him whisper. Molly May stood all frozen inside. But the little Indian girl had run up to the Indian men and was holding up the doll to the fiercest looking one of them all, the one with the biggest war bonnet upon his head and down around his shoulders. Molly May could not understand a word of the gay voice, but she did understand when the little Indian girl turned with a face bright with joy and held up July doll and hugged her. The Indian with whom the little girl talked, strode forward with uplifted hand, with open palm. "Peace, friends," Molly May felt him quiver with a long breath and she heard the thump of guns slipped from the arms of the men behind daddy.

"But July doll," she cried against daddys shoulder when he had picked her up after talking with the Indians and turned back for the stockade. "July was to take care of me, now she's gone."

"Care?" daddy's laugh was short. "She saved you, she saved the fort. She took care of you all right."

"But she's gone. I didn't—didn't want to give her away."

"But the little Indian girl thought you did. And sometimes one has to give things up to make friends. Sometimes, too, making friends is the most worthwhile thing in the world."—The Methodist Protestant Recorder.

THE ORPHAN

Her big wide eyes from where she sat,
Said, "I would like to be your cat.
I need some people and a house
Where I can roam and catch a mouse."
Her pleading eyes seemed to entreat
For a small spot beside my feet.
So, Tabby walked into my heart
To take a tiny, fluffy part
Amidst the routine of affairs
That go along with daily cares.
. . . I wonder why I miss her so?
She's just another cat, I know.
But her wide eyes from where she sat
Said, "I would like to be YOUR cat."

BACKYARD CHRISTMAS TREE

I'd like to give a party
For the animals this year,
With nuts for all the squirrels
And apples for the deer;
Blueberries for the partridge,
And lots of other things
For friendly woodland creatures
With fur and feathered wings.
I know I can't feed all of them;
But actions outdo words—
I'll decorate with suet strings
My Christmas tree for birds.

HEAR ME IN THIS QUIET HOUR

Lord, help me to find in every day
A moment when my soul can pray—
Whether it be at early morning
Or in the silvery light of moon—
To keep my mind from evil thought,
To keep my heart from evil wrought,
To give me courage, strength anew,
To teach me Thine own works to do;
To cleanse the inner life of me,
To make me what I ought to be,
That I may grow in faith and power,
Lord, hear me in this quiet hour.

Presiding Bishop's Relief Fund

People of Church Have Contributed $105,309 for World Relief to Date in 1943

New York, N. Y.—The Presiding Bishop announces that thus far in 1943 people of the Church have contributed $105,309 to the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief. Of this, $25,000 is a special contribution from the United Thank Offering of the women of the Church.

"We all know the great need for world relief," Bishop Tucker said. 'Happily the United Nations have organized a concerted attack on the physical aspects of the problem. This means that food, shelter, clothing and medical care will be provided by Government funds. But the religious, spiritual and cultural needs of the war-town peoples are the responsibility and opportunity of the Churches and voluntary agencies.

"We are all delighted with the response Churchmen have made to the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief. We are playing our part with other Churches in supporting the work of Christian agencies to suffering humanity. The need for world relief is great and continuous; we must match it with our gifts."

The gift of the Woman's Auxiliary was designated $10,000 for War Prisoners' Aid, and $15,000 for relief in Free China. The latter designation was divided between the Church Committee on China Relief and our own missionaries in China, both native and foreign.

Dr. Lewis B. Franklin, National Council treasurer, received a cable from Arthur Allen, late in November, acknowledging a gift of $3,000 from the Presiding Bishop's Fund, which, he said, "enables clothing bonus to all Chinese workers".

Another recent grant from the Fund was $1,000 to the Foreign Missions Conference for famine relief in India.

"FIRST LADY" OF THE FIJIS AN AMERICAN

Suva, Fiji.—"First Lady" of the Fiji Islands is an American. She is Mrs. Leonard Stanley Kempthorne, daughter of Mrs. J. H. Beall of Newman, Calif., and wife of His Lordship, the Anglican Bishop for Polynesia, whose diocese of 7,000,000 square miles is the largest in the world.

On the social scale at the colonial outpost of the British Empire, the Bishop ranks second only to the Governor. Since his wife has not yet joined the recently-appointed Governor, Sir Phillip Mitchell, at his new post, Mrs. Kempthorne presides pro tem at official functions.

But the official duties of the tall, slender, and attractively-grayed former Ruth Evelyn Beall take second place to her nine-hours-a-day, six-days-a-week stint at the American Red Cross Club here. She types letters, purchases souvenirs, and arranges home hospitality for doughboys stationed at this tropical jungle island.

"American soldiers," she says, "have made an excellent impression with the people of these islands—Europeans, natives and Indians alike. If a patient at an Army hospital is having a birthday, the Red Cross simply phones one of the many women volunteers hereabouts, and presto, a freshly-baked cake is produced for the occasion."

DIOCESAN YOUTH CONFERENCE

Albany, N. Y.—The annual Diocesan Youth Conference was held Nov. 26-28 at the Church of the Holy Innocents. Seventy-five young people, who represented all sections of the diocese, including places on the Canadian border, attended. The conference was under the direction of the Rev. Schuyler D. Jenkins, diocesan director, and the Rev. James W. Pennock, rector of Holy Innocents.

The opening meeting was addressed by the Rev. Erville B. Maynard, rector of St. Peter's Church, Albany. Bishop Oldham spoke to the young people on The Rule of Life on Saturday evening, and the conference closed with a Corporate Communion in the Cathedral Sunday morning.

There were group discussions led by the Rev. Ernest V. Stires, the Rev. Meredith B. Wood, the Rev. George E. DeMille and the Rev. Spear Knebel, representatives of each group reporting the findings later to the entire conference. This method proved stimulating and instructive. Bishop Oldham said he was particularly impressed by the earnestness, enthusiasm and intelligence of these young people and their potential contribution to the Church of the future.

COURSES BEING STUDIED IN EVERY DIOCESE

New York, N. Y.—Church people in large numbers are studying seriously the vital contemporary problems suggested by Forward in Service, according to the Rev. Dr. C. Avery Mason. Last year, study packets were prepared for the current study themes, and 7,500 of them were distributed. The study packets for this year's themes have in three months reached a distribution of over 3,000. The courses are being studied in every diocese and missionary district in the country, and by every variety of parish group: Woman's Auxiliary; Laymen's organizations; Youth organizations.

The topics being studied are: Pillars of Peace; Ventures in Christian Living; The American Scene Today; Christianizing your Vocation, The Christian Doctrine of Man.

Books Are Urgently Needed

Opportunity for Church People—Prayer Book Need Unfilled

New York, N. Y.—Books are needed urgently for merchant seamen and men of the Coast Guard. Presiding Bishop Tucker points to this need as an opportunity for Church people to do a useful work in the war, and is urging fullest cooperation. His own library has already contributed about a hundred books to the American Merchant Marine Library Association, which is located at 45 Broadway, New York City, and of which Mrs. Henry Howard of Newport, R. I., is president.

Mrs. Howard in a recent letter to the Presiding Bishop explains that "seagoing Libraries, each a chest of 40 carefully chosen books, are placed on as many American merchant ships as possible, but we long to serve them all."

The Association maintains dispatch offices in New York, Baltimore, Boston, New Orleans, Norfolk, Philadelphia, San Francisco, Sault Ste Marie, and Seattle, and in addition, there are distributing points in Charleston, Chicago, Portland and Providence. All of these local points, readily located through telephone directories or diocesan offices, will receive donations of books and magazines.

During the first ten months of this year over 8,000 seamen called at the Association's headquarters office in New York with a large number of requests for technical books.

Mrs. Howard expressed regret at being unable to place a Prayer Book in each of the libraries sent out. "It was a matter of deep regret," she said "that we did not have one to give to an officer who asked for it, stating that he was just starting on a ship in a convoy and that he intended to hold services with a crew of 150 men."

Bishop Tucker points out that the Victory Book Campaign has come to an end, as the Government now supplies ample funds for library service to both Army and Navy. Unfortunately these funds are not extended either to the merchant seamen or to the Coast Guard, although the Coast Guard is a part of the Navy in time of war.

The American Merchant Marine Library Association is chartered by the Board of Regents of the State of New York.

Noble Powell Installed

Ninth Bishop of Maryland Takes His Seat in Cathedral

Baltimore, Md.—The Cathedral of the Incarnation was thronged for the service of installation of the Rt. Rev. Noble Cilley Powell, D. D., as ninth bishop of Maryland. This is the first time a service of installation has taken place in the Diocese of Maryland.

The service began with a procession of choirs of St. Paul's Church and the Cathedral, followed by the clergy singing "The Church's One Foundation". Following the choirs came the Church Flag, the United States Flag and the Flag of Maryland. The Rev. John W. Tuton acted as Chaplain to Bishop Powell.

When the procession reached the sanctuary, the Rev. Roger A. Walke, secretary of the Standing Committee, led in recitation of Psalms 122 and 46. Letters of Consecration were read by Mr. Carlyle Barton, Chancellor of the Diocese. Canon Harold N. Arrowsmith led in responsive reading and prayers, after which Bishop Helfenstein and the Rev. Dr. Arthur Chilton Powell escorted Bishop Powell to the Bishop's Chair.

Bishop Powell, in his address stated it was not the time to discuss what he or the diocese shall do; "the only thing that really matters is our response to God" and "our purpose to have Him use us when and where He wills." "We need to recover a conviction of faith in ourselves, because God has created us," in society, in our government. Faith brings achievement but achievement brings problems." Defining the problem, he said men will have to determine what kind of a world they want for themselves and their children, whether it shall be only a place suitable for beasts or one worthy of children of God.

The service was derived from one that goes back into antiquity, but even though the Cathedral was begun during the time of the late Rt. Rev. John Gardner Murray and continued through the administration of Bishop Helfenstein, the Synod Hall was not completed in time for the installation of former Bishops of Maryland.

COMMANDER LEMOINE APPOINTED NAVY RELIEF REPRESENTATIVE

Norfolk, Va.—The Navy Department announces the appointment of Chaplain Lieutenant Commander Roy E. LeMoine as Navy Relief Society representative for the Norfolk area and as executive secretary of the Society's Hampton Roads Auxiliary.

Chaplain LeMoine has been chaplain of the Charleston Navy Yard and Senior Navy Chaplain of the Sixth Naval District since last December. He is a native of Washington, D. C., and has been in the Naval Service since May, 1940. He has formerly been rector of the Church of the Holy Communion, Congress Heights, Washington, D. C.

Asked for a statement concerning his new appointment, Chaplain LeMoine explained that "the Navy Relief Society is the Navy's own Family Welfare Service. It was founded to care for the widows and orphans of those who died in active service. Since it has expanded its realm of service to take care of almost all situations of an emergency nature that may strike the family of a Navy man. Our meat is death and illness, but we do our best to assure the man at sea that regardless of what happens, his family will not be left without a friend who is able to help either alone or with the help of other welfare agencies."

Chaplain LeMoine explained further that the Society operates through a number of Auxiliaries at all of the large Naval Stations. The Commanding Officer of these stations is president of the local group and there is normally a Chaplain designated as an executive secretary, sometimes in addition to his other duties, or as full time.

"The Hampton Roads Auxiliary," Chaplain LeMoine says, "is one of the largest in the entire Navy. It serves the Norfolk area and is in great part responsible for all dependents living within the confines of the Fifth Naval District. Past experience in the Auxiliary indicates that we loan approximately $100,000 a year and give away at least $10,000 more.

"To men who are stricken with emergencies, the Navy Relief is a Godsend, because it does for them what no other organization can. It is not unusual, for instance, for us to expend $500 or more for a hospitalization, and the number of babies we have paid for this year at Norfolk will certainly run not less than 500.

"All sorts of things become the Navy Relief Chaplain's pigeon. Cases which start out as financial problems frequently turn into serious moral problems when the root of the trouble is located. Too often the cross section world presented is one whose sordidness is very prominent, but there are other times when we are amazed at the moral courage of families undergoing tribulation. The office is continually thronged.

"As to my intentions, I can only say that I'll do the best I can with an interesting job. I'll try to be kind and understanding, but firm with those who are in trouble through their own faults. I believe we'll enjoy it, and I hope that there will be many who will be the better for my having been here."

Concerned Over Delinquency

Detroit Clericus Spends Day Observing Methods of Police Department.

Detroit, Mich.—Growing concern over the matter of juvenile delinquency prompted the members of the Detroit Clericus to hold their November meeting at the Juvenile Court of the City of Detroit, where they spent practically a day in an examination of the methods used by the Detroit Police Department in their attempts to combat this evil.

Meeting in the Court Library about 25 members of the Clericus were taken in hand by the Rev. Edgar A. Lucas, of the Episcopal City Mission Staff, who for several years has acted as director of the Big Brother Movement in Detroit. An important feature of his work is his association with the Juvenile Court.

The first stop on the tour was the Court itself, where they listened to three interesting cases, and from the Court went to the Juvenile Detention Home nearby, seeing the school rooms, sick bay, kitchen and dining rooms, dormitories, gymnasium, etc., and finally to the receiving room where the boys are brought by the police. They found that certain detectives are assigned to the various sections of Detroit, and learned that when it is necessary for police to bring boys into the Juvenile Detention Home, before they are "written up", these detectives interview the boys and try to find out why they are in trouble; in the meantime the police notify the parents and summon them to the Home, where the decision is made as to whether the boy may return home or must be detained for further treatment of his case.

Following their examination of the Juvenile Detention Home and Court and the methods used by the police and detectives in dealing with youthful offenders, the members of the Clericus went to St. Matthew's Church for a late luncheon and discussion of the day's events.

ST. JAMES CHURCH "OWES NO MAN ANYTHING"

New York, N. Y.—One of the very first reports on an Every Member Canvass was sent to the Presiding Bishop by the Rev. Dr. Alvin Russell, Principal of St. Paul's Polytechnic Institute, Lawrenceville, and rector of St. James Church, Warfield.

Dr. Russell says that the tiny parish (only 94 communicants) turned in a completed canvass totalling $580.88 in pledges, against the $500 he had asked them to set as a goal. He says further, that all bills and obligations for 1943 have been met—"St. James owes no man anything so far as I know and has funds in hand to take care of its 1944 budget—even though not another penny is raised during 1944, but, of course, we shall be adding to the above sum from Sunday to Sunday."

St. James is a rural parish and the people are all farmers. Says Dr. Russell, "This is nothing new at St. James, as we have been doing the same sort of thing for the past 15 or more years. We have also purchased one $100 Bond as an endowment nest egg, and I dare say we will add another after Christmas."

Last Mortgages Paid Off

Leaves Cathedral Property Free and Unincumbered

Phoenix, Ariz.—Trinity Cathedral the Very Rev. Edwin S. Lane, Dean, has paid off its mortgage of $4,000 and oversubscribed the amount by about $500. This leaves free and unincumbered a property valued at about $313,000.

The first structure of the present splendid Cathedral plant was built in 1915, when Rt. Rev. J. W. Atwood was bishop and William Scarlett, the present Bishop of Missouri, was dean. This building cost about $30,000.

In 1918 the Bishop's House adjoining the Church was built at a cost of about $20,000.

In 1920 the present Cathedral Church was completed at an expenditure of about $180,000. Bishop Atwood and Dean Scarlett built wisely and well and laid splendid foundations in buildings costing about $230,000. All of this indebtedness was paid in full by 1926.

In 1928 during the incumbency of the Rt. Rev. Walter Mitchell as bishop, and Edwin S. Lane as dean, a Deanery was erected adjoining the Bishop's House at a cost of about $20,000, the joint gift of Bishop Atwood and of a generous member of the parish.

In 1930 the Cathedral structure itself was completed by the erection of an addition to the Parish House costing $63,000. It is the last item of this indebtedness which has now been wiped out.

The ceremony of the burning of the mortgage has been planned as a feature of the Annual meeting to be held on January 11, 1944.

CHURCH IN CUBA OUTGROWN

Miss Eleanor Lane Clancy, head of the Ashhurst School in Guantanamo, Cuba, is again eating her meals from a classroom desk. This happens when the building becomes so crowded that classes penetrate her living quarters. The school's enrolment of 350 pupils is a record to date. The curriculum was extended this year to include high school classes, a development long needed. Space has been increased more than once in the past, by adding a house or two, but the relief is short-lived.

The Ven. Romualdo Gonzalez, school chaplain and rector of the adjoining church, writes that the Sunday congregation has now so far outgrown the church that a chapel is being built, or rather, put together out of existing material, to care for the overflow. Sunday mornings now see two Spanish services held simultaneusly. Archdeacon Gonzalez will be remembered by many as Cuba's clerical representative at General Convention in Cleveland.

CHURCH ARMY IS MAKING "AFTER THE WAR" PLANS

New York, N. Y.—"What Shall I Do After the War?" is a problem facing thousands of young men in, it is to be hoped, the not far distant future. Captain Earl Estabrook, of the Church Army, is planning to present to properly equipped soldiers, sailors, air men, and women of the services, the claims of Church Army work in the New World to come after the war.

Church Army has prepared a small leaflet which is being placed in the hands of workers with young people, both in and out of the military services. "There is a tremendous need," the leaflet says, "for lay missionaries who will pioneer in churchless areas and among all sorts and conditions of men."

It is emphasized that such lay workers shall know they are definitely called of God to such service; that they shall love people, be able to stand criticism, and remain undiscouraged under any conditions. Also that they must possess qualities of leadership.

Church Army headquarters are located at 268 Second Street, Jersey City, N. J., the national training center, and Captain Estabrook invites correspondence with youth workers, as well as with young people themselves, looking to lay-evangelism as a vocation after the war.

DIOCESE OF MICHIGAN

Archdeacon Hagger Presents Resignation

Detroit, Mich.—The Ven. Leonard P. Hagger, Archdeacon of the Diocese of Michigan for the past fifteen years, has presented his resignation to the Rt. Rev. Frank W. Creighton, D. D., bishop of the diocese, to take effect as of January 1, 1944. Archdeacon Hagger has accepted a call as rector of St. Paul's Church, Chillicothe, Ohio, and will take over his new duties at the first of the new year.

Archdeacon Hagger was born in London, England. Moving to Canada in his youth, he was educated in Wycliff College, Toronto, Toronto and Western University, and Huron College, London, Ontario, which bestowed the degree of L. Th. upon him in 1918. The Rt. Rev. David Williams, bishop of Huron, ordained him to the priesthood in 1919.

Archdeacon Hagger came to the Diocese of Michigan as priest in charge of St. Jude's Church, Fenton, in 1923, and served there until his appointment as Archdeacon of Michigan in 1928.

As Archdeacon he has had supervision, under Bishop Creighton, of 55 mission stations in the 35 counties making up the eastern half of the state of Michigan, served by approximately 35 missionary clergy and several women field workers. He has developed to a high degree of efficiency the use of diocesan Lay Readers as substitutes for resident clergy, where this plan seems expedient. One of the unique features of his work has been the development of an annual school for Lay Readers, which has attracted attention all over the Church. For several years he was chairman of a committee which published a Manual for Daily Vacation Church Schools, used in many other dioceses. Archdeacon Hagger also supervises the Church Mission by Mail, which brings the ministrations of the Church, so far as possible, through literature and letters, to people who live too far away from Church to attend services. About two hundred children are also receiving Church School lessons and religious instruction regularly through the Church School by Mail.

Annual "Bishop's Day"

Detroit, Mich.—The annual "Bishop's Day" meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary in the Diocese of Michigan, held on Monday, November 29, in St. Paul's Cathedral, was well attended. The Rt. Rev. Frank W. Creighton, D. D., bishop of the diocese, was the guest of honor and speaker at the program meeting, following the luncheon.

The general topic, "What Is My Parish Doing", was discussed at a group meeting.

Mrs. M. S. Marr, of Grosse Pointe, diocesan president of the Woman's Auxiliary, was in charge of the meeting.

REACH CANVASS GOAL IN ONE DAY

New York, N. Y.—First reports from West Virginia tell that Loyalty Sunday, climax of the Every Member Canvass, is a big day in St. John's Church, Charleston, of which the Rev. Harry S. Longley, Jr., is rector. An effort was made to complete the canvass on a single Sunday. The result was that, Sunday evening, $27,184.55 was reported available toward the budget of $28,335 for 1944. There is a bit of cleanup to be done, but Mr. R. R. Payne, canvass chairman says "There can be no question but that we shall reach our goal."

St. Stephen's, Beckley, W. Va., the Rev. John G. Shirley, notifies the National Council that the canvass has been completed and the budget—largest in the history of the parish—reached. Mr. C. L. Allen was canvass chairman, and every parishioner was called on by a team of men, not by an individual. One Greek parishioner, a woman, visited all the Greek people of the parish.

UNION OBSERVANCE OF THANKSGIVING GROWS

Albany, N. Y.—For the sixth year Thanksgiving Day has been observed by a great united interdenominational service in the Cathedral of All Saints. The custom was inaugurated as a result of the Oxford and Edinburgh Conferences in 1937, and there was the usual overflow congregation this year and a gratifying spirit of unity that increases with the years. The preacher was the Ven. A. P. Gower-Rees, archdeacon of Montreal, whose presence and whose address imparted to the sense of loyal cooperation that of international friendship.

BROTHERHOOD NIGHT PLANNED BY EPISCOPAL CLUB

Boston, Mass.—Brotherhood Night, planned by the Episcopalian Club of Massachusetts as the program for the club's dinner on December 6 presented as speakers Rabbi Joshua Loth Liebman of Temple Israel, Boston, keen psychologist, brilliant speaker, and an influential figure in religious and civic life, and the Rev. Kenneth dePoullain Hughes, forward-looking rector of the Colored congregation of St. Bartholomew's Church, Cambridge. In addition to the Governor of Massachusetts and the Mayor of Boston, special guests at the head table were well-known representatives of the Congregational, Baptist, Unitarian, Methodist, Universalist, and Presbyterian Churches. Frances A. Parker, Jr., member of St. Michael's Church, Marblehead, and president of the Episcopalian Club, introduced the speakers.

land are very similar in content and purposefulness. The exchange of messages between the heads of our Churches has raised to greater heights the friendly relation between our two Churches.

The Archbishop of York's Visit

"On the invitation of the Russian Orthodox Church, the Archbishop of York, an important representative of the Church of England, visited Moscow accompanied by two ministers from London. The Archbishop of York talked with the Patriarch Sergii and was twice present at services conducted by the Patriarch in Bogoyavlensky Cathedral, Moscow.

"He spoke of the sympathy and friendship between the Russian and English peoples and between the Churches of England and Russia; he spoke of the deep feelings which the English people have for the Russian people in the trials caused by the bloody war, and of the prayers of the English Church for victory over the common foe.

"The Patriarch Sergii assured the Archbishop of York of the brotherly regard of the Russian Church for the Church of England. The Russian churchgoers who filled the Bogoyavlensky Cathedral expressed their cordiality and respect for the envoy of the Church of England.

Deepened Friendship

"I, who thirty years ago, during my student days at St. Petersburg, welcomed the English bishops, again had good fortune: I was the first to greet the Archbishop at the airport on his arrival in our capital.

"The Archbishop of York's visit to Moscow will no doubt do much towards deepening and strengthening the friendship between the two Churches.

"The proposed return visit to England by a delegation of the Russian Orthodox Church will serve to bring the two Churches still closer together.

"Our Orthodox Church constantly prays the Lord for just, severe judgment over Hitler and his associates. This judgment will be the triumph of justice over the abomination of Hitlerism. Only when the light triumphs over darkness, and the aggressors' military forces suffer defeat, will human progress be possible. This triumph will also be the triumph of Christian principles over the anti-Christian forces of Fascism. Let the blessed hour of victory come soon, and through the cross of great trials and heroic deeds let there come a resurrection of the principles over the principles by Fascism."

THOUGHTS FOR THE THOUGHTFUL

"Jesus is a leader for whom men call in their darkest hours."

"Only God could have thought of Christmas."

"Prayer, it has frequently been said, changes things. It is more correct to say that true prayer changes the petitioner, bringing him or her into clearer conformity with the will of God."

Amid the tumults of these days,
The raging of earth's bitter strife,
Lord, may Thy presence bring us peace
Who art the very Source of life.
That so, beneath Thy sceptre's sway,
Shall death and hell soon flee away!
—John Palmer.

If it were possible for the peoples of today who worship Christ to voice their individual opinions about Him and their sentiments concerning Him there would be an avalanche of literature, music and art outrivaling anything the masters of old have given us.
—Ex.

The readiness to live for others must be a choice given gladly and willingly. Service into which we can throw our whole strength because we are convinced it will help others—this is the service asked.
—Rev. H. E. Wagner.

Today evil in the heart of man is not suddenly worse than it was. It is only more manifest.

"Above the jangled noises we hear already
The Bells of Paradise."

"My Lord and my God!" cried Thomas when he had seen Him fresh from the grave. Let us acclaim Him so while celebrating His birth.
—Sel.

Which calls for the stronger character, the rejoicing with those who rejoice, or the weeping with those who weep? Chrysostom, the great bishop of the early church, said: "Unenvious rejoicing with others is the more difficult, for nature itself inclines us to weep with others."

"Give us, O God, the strength to build
The city that hath stood
Too long a dream, whose laws are love,
Whose ways are brotherhood;
And where the sun that shineth is God's grace for human good."

"Praise to the Lord who over all things
so wondrously reigneth,
Who on the wings of the eagle uplifted, sustaineth;
Hast thou not seen
How thy desires all have been Granted in what He ordaineth?"

One of our Lord's most striking parables pictured pride and humility making their approach to God. Pride, wholly satisfied, unconscious of any need, went away empty. Humility, overcome by a deep sense of need and unworthiness, partook of God's grace and benediction.

LETTERS

Thanks for Generous Response

Mr. Editor:

Through you the Board of Managers of the Protestant Episcopal Church Home wish to send sincere thanks to the members of the Woman's Auxiliary throughout the Diocese of Virginia for their generous response to our appeal for sympathetic help for the Home.

I believe it would interest your readers to know of two contributions received recently. A church in the Valley of Virginia sent flour, apples, many cans of fruit and vegetables, cereals, and money. You can imagine how these added vitamines to the diet of the ladies, increased their appetites, and helped the housekeeper's budget.

A touching gift was from a friend who wished to provide Thanksgiving Day dinner and Christmas dinner for the ladies of our Home. One of the ladies remarked after dinner, "There was nothing missing to make it a perfect Thanksgiving Day dinner". The gift was a lovely tribute to the memory of the young woman's mother, who was once a member of the Board of Managers of the Protestant Episcopal Church Home.

We would like the Branches of the Woman's Auxiliary to know that at our monthly meetings, when the Treasurer's report is read, it usually contains the mention of Auxiliary contributions. We would like these women to know also that their spiritual support and financial help strengthens us in our faith and in our effort to provide a Home for these gentlewomen of our Church. As long as we have the interest and help of the Woman's Auxiliary, and of our Church men and women, we will not fail. We need your help and your prayers, and we are very, very grateful.

Faithfully yours,
Mrs. George W. Warren,
Mrs. Daniel D. Talley,
Mrs. Overton D. Dennis,
Mrs. Lewis C. Williams,
Chairman of Special Committee.

Fasting Communion—Again

Mr. Editor:

Since you and I have been tarred with the same pitch by one of our Church papers, you may not be unwilling to give space to a few comments on the recent controversy on "fasting communion"—and the imputation of "indecency" and lack of preparation for the holy eucharist.

The writer has had a number of letters, following up The Living Church editorial of two weeks back, adding personal insults in the use of such terms as "heretic"; "Ignorant priest"; "Another Methodist minister ordained by an Episcopal bishop"; "misfit", etc.

These expressions indicate just where sticklers for hair-splitting "legalisms" are forced to go when argument and reason fail. They can but sputter and fling personal epithets. But that is never convincing.

Where does the Anglo-Catholic get his views anyway? And where does he get "authority" to enforce "confession", "fasting communion", etc., in the Episcopal Church? Fasting and confession, when kept on the plane of voluntary impulse are no doubt spiritually valuable—but when they are forced by ecclesiastical law, in a Church which does not legislate them, they may become actually pernicious. Too, those of us who are loyal to the tenets and to the polity and the constituted authority of this Church, who do not follow the lead of certain priests who have been taught in Anglo-Catholic schools, are dubbed disloyal and unfaithful to the "Catholic" principles. It is time someone were standing up for his Protestant rights in a Protestant Church—and citing authority.

Article twenty-eight of the Thirty-nine Articles (cited, mind you, by the editor of the paper attacking our position!) distinctly denies "change of substance" in the elements; definitely asserts that the "only mean" whereby the body and blood of Jesus are eaten is "by faith"—in a "heavenly and

HAVEN . . .

By J. W. KENNEDY

A LITTLE BOY, age three and one-half, had an original idea.. He thought he would go to the store and get something to soften mother's and daddy's hands so they wouldn't hurt so much when they spanked him. It was very difficult to make him see that it was much better to be a good boy so that there would be no need for the spanking. Cute and clever, yes, but we, too, reason the same way: how to escape the hurt of doing something we shouldn't have done instead of how to do the things we should and escape the hurt.

I'm sure General Patton, for example, would like some kind of softener for the punishment he has been getting directly from his own men and indirectly through the press. His loss of temper, which seems to be quite habitual from the stories told about him, has marred his very popular career. His biggest job lies not so much in making amends, which he has done so far as he can, but to make rapid movement toward amendment of life along lines of temper control. One word of caution about our feelings in the matter. No matter how indignant we are over the injustice of his outbreak we must remember to judge him and his conduct on the same basis we would have had him judge the soldier, that is, look squarely at the total picture, all the facts, and see the one incident in the light of overall conditions. No matter how regrettable any failure is we cannot eternally damn a man because of it. Our attitude in this matter will be singularly revealing of our inner spiritual nature.

ANOTHER ANGLE to our first thought of escaping hurt can be illustrated by a recent trip to the dentist. Another trip to his office a short time before, for a bit of an emergency job, stuck this comment into memory's cupboard: "There is a small place we'll have to fix the next time you come." This latest visit was for routine checkup. I was hopeful he might overlook the promised fixing in a most sensitive spot. All went well and I had just about escaped from the chair when the fatal words came: "We'll fix that little place now". Yes, it hurt, but not half so much as the long and constant hurt of anticipation. I was most grateful afterward that the condition had been dealt with without further delay.

When it comes to living, this putting-off business is not conducive to the reality we must face and the good desires which bring the kind of life we should impart. J. P. Marquand expresses it in "So Little Time" in the thought of one of his characters: "Once Jeffrey had hoped that his life would become simpler as time moved on. When the children were able to dress and undress themselves and when there were no more nurses around, he had believed that there would be less disorder at home, but it did not work that way." (p. 356.)

Take desires and check them for their true ends and means.

Put mind to solving the causes of our misdeeds rather than how to escape the consequences.

Curb that pet sin and leave it not until conquered.

Fix that which hurts conscience and let not the pain of fixing deter.

Do it now.

Jesus gave the lead to such living in Matthew 6:25 following, in His discourse on freedom from anxiety, as He tells of God's care for all His creation: birds, flowers, and men. But you must make His kingdom, and uprightness before him your greatest care, and you will have all these other things besides.

The call comes today,
To live as we pray. . .
God's best for all to find and then give away. Amen.

BOOK REVIEWS

SNOWDEN-DOUGLASS SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSONS, 1944. Errol L. Douglass. The Macmillan Company, New York City. 385 pages. $1.50.

These are notes on the International Sunday School Lesson Outlines for 1944. They seem to be much above the average. This series is not used by many of our Sunday Schools, but those who do may find this guide very helpful.

THE PROBLEM OF PAIN. C. S. Lewis. The Macmillan Company, New York City. 1943. 148 pages. $1.50.

This is the third small volume to be published by Mr. Lewis during this present year. Like the other two, "THE SCREWTAPE LETTERS" and "THE CASE FOR CHRISTIANITY", it is written for the layman. But the problem is so clearly analyzed and the Christian solution so well stated that every clergyman will want to read it. Mr. Lewis does not sidestep the problems raised by suffering, but he does try to help us to think through to the basic principles involved and there to see the Christian remedy. This is popular theology at its best written with freshness, realism, humor and always stressing the essential Christian truth involved.

Jehovah Lives---Repent---Stop Hating

By Raymond M. Hudson

THE PEOPLE must be made to realize that Jehovah still lives and that His is the directing hand in all the affairs of men today, as it was in the days of Abraham, Moses, Nehemiah, and all the prophets. "For I lift up my hand to heaven and say I live forever." (Deut. 32:40.)

It is the urgent duty of the church, in these critical days when there is so much indifference, sin, and hatred abroad, to bring the world to this realization.

Today the world is as full of Jehovah's mercy, goodness, and loving kindness as when Moses, Nehemiah and Paul were writing, but we are just as sinful as the people of their day, and God has to now chasten and punish us and use rulers and individuals for that purpose and to exalt His name throughout the whole world as He did in their days.

Jehovah, through Moses, told Pharaoh, "And in very deed for this cause have I raised thee up (or made thee stand) for to show in thee my power; and that my name may be declared throughout all the world." (Exodus 9:16.)

CAN ANYONE SAY either Hitler or Hirohito or Mussolini are any worse than Pharaoh, Nebuchadnezzer, and the Assyrian kings, or that Jehovah has not raised them up to declare His name "throughout all the world"—China, Japan, India, Africa, and the Isles of the sea?

Paul wrote in the 9th chapter of the Romans: v. 14—"What shall we say then? Is there unrighteousness with God? God forbid. For he saith to Moses, I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy and I will have compassion on whom I will have compassion. v. 16.—So then it is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that showeth mercy. v. 17.—For the scripture saith unto Pharaoh. Even for this same purpose have I raised thee up that I might show my power in thee and that my name might be declared throughout all the earth. v. 18.—Therefore hath he mercy on whom he will have mercy and whom he will he hardeneth." See Nehemiah 9: 17, 36, 37. Jehovah told Moses "And I, behold, I will harden the hearts of the Egyptians, and they shall follow them; and I will get me honour upon Pharoah, and upon all his hosts, upon his chariots, and upon his horsemen." (Exodus 14:17) "The Lord hath made all things for himself; yea even the wicked for the day of evil." (Prov. 16: 4.)

Daniel told Nebuchadnezzar (2:37) "Thou O King art a King of Kings: for the God of heaven hath given thee a Kingdom, power, and strength, and glory." Jehovah used both the Assyrians and the Babylonians to punish Israel; and both of these have disappeared.

Jeremiah tells us (50:17, 18) "Israel is a scattered sheep, the lions have driven him away; first the king of Assyria hath devoured him, and last this Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon hath broken his bones. Therefore thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, Behold, I will punish the king of Babylon and his land, as I have punished the king of Assyria." "Vengeance is mine, I will repay saith the Lord."

MAN MUST NOT seek vengeance. Man must not hate his brother, for when he does God will hide His face from him.

Jehovah told Moses "And I will surely hide my face in that day for all the evils which they shall have wrought, in that they are turned unto other gods." (Exodus 31:18) "And I will cause them to be tossed to and fro among all the kingdoms of the earth, because of Manasseh the son of Hezekiah, king of Judah, for that which he did in Jerusalem." (Jeremiah 15:4) "Who gave Jacob for a spoil, and Israel to the robbers? Did not Jehovah, he against whom we have sinned? For they would not walk in his ways, neither were they obedient unto his law." (Isaiah 42:24).

Jehovah seemingly has hid His face from many of the nations of the world during the last six years and we cannot say it is not, because the peoples have turned to other gods—gold, selfishness, corruption, lewdness, drink. Nor can we rightly hate those whom God has raised up to chasten His people and to declare and honour His name "throughout all the world."

He hardened the heart of Mussolini to oppress and rob the Christian nation of Ethiopia, but He has now gotten "me honour" upon Mussolini (Pharaoh) and all his "hosts" and His name is thereby "declared throughout all the world". "For I am the Lord thy God, the Holy One of Israel: I gave Egypt for thy ransom, Ethiopia and Seba for thee." (Isaiah 43: 3).

God does not hate Mussolini and neither should we. True Il Duce should be punished by the Allied Nations, but neither he or his people should be hated by Christian people. "Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer, and ye know that no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him." (1 John 3:15).

"If a man say, I love God and hateth his brother, he is a liar: for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen." (1 John 4:20).

DR. W. T. ELLIS recently wrote in the Sunday School lesson: "We are on the march to Canaan. But, like the Israelites, we must be made fit.

"Still like Israel, we have been drilled and disciplined at the Mountain of the Law. If we have not learned that there is a God over all, then we have missed the meaning of the events through which we have lived. The guidance of God and His protection of those who seek to obey His laws is a basic truth for these times. Not without significance is the present turning of all sorts of people, from philosophers in their studies to private soldiers on the battle field, to the fundamental truths of religion. We are gradually sensing the reality that we are engaged in business with God and for God. Our new world must be on the Kingdom of Heaven pattern. We, who bear with us in our warfare the Ark of Democracy, should be ever aware that its most precious content is the past providences of God toward our fathers." "a destruction is determined overflowing with righteousness." (Isaiah 10:22). "And the work of righteousness shall be peace; and the effect of righteousness, quietness and asurance for ever." "And my people shall dwell in a peaceable habitation, and in sure dwellings, and in quiet resting places" (Isaiah 32:17, 18).

"I am Jehovah, and there is none else, there is no God besides me: I girded thee, though thou hast not known me: That they may know from the rising of the sun, and from the west, that there is none beside me. I am the Lord and there is none else. I form the light, and create darkness: I make peace and create evil: I am Jehovah that doeth all these things." (Isaiah 45:5, 6, 7).

What the Chaplains Need

By CHAPLAIN C. LESLIE GLENN

FOR SOME TIME, a quiet controversy has been going on beneath the surface about the Church's part in the war and post-war. There are some who think the Church is not doing enough, which is the same thing as saying the Church is missing the biggest chance thus far in this century, since "war and post-war" cover fairly wide interests. The criticism has been quiet for reasons which will appear later, but the time has come to bring it into the open.

The average person thinks everything is going well. Pictures of chaplains with troops are constantly in the newspapers and as for the post-war, certainly everyone at home who reads editorials or columnists, who listens to the radio or goes to church, has a chance to think about how to vote in the years after the fighting. On the surface, all is well. We are not doing all the good there is, but all the good we can.

It is just here that the critics differ. They do not think the Church is doing all it can, and if it is, then someone else must step in, for too much remains to be done.

TO BEGIN WITH, post-war plans, now so common with civilians as to be almost wearisome, have scarcely reached the armed services. I know what this general has done with his troops, or what conversations so and so has with his shipmates; but by and large the statement stands. There are places in the service where men are cut off from newspapers and radio and the usual channels of adult education are far behind their civilian brothers in their thinking. We often say we are afraid of post-war reaction. But let us be clear what this means. It does not come because war brutalizes combatants and makes them cynical, it comes because soldiers return to their communities with ideas that every one had three or four years ago when they went away. An anachronistic lump returns to society, and like Rip Van Winkle, is not easily assimilated. Veterans shock us the way reading a candid diary of our thoughts a few years ago would shock us. And to say this is not to criticize those who are fighting for us. It is our fault if they are cut off from the intellectual currents of these rapidly changing times. "Write often and keep in touch with them" is good enough advice; it might be better advice to mail them Walter Lippmann's column three times a week, or Christianity and Crisis biweekly. The effort that the New York Times is making to send a miniature weekly digest to the troops, or the air mail edition of Time Magazine for soldiers are splendid private efforts which keep a limited number of our far-off citizens posted on problems of the republic.

The Church especially must be blamed here because it seems to have forgotten that soldiers are people. Every organization in the parish is busy in a dozen effective ways educating for peace, but the men whose names appear on the honor roll in the church porch are untouched by it. They are treated to a friendly letter from the pastor, a carton of cigarettes for Christmas, and the church leaflet with its poem and announcements of meetings. I know, because men show me what they get, and they are pathetically glad to have this. It is a friendly and in many cases a spiritual touch with home, but by no stretch of the imagination can it be said to keep the soldier in touch with the thinking of his fellow Christians on the future.

THE ANSWER TO all this is to tell it to the chaplain. He is the man in every military outfit who has a chance to talk at least once a week to the others; he is in the best position to distribute books, and to persuade the commanding officer to permit meetings for discussion and study. He is trusted not to have an axe to grind. And right here it may as well be faced, that one of the reasons why the army and navy officially have had difficulty in setting up any general scheme of post-war education is because the thing is political dynamite. It is only in a Christian atmosphere of unselfishness and brotherliness that men will trust each other enough to discuss controversial questions. Hence the chaplain is the chief means for the Church to introduce to the armed forces its contribution to post-war education to the armed forces. Long ago it might have been noticed that he happens to be the one obvious person, since he is the Church's representative. Here perhaps another parenthetical remark ought to be made. There are many church leaders of pacifist leanings who do not think of the chaplain as the Church's representative. They think of him (perhaps unconsciously) as having sold out to the military, as being too jingoistic to understand social problems. Chaplains of the regular army and navy, who have been through the slights of their clerical brethren in peace time, have good reason to be bitter on this point. It may be that the slowness with which some churchmen move to assume leadership in this is due to a persistence in their thinking of doctrinaire pacifism which "does not want to become involved in the war." Today the weapon of pacifism is passivism. The answer to this is "Never mind the war; what confronts us is an educational race against time going on in a class room from which half the class is absent. Will you try to reach those others in uniform?"

"Tell it to the chaplain" is a humorous phrase describing what comes from the enlisted man to the Church. But it can go the other way, from the Church to the enlisted man, if the Church will tell it to the chaplain. A British officer in Lybia wrote to his wife:

"Now, if ever, the whole body of the Church must get together, man, woman, parson, child—the whole village—the whole of England, and realize what a mighty cooperative effort is needed if this world of ours is to be a decent world for us when this war madness is over. The Church is the only cooperative body of us that can lead, and do, and act.

"Give this to the padre and tell him to put it across.

THIS ALL LEADS out into a wider problem, of which it is a part. The Church is not sufficiently in touch with the armed services on any subject, let alone post-war education. It is this fact that is hidden from the average person by the pictures of church services in the newspapers and that early song "Praise the Lord, and pass the ammunition"!

Dr. Samuel Cavert's summary of what the churches are doing for the armed forces, which appeared in the last issue, shows what a fine beginning has been made. But as he says, "the call sounded by Christianity and Crisis for an ampler support of the chaplains by the Protestant churches is timely and urgent."

For these reasons:

This is the second year of the war, and the third full year of mobilization for some. It is not enough that the churches have made a good start. We ought to be doing more by now.

The number of pamphlets is staggering but so is the size of the army and navy. Thus distribution is relatively small and spotty; also the same is true with the various types of speakers. It is a big total, but it is a big war.

The average chaplain has not caught on to where he can get this help. It rightly comes and will continue to come from many different sources and publishers. Hence centralization of information is needed before much of it can be practically available.

Obviously, again, this help gets only to those troops that have chaplains that hear about it or appreciate it. No one knows what is happening to the troops to which this help is not being sent. The basic problem is to get the literature distributed.

From reading Dr. Cavert's article one can see that any chaplain receiving daily mail would know that there are many kind people who offer booklets or lectures. But someone is needed personally on behalf of the Christian Church to ask the chaplain (every last one) and the places where there are no chaplains, (every last one), what they want and need. (Of course it will take more than one person to cover the world, and of course such representatives must have great tact and ability, and of course it will be extremely expensive.)

Thus far each church has a board which passes on every applicant for a chaplaincy, and the churches have conscientiously kept out the unfit. Every chaplain now in the service, therefore, has the approval of his church, and very few have had their commissions revoked. In this the churches have served well, and very few misfits have been foisted on the troops. But all the churches have not filled their quotas. We have done the negative thing of keeping out poor clergy, but we have not done the positive thing of providing good clergy for all the men who belong to us. Here the government is generously providing salaries, and better opportunities for work than any chaplains have ever had in any army or navy, under the outstanding religious leadership of General Arnold and Captain Workman. And here the army and navy, through its commanding officers scattered throughout the world, are calling for more chaplains, (and remember they don't have to have so many if they don't really want them). And on the other hand, here the Church is incapable of supplying enough. The reason is not because there are not enough clergy available, but rather because those responsible in the Church have conceived it to be their duty to screen out the unfit instead of to enlist the able. We Protestants have been possessed by a negative attitude in the face of this great missionary and evangelistic opportunity. In the last analysis it comes down to the official churches' army and navy commissions and their judgment as to where aggressive action needs to be taken. That is why the controversy has been carried on beneath the surface. Each side has respect for the sincerity and devotion of the other, and it is distasteful to row in public about differences in judgment. But unless public pressure from the ranks of the Church can be brought to bear on the present official boards, they will probably continue their present lack of boldness in plans.

There is an old saw "When is a business man not a business man? When he's a vestryman."

It would be a business man's nightmare to have someone offer to pay his salesmen, to have purchasing agents request them to call, and then not be able to find enough salesmen! . . . !

NOT HAVING ENOUGH clergy in the chaplains corps is matched by another error in management and that is, that the Church does not sufficiently keep in touch with the chaplains once they are in the service. Dr. Cavert's article listed what has been done to date. It is encouraging, but what is called for by the times and the opportunity is a more comprehensive plan for keeping all the Church personally in touch with the chaplains and thus with their men. It must be done by all Protestant churches acting together. This is clearly the responsibility of the Federal Council of Churches or of the General Commission on the Army and Navy Chaplains, unless it is thought better to start out with new leadership in a new federation for this special purpose. There are two reasons for all acting together. One is that it gives the visitor greater authority and an easier introduction to the military establishment, and the other is that for each denomination to try to visit its own chaplains or for all to visit all would produce too many complications.

Such a liaison board would consist of twenty or thirty full time clergy and laymen plus many part time members. Its five chief purposes would be:

1. To visit all of the chaplains in the army and navy, Protestant, Catholic and Jewish, and to offer what services it could on behalf of the general offices of the Protestant churches and the local Protestant parishes. (It would be in this way that among other things, material for post-war study would be distributed.)

2. To visit the places where there are no Protestant chaplains and offer its help in making Protestant ministrations available if a need existed.

3. To exchange ideas and make suggestions with the chaplains of all faiths (partly by bringing them news of chaplains' work in other places). Above all, to sit down with the chaplain and ask what he wants, and help him think through his work.

4. To act as father in God to the chaplains. (Not because any chaplains have the blues, but because the Church since New Testament times has always had visitors who encouraged the local congregations and their leaders).

5. To help the younger chaplains with their commanding officers and to help the commanding officers by getting their ideas as to what the churches should do. Generally, to evaluate the work, not by written reports but by personal observation.

The discussion on this subject has been confused by two false issues, the sentimental approach, and the defensive approach.

Some have pictured the poor lonely chaplain surrounded by crapshooting soldiers, cut off from his ladies aid teas, and have cried for a bishop or a "dynamic personality" who will arrive and cheer him up. The answer to that is thanks, we're doing fine and most chaplains have the best job right now that they ever had in the ministry. The chaplains do not want anything but they do need, and cheerfully admit they need, what every Christian minister needs and gets through the working system of the Church—ideas, fellowship, spiritual renewing.

THE DEFENSIVE APPROACH is that certain chaplains have been forced by superior officers to compromise their doctrine, and they need a guardian who can rush to their defense and stop interference with their practice of the one true faith. This proceeds from a few misfits in the corps. It is unjust to the absolute fairness and broad tolerance of the Chiefs of Chaplains of the Army and Navy. They

A Prayer of Thanksgiving

There are two popular misconceptions about the religious attitudes of men in the armed forces. One is the extreme view that soldiers, sailors, and marines, are totally irreligious. The other, just as extreme, is, that because all branches of the services have increased their chaplain's corps that a religious revival is sweeping the army and navy. Neither view is correct. Both are misleading. It is a moot question as to which may be more harmful to both the morale of the battlefront and the morale of the home front.

In dispelling both, may we call attention to this very simple fact. A fact we have had the privilege of personally observing through a tour of duty in the Army as a line officer and also later as a Chaplain. More recently by a round of visits to a large number of Army Camps and Naval training stations. The fact is this: if a boy has been attentive to religious duties at home, he will be more than apt to show the same attentiveness in the armed services. The reverse is also true. The Chaplain has a better chance with the boy who has had some religious training at home than with the boy who has had none. It is true that, particularly in combat areas and in times of great danger, men turn to a power without themselves, whose help they feel they need. Men who have never prayed before, pray in the face of imminent danger.

Because of this last fact, the press has dramatized such instances in a fashion that captures the imagination of the public. Such dramatization may lead to very misleading conclusions. As far as we can gather no great religious revival is sweeping through our armed forces. It may. A great revival may come, but we see no particular signs of it at present. We are much more interested in the quiet, day by day work of the Chaplains, and the continued interest of Rectors back home in the men they have in services. This, to our mind, is the important thing. Ours is a civilian army and seventy-five per cent better, of these men will return to their home communities. They will not have been members of Cromwellian Army of religious crusaders. They will all have had experiences which in many cases will have deepened their religious convictions. Some of them will have become cynical because of the destruction and death they have witnessed.

Our armed forces are neither irreligious nor overly religious. They reflect the background of the religious life of the nation. No fair appraisal of the religious life of the nation, would place it at the extreme of irreligion or fanatically religious. It is a mixture between these two extremes.

Therefore we are more interested in two reports in the secular press dealing with the religious life of the men in service. One is a statement by Secretary Knox of the Navy, in which he said, "In this war, to a degree never approached before, men are turning to God. . . . ." This may be a slight overstatement, but it carries significance coming from the Secretary of the Navy. The other is the statement made by Dr. William B. Pugh, Chairman of the General Commission of Army and Navy Chaplains, just back from a 48,000 mile tour of the battlefronts. (Time December 13.) Dr. Pugh said: "The Chapels are not overcrowded, but there is something underneath that is really religion." These two statements are most reassuring, and are much more convincing than the sensational stories of sudden conversions.

To our mind this simple incident as told in "Time", December 13th issue, sums up all we have been attempting to express. We quote:

"In Italy on Thanksgiving Day, a group of U. S. soldiers prepared to romp into a turkey dinner. Suddenly one of them stood up. He was a twenty-two-year old veteran pilot. He said: 'Gentlemen, since this is Thanksgiving I would like to say grace.' Every body looked sheepish. Said a Chaplain: 'Lieutenant, I think that is a fine idea.'

"The soldier bowed his head, groped for words: 'Dear God, we thank you for this food we are about to eat, for we know where there are thousands of men who cannot sit down to a meal like this today. Bless all our loved ones at home. Dear God, bless all the fighting men on all the fronts around the world—on both sides, because they are all fighting for what they believe is right. We ask these things in Christ's name.'"

This simple prayer from the depths of a soldier's heart, is worth more than all the observations of experts. Please note its Christian inclusiveness—"bless the men on both sides." Here is a true prayer of thanksgiving.

May we, on the home front, learn to match the sincerity of this soldier's prayer of thanksgiving. We need not worry then about the irreligion or the religion of our men in the service.

A Printer's Error

In our editorial of last week there was a typographical error that completely changed one point we attempted to make. The error read as follows: the American Church Union is an official organization of the Church. It should have read unofficial. There no official organization of the clergy of the Church except in Diocesan Conventions. The American Church, Union, the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship and other kindred groups, are composed of clergy who are officially recognized by the Church as individuals, but not as groups. The groups are voluntary associations and have no official connection with General Convention or the National Council.

Our point was that it is presumption for any such unofficial group to even give the appearance of spreading ex cathedra for the whole Church. None of us, unfortunately, are that Catholic in our approach.

BOOK NOTES

By F. J. Warnecke

THE SECOND CHRISTMAS. John Haynes Holmes. The Macmillan Company, New York City. 1943. 65 pages. $1.25.

These three stories of Christmas vividly bring home the Christmas message. This book will probably take its place on that little shelf of books which includes "THE OTHER WISE MAN" and "WHY THE CHIMES RANG". The story, which gives its title to the volume, tells of how on Christ's second birthday Mary returned to the stable where He was born. In very human terms it begins by saying, "It had been a dreary year for Mary. Such a disappointment after that thrilling experience in Bethlehem. Was there ever such a birthday! Had ever a mother been so blessed! Of course, Mary did not understand it all. She was a simple maiden, young, untaught, quite unprepared." And so the story tells us of Mary's thoughts during that year and how she was led to patience and understanding.

The second story is "The True Story of the Innkeeper", which describes the visit of the child Jesus to the innkeeper who had befriended Mary and Joseph on that first night. The last story, "The Wise Men Come to Herod", is the story of Herod's henchman sent to kill the child Jesus and how Mary nursed him when he was wounded.

ANGLICAN EVANGELICALISM. Edited by Alexander Clinton Zabriskie. The Church Historical Society, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. 283 pages. $3.00.

This is the volume issued in honor of the Very Rev. Wallace E. Rollins, former Dean of the Virginia Seminary. The essays were contributed by the Dean and Faculty of the Seminary and by other friends of Dr. Rollins. The Foreword is by the Presiding Bishop.

Dr. Rollins eminently deserves such an honor. As the Dedicatory Preface, written by Dean Zabriskie, says, "He will be remembered for the inspiration of his character and his teaching".

Like all volumes of this sort, the contributions are very uneven in their value. The outstanding essays are undoubtedly those by Dr. Lowry and the Rev. Mr. Mollegen, though one wonders whether Mr. Mollegen has not equated neo-orthodoxy with evangelicalism. Dean Zabriskie's interesting historical essay admits its own "conspicuous omission" of Bishop Potter and Dr. Muhlenberg. Certainly either of these two leaders was more important than Bishop McIlvaine. There was little that was original in the contribution of Bishop McIlvaine.

In Dr. Lowry's essay on "The Situation and Need of Man" the book reaches its climax. Many have written of the chaos of this time in which we are living as being the birth pangs of a new age. Dr. Lowry goes further to say, "A great period of human history is at an end. A new age has dawned. It is an age of crisis, of faith, of messianism, of salvation. Man is once again a candidate for salvation. His need for God is as imperious and desperate as that of classic man during the Roman Empire. Man at that time was characterized for a "failure of nerve". His psychology was that of religious homelessness; in innumerable religious ways he sought cleansing and certainty and peace and meaning for his life. Yet, actually, the need of modern man is more acute even if psychologically less advanced. For the pace of history is incredibly more swift".

The brief biography of Dr. Rollins, which begins the volume, makes one wish that a longer biography could be written. As one of those who studied with Dr. Rollins and learned, as all his students did, to love and admire him, we can but agree with Dean Zabriskie that "The church is the poorer for not having a permanent record of his mature conclusions about the Life of Christ and about St. Francis, and now that he is retired we trust he will publish them". This volume is well worth possession as a compact record of the Evangelical genius. But even more, we delight to own it so that in this small way we, too, can honor one whose kindly smile, warm friendship and wise advice those who studied with him will always cherish.

GOD AND HIS PEOPLE, The Pastoral Series, Course A. The Rev. F. R. Godolphin and E. H. Salter. Morehouse-Gorham Company, New York City. 1943. 204 pages. $1.25.

This is a course on the teaching of the Old Testament. Like all the other courses of The Pastoral Series, it is based on the catechetical method. It is designed to be used with a work book. Whether it is wise to teach the Old Testament in the order in which the books appear rather than in their true chronological order is a matter open to debate. However, the sad lack of knowledge on the part of our children, concerning the Old Testament, makes us welcome any new course which promises to be useful.

WHAT THE CHAPLAINS NEED

alone have the authority and alone can attend to any evidences of persecution or discrimination. No one wants church officials coming around defending anything. We want them spending something, freely giving the life of the Church through the chaplains to the men.

It is going to be hard to set up such a ministry. Yes, but at least the money isn't lacking. A perfectly definite offer of funds to get this started was made by responsible business men in March, 1943, and only recently the head of a large corporation pointed out that his and many other corporations would give out of corporate funds to such work if it was interdenominational.

The harsh truth is that what is lacking is official imagination and perspective in putting first things first. Perhaps we are thinking too much in terms of the last war, and there is almost no connection between numbers of chaplains and opportunities for chaplains in the two wars.

A letter from an Air Corps chaplain sums it up:

"To me much of the recent publicity about our Christian offensives and China as the place of our greatest Christian opportunity, is just so much romantic sentimentality. Frankly, the place of greatest Christian opportunity for our Church is with every man and woman in the armed services.

"This opportunity is stupendous, and real. But our Church is, as ever, timid, withdrawing, self-effacing, slow and unrealistic. I would seriously suggest that almost any staff officer in the army or navy has more vision and imagination than the average clergyman. And that almost any person on duty with the air corps has more potential understanding of the missionary work of the Church and more easily thinks in terms of world-wide activity, than the good people of our Church who support the missionary work.

"We keep talking about the 'magnitude' of the task of supervising our chaplains in the army and navy and the colleges of the United States and all over the world. This is a 'magnitude' which has long since been routine for the armed services. Here in my own office, as a minute example, I am personally responsible for religious work in 110 establishments situated all over the eastern United States. I have four assistant chaplains, who visit every station once every month. Is this the kind of supervision which is supposed to be impossible?

"I fear that our Christian offensive will never capture the imagination of our people, unless there is evident in our planning, a new fresh breath and shouting song of real vision and direction. In historical terms, this is a fateful time in which to focus our attention chiefly on India and China. I pray that the day will not arrive when we shall see that we have gained strong footholds in India and China, and in the meantime, have lost the fortress of young men and women in our own land."

BETHLEHEM

Without, the far and chill star-shine,
Within, the warm breath of the kine,
Sweet with stored yield of vale and hill
Round Bethlehem, now winter-still;
Toward Thee they turned their soft, kind eyes,
Watching, with gentle, mute surprise,
The tender, tiny thing that lay
In safe content upon their hay.

Oh, Saviour, who didst leave Thy throne
Of glory for the sad and lone,
Give us to save from all despite
Such voiceless ones as watched that night;
Give hearts to fend for all the weak
Defenseless ones that cannot speak,
They that on man's compassion wait,
Oh, Thou, the All-Compassionate!

WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR

Billy like history, especially the early history of Great Britain.

"Daddy," he said one day, "I've been reading about William the Conqueror, and say! he really did big things. I wish I could succeed like that."

"Maybe you can," encouraged his father.

"Maybe some day. But it's a long time to wait. I'd like to begin right now."

"Well, why not? I read where some successful boy's leader told his group of boys not to wait to be a successful man—to be a successful boy."

"Yes, but how? I don't have any way to make much money."

"It doesn't take money to succeed in some things."

"But I don't have time to do anything big. I have to go to school."

"Too bad," grinned daddy. "But did it ever occur to you that that might be one way to succeed? For one thing, it's preparing you for future accomplishments. Then, if you study hard and don't cheat in exams, you're being right now a successful student."

"Yes, and what else could I do?"

"You might try being a successful choreboy. Mother would like that."

"But I'd rather conquer something."

"Don't you see, in both cases, you would be conquering laziness."

"That's right," beamed Billy. "And say! you know what? My name's William, too, so I'm going to be a William, the Conqueror."

"I have an idea. Take a sheet of paper, and write at the top: 'William, the Conqueror.' Then underneath, make a list of what you are going to conquer. You can start the list with the word 'laziness'."

Billy got the paper and wrote down what had been suggested. Then he sat pencil in hand. "I can't think of anything else."

"Are you that near being perfect?" teased his father. "What about being angry?"

So Billy wrote down "temper". "And sometimes," he admitted honestly, "I don't exactly tell the truth. That doesn't suit William, the Conqueror".

"Of course not. Write 'untruthfulness'. And it is easy to refuse when other boys want you to sneak out nights, or take a dare, or something else you know you shouldn't".

Billy shook his head. "But how shall I put it? Conqueror of what?"

Daddy thought for a moment and then suggested, "You might write 'Fear of what people think'. If you can conquer that, with God's help, you'll be a really brave boy. It's harder to face a sneering classmate than a cannon".

"I know," said Billy understandingly. "They think you're a sissy if you refuse, but I'll try to be braver after this, for it wouldn't do for William the Conqueror to be a coward."—From The Young Crusader.

THE KING'S MESSENGER

When your hands or face or clothes are dirty, what does your mother use to make them clean again? Water, of course.

But there are stains of sin on our hearts which only Jesus can take away. The washing called baptism is a sign that the sin-stains have been washed away from people's hearts and they are made clean and white.

The book of Mark begins as if the curtain were suddenly drawn, and a tall, gaunt, desert-loving man stands before us. He makes us think of Elijah, the stern prophet of the Old Testament.

In the book of Malachi—the last book of the Old Testament—we read about this stern-faced man of the desert. Malachi tells about the Coming One—the Messiah. "But," he says, "God will first send into the world a man like Elijah."

Four hundred years had passed since Malachi died, and now at last had come "Elijah". His real name was John.

For a long time John had lived alone in the desert, where he could think and pray to God. Then, some way the people in the cities found out that he was there. Perhaps travelers through the desert had stopped to talk to him, and then had told their friends in the cities about him.

Soon great crowds of people were traveling miles out into the hot desert to see this strange man and hear him talk. He was a preacher, and he said things that they had never heard before.

"How strange he looks," said the people to one another. "See the clothes he wears—made out of coarse cloth woven from camel's hair—such as the poorest people have. And they say he has nothing to eat except what he finds here in the desert—locusts and wild honey. How could a man sent from God be like that?"

"Perhaps he is the Coming One whom God has promised," said others. "Let's ask him."

They found him alone, sitting on the bank of the river, looking far out over the desert and thinking of God.

"Are you the Coming One?" asked one timidly.

John started.

"No!" he exclaimed. "You must never think that. You know the shoestrings of great people are fastened by slaves. The Coming One is so much greater than I, that I am not good enough to stoop down and untie His shoestrings for Him."

In that Eastern land, when a king was going on a journey, he sent a messenger ahead to have the people make the roads ready for him to pass over. Sometimes roads had to be made where there were none before.

"I am the King's messenger," said John. "God has sent me to have you make the roads ready for Him. Prepare the way of the Lord! Make His paths straight! Every valley must be filled up, and every mountain must be made level. And the crooked places must be made straight, and the rough places must be made smooth."

Of course, the high and low and crooked and rough places were in people's hearts. How could they make them level and straight?

Some of these people had taken money away from the poor. Some were soldiers who had treated people roughly, and grumbled about their wages. All had done wrong. The only way they could make a smooth path in their hearts for King Jesus to pass over was to tell out these wrong things and ask God to forgive them.

"And that is exactly what you must do," said John sternly.

"We are doing it," said some. "Will

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF THE NEWS

December Meeting National Council

All Members of Council Appointed to Forward in Service Committee

New York, N. Y.—The December meeting of National Council, December 7-9, brought the largest number of new members in many years. Presiding Bishop Tucker introduced the members who took their seats for the first time, nearly a third of the total Council membership. Members elected since last Council meeting are: the Rev. John Huess, Jr., Evanston, Ill.; the Rt. Rev. Charles C. J. Carpenter, Alabama; the Very Rev. Elwood L. Haines, Louisville; the Rev. John E. Hines, Houston, Texas; the Rev. Jackson A. Dyckman, Brooklyn; Mr. E. Townsend Look, New York; Mr. Alexander Whiteside, Boston; Mrs. John E. Hill, Philadelphia; Miss Anne W. Patton, San Marino, Calif., and Bishop Harry T. Moore, of Dallas, elected by the Seventh Province.

Aid to British Missions, it was announced, will be for this year in the Yun-Kwei field, i. e., Yunnan Province and Kweichow Province, China, under Bishops Hall and Tsu; work in the Southwestern Pacific, conducted by the Church of England in New Zealand and Australia, including New Guinea and the Solomons; additional aid in the Diocese of Dornakal, India; and certain other areas still under consideration in the British West Indies.

In order to make more effective Forward in Service, Bishop Tucker stated that there is need for coordination of Forward in Service plans with the general program of the Church in parish, diocese, nation and world. The Presiding Bishop appoints the members of the Forward in Service Committee, and Bishop Tucker announced his appointment of all the members of the National Council. He announced also that between meetings of the whole body, plans and decisions concerning Forward in Service will continue to be in the hands of the Presiding Bishop, but that he will be advised and assisted by an executive committee consisting of the officers of the Council, heads of Departments and Divisions, executive secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary, executive director of the Presiding Bishop's Committee on Laymen's Work, secretary in charge of Rural Work, secretary in charge of Negro work, and the executive secretary of Forward in Service.

Special emphasis of Forward in Service for the period September 1944-September 1945 is to be International and Inter-racial Understanding. Council so voted sitting as the Forward in Service Committee.

No action was taken on the matter of a deputation to England and to Russia. Bishop Tucker said there are several unresolved difficulties, among them the matter of financing, securing official permissions, and difficulties of travel.

Council confirmed the appointment of the Rev. LeRoy Burroughs of Ames, Iowa, as associate secretary for college work in the Sixth Province, and that of the Rev. Almus Thorpe of Columbus, Ohio, for the same work in the Fifth Province.

Council was informed that the Division of College work has been able to assist in the re-location of 44 Japanese-American students. All are members of the Episcopal Church, and they have been placed in secondary schools and colleges. The Division has assisted also in placing a number of students of other faiths.

The Report to the Church which followed General Convention was reported a complete success. It was made in 74 dioceses, and reports from the visiting speakers, it was said, indicate determination in all parts of the Church to work earnestly to achieve the new increased budget.

Post-War Reconstruction Fund

Council discussed the establishment of a post-war Reconstruction Fund. It was decided that the fund shall be set up at once, and that contributions from individuals or parishes will be received, but that the Council will not inaugurate a campaign for the Fund at present, deferring such action until needs may be discerned more clearly.

The United Church Canvass, Bishop Henry W. Hobson told National Council, is more successful this year than last. It is being used in more cities, and in more of the larger cities.

The Bishop Rowe Memorial Building Fund, it was announced, has reached a total of $38,500. The goal for building and small endowment for maintenance is $55,000.

Japanese-Americans

Dr. George A. Wieland, director of the department of Home Missions, reported to Council that Churches are cooperating splendidly in the resettlement of Japanese-Americans. He said that 16,000 such citizens have been resettled in private employment; 5,000 more are out of relocation centers on seasonal employment passes, and there are 10,000 Japanese-Americans in the United States armed forces.

Relief Fund

The Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief has received and disbursed, January 1 to November 1, 1943, $113,218.16, which includes the gift of $25,000 from the Woman's Auxiliary. General Convention authorized an Advent Call on behalf of this fund, which is aiding more than 30 accredited relief agencies, and Council was urged to do everything possible to keep before the people of the Church this means of aiding the needy in all parts of the world.

The Rev. Dr. Almon R. Pepper, for Christian Social Relations, reported that at present there are 28 Episcopal Church workers in 21 dioceses receiving aid from the general Church in war industry areas. In addition the general Church is assisting 24 interdenominational workers in ten States.

Visitors to National Council included Bishop Lloyd Craighill, just repatriated after a long period of internment in Changhai; Bishop-elect Harry S. Kennedy, who will be consecrated for

National W. A. Board Meets

Assignment of U. T. O. for New Buildings Voted

New York, N. Y.—One of the most agreeable duties of the Woman's Auxiliary national executive board, which held its regular meeting in New York December 3-6, would be the assignment of money which the Triennial Meeting voted from the 1943 United Thank Offering for new buildings, if the applications for building funds did not so far exceed the sum available. The satisfaction of choosing a few is offset by regret at refusing others.

The Triennial voted $85,000 for buildings. On recommendation of the board's United Thank Offering committee, after discussion with the home and overseas departments of the National Council, the board voted:

Toward a new church at Conway, Ark., a town with three colleges, one of which is now used by Wacs—$1,500. The priest in charge is holding duplicate services on Sundays and begs people not to come more than once a Sunday.

Toward a church for each of two growing towns in Eastern Oregon, Milton and Prineville—$1,000 each.

For a building at Bishop Payne Divinity School, Petersburg, Va., the last $15,000 of $22,000 needed.

A new unit for St. Paul's School for girls at Walla Walla, Wash., a school serving a wide region, with a strongly missionary and Church-centered program—$12,500.

Toward replacing the main building of the John Moncure Negro High School, Millers Tavern, Va., burned a year ago—$5,000.

For small buildings to be secured as needed when opening up new Negro activity in the near future, in connection with the work of the Rev. Bravid W. Harris, National Council secretary for Negro work—$6,000.

For a parish hall, St. Peter's Church, La Boca, Canal Zone, where an active congregation of nearly 800 West Indian communicants have no place but the church for their activities—$5,000.

Toward a new church for St. Christopher's Mission, Rio Abajo, Panama, work started in a saloon four years ago, for a new and growing community of West Indians moving out from a congested section of old Panama City—$15,000.

Half the cost of a school at Kathaguden, India, diocese of Dornakal, the other half having been given from the Youth Offering—$1,000.

To enlarge the parish hall of All Saints Church, Charlotte Amalie, Virgin Islands, where, among other events, a church school of 800 has to meet in two crowded sections, morning and afternoon—$20,000.

The board voted the last of the equipment and repair item from the 1940 United Thank Offering, the former to aid three missionaries, in Duluth.

National Day Of Prayer

Roosevelt Sets New Year Day As a Fitting Day for the Nation to Pray

Washington. — President Roosevelt has proclaimed January 1 as a National Day of Prayer for "strength and guidance for the problems of widening warfare and for the responsibilities of increasing victory."

The text of the proclamation, made public yesterday by the White House, follows:

"At the end of the year of 1943, which has not only made manifest the devotion and courage of our nation's sons but has also crowned their efforts with brilliant success on every battle-front, it is fitting that we set aside a day of prayer to give thanks to Almighty God for his constant providence over us in every hour of national peace and national peril.

"Fitting That We Pray"

"At the beginning of the New Year, 1944, which now lies before us, it is fitting that we pray to be preserved from false pride of accomplishment and from wilful neglect of the last measure of public and private sacrifice necessary to attain final victory and peace.

"May we humbly seek strength and guidance for the problems of widening warfare and for the responsibilities of increasing victory. May we find in the infinite mercy of the God of our fathers some measure of comfort for the personal anxieties of separation and anguish of bereavement.

"Now, therefore, I, Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States of America, do hereby appoint Saturday, the first day of January, 1944, as a day of prayer for all of us, in our churches, in our homes, and in our hearts, those of us who walk in the familiar paths of home, those who fight on the wide battle fields of the world, those who go down to the sea in ships, and those who ride in the air on wings."

STUDENTS STUDYING RUSSIAN AND CHINESE LANGUAGES

Wheaton, Ill.—Anticipating a great era of world-wide missionary endeavor following the war, students at Wheaton College, Wheaton, Ill., are preparing now for service in Russia and China by studying the languages of those countries as extra-curricular activities.

A class in Russian was organized following an address by the Rev. Basil A. Malof, president of the Russian Gospel Movement, before the Wheaton chapter of the Foreign Missions Fellowship. The Rev. Mr. Malof, an exiled Russian missionary now living in Wheaton, teaches three weekly classes with a total enrollment of fifteen. He is giving his time and effort without charge as "part payment in appreciation for the lease-lend aid which the United States is sending Russia".

At present Mr. Malof is aiming merely to familiarize the students with the peculiarities of Russian characters and pronunciation. Soon they will be speaking stock phrases like "Good morning" and "How are you?" in the language of Stalin. Within a year Mr. Malof hopes to have them reading Russian text.

The inauguration of the Russian class was a challenge to the four Chinese students on the campus. They immediately organized a class in Chinese, choosing Edward Leung and Andrew Yang as teachers. Fifteen students have enrolled in the class, the majority coming from the three American-born and the five Hawaiian-born Chinese students at Wheaton.

Several years ago Dr. James R. Graham, a missionary who is an able Chinese linguist, organized a class in Chinese while a member of the Wheaton faculty. The present teachers aim to have their students reading newspapers and writing letters in Chinese within a year.

MOSCOW PLANS FOR TRAINING OF CLERGY

Moscow.—The Holy Synod of the Russian Orthodox Church recently decided to establish a Theological Institute in Moscow for the training of clergymen in all the bishoprics of the Soviet Union it was disclosed yesterday.

The Synod's project would reestablish theological schools for the first time since the revolution.

The Synod's announcement said the curriculum will consist of the usual subjects taught before the revolution, plus canon law and the constitution of the USSR. Libraries and reading rooms will be organized throughout the country.

Students must be of "proper religious and moral background" and determined to serve the Church for life. Tuition will be free and the students will receive stipends from the Church.

$295,407.82 TO BE COLLECTER IN DECEMBER

This is the sum remaining to be collected in the closing month of the year if the full amount of the Expectations of the dioceses and districts is to be realized. It is a large amount but not a staggering one in view of the fine progress which has been made by such a large proportion of the dioceses in keeping their collections and remittances up to date.

Quite a large number of dioceses and districts have already equalled or exceeded their Expectations for the year. We thank them and assure them that any further remittances they may make can be put to good use in furthering the missionary cause. The 1943 budget was only balanced by an agreement to use the principal of available special gifts and legacies to the extent necessary. Any overpayments on Expectations will release part of this legacy money for other needs.

British Missions

Some increase in receipts for this purpose took place in November and it is important that all "Specials" for this purpose be remitted promptly. Our gift for this purpose in 1943 is still far below $100,000.

Faithfully yours,
Lewis B. Franklin,
6 Dec., 1943 Treasurer.

Repatriates Guests Of National Council

After 64 Days at Sea and Six Years of War Faces Have Smiles Which Would Reach China

New York, N. Y.—Smiles that were visible on the faces of the China repatriates from the Gripsholm, lunching with their families and friends as guests of the National Council's overseas department, in New York on December 4, at the National Arts Club, if placed end to end would have reached over to those still in China and back again. The friends and relatives who knew how the repatriates should look normally said that most of them were thin, but to the average eye they looked strong and flourishing.

All but a few who were unavoidably out of town were at the celebration of the Holy Communion, for which Calvary Church, next door to Church headquarters, was kindly loaned, as the congregation of more than 100 was beyond the capacity of the headquarters chapel. Bishop Tucker was celebrant, assisted by Bishop W. P. Roberts, of Shanghai, and Bishop Lloyd R. Craighill, of Anking.

The repatriates had had sixty-four days at sea, preceded by six years of life in an invaded country, six years of war. For the past eleven months they had been living in internment camps in or near Shanghai. Much of that story remains to be told but in general, as the two bishops reported, the internment was "an interesting experience and not too difficult". Those at the Pootung camp formed an alumni association and resolved to hold future annual picnics at Pootung during which they would eat all the good things they had a tendency to think about while interned. Bishop Roberts added that on boarding the Gripsholm at Goa, they found a buffet lunch spread on the deck which included all the kinds of food they had been dreaming about.

Ellis Tucker and others from St. John's University faculty ran a university in the camp, with some 700 students attending. Dr. Walter Pott, of St. Luke's and St. Elizabeth's Hospital, Shanghai, was medical director here, and Dr. Harry B. Taylor, of St. James Hospital, Anking, was medical director for the Ash camp—named not for ash heaps, it seems, but for ash trees.

Of the present status of the Shanghai diocese, Bishop Roberts reported St. John's running with 3,000 students and no interference. "We have academic freedom." St. Luke's and St. Elizabeth's are running under Chinese management. In the cities, most of the Church property, though not all, is occupied by the Japanese military and the congregations are worshipping in houses. Most of the country stations are active, undisturbed. "Future opportunity for the Chinese Church," the Bishop stated, "is unlimited."

In the occupied section of the Anking diocese, Bishop Craighill spoke particularly of the Rev. Graham Kwei and the continuing congregation at Anking, where Bishop E. S. Yu, now in charge at Shanghai, visited a few months ago,

Bishop Unwilling To Talk

Prefers Not to Tell About Internment by Japanese

New York, N. Y.—Bishop William P. Roberts, who returned on the Gripsholm, is unwilling for various good reasons, to say very much about the experiences of his seven-months' internment by the Japanese, but he is very willing to tell of the Church in China, and of his confidence in its stability and dependability.

Declining to say anything about his treatment in a prison camp, the Bishop said, "Our chief interest and concern is not with ourselves, but with the Chinese Christian Church. We hope that our many friends in America will not be so much interested in what happened to us that they will forget that to which we have consecrated our lives, the upbuilding of the Christian Church in China. The report we bring back on this subject is a cheering one. The work of our Mission and the work of the Chinese Church have always gone hand in hand as one work. Since our internment and repatriation all this work has necessarily been assumed by our Chinese colleagues and the native Church.

"In the District of Shanghai, Bishop E. S. Yu and his Standing Committee form one of the strongest groups of men that one could find in all China. We have the utmost confidence in their ability and loyalty. They are shouldering their new responsibilities with great courage.

"In spite of difficulties there are many encouraging things. Although our property in Nanking City, in Hangchow, Wusih, Soochow, Changsu and Woosung has been taken from the Chinese Church, our other centers have not been greatly molested. All together there is a total of 35 churches or chapels that carry on with their regular weekly worship and work. In the places where the property has been taken from them, the congregations are meeting in other quarters. One or two of the older Chinese clergy have been retired, but so far as I know not one has left the work of the Church and they are remaining with their people to lead them through these hard times.

"Our two hospitals in Shanghai are carrying on without molestation and in a free Christian way, and are meeting all expenses. St. Luke's has about 100 beds and St. Elizabeth's about 300.

"Most of our educational work is going forward freely. Some parish schools have had to close but not many. Soochow Academy is still carrying on in Shanghai. On St. John's University compound there are nearly 3,000 students under instruction—300 in the primary school, 200 girls at St. Mary's, 550 boys in St. John's Middle School, and about 2,000 in the University, of whom 150 are medical students. This is an amazing increase in numbers. It has been an untold blessing to the youth of Shanghai and China generally that St. John's has been permitted to carry on, and with complete academic and religious freedom. Our Chinese colleagues are pledged to close the University rather than compromise in any matter of principle."

Bishop Roberts expressed concern about five of his Shanghai workers who were sent to the Philippines when war threatened, but feels that there is good possibility that they may be repatriated during the next six months.

DIOCESE OF MASSACHUSETTS

Qualified Lay Readers Receive Commissions

Boston, Mass.—Bishop Henry Knox Sherrill commissioned a group of 23 lay readers on November 30 in the Chapel of the Diocesan House. Behind this announcement lies all the effort of recent years to raise the calling of lay reader into one of dignity, executed with development of each man's powers through the special courses for lay readers in the diocesan schools conducted by the Department of Religious Education of the Diocese of Massachusetts. These courses cover the Prayer Book and Bible and training of the voice as essential features.

This recent gathering on St. Andrew's Day opened with a supper before the group moved to the Chapel, where they were presented to the Bishop by the Rev. Wilbur J. Kingwill, chairman of the Diocesan Commission on Lay Readers. Among those present were the members of the Commission and the instructors of the Diocesan School courses.

In addition, other lay readers who have been licensed for many years and who have now qualified under the new arrangements, were also commissioned.

Looking Ahead to Training of Boys and Girls

Boston, Mass.—A forward look to the religious training of boys and girls in the years ahead of them was the subject of an address by Dr. Franklin P. Hawkes, superintendent of schools in Springfield, Massachusetts, at the 39th annual meeting of the Church School Union of the diocese in the Assembly Hall of the Diocesan House, on the afternoon of November 28. Church School teachers, officers, parents of pupils, and some of the clergy gathered for the occasion, which included a brief business meeting and ended with discussion groups and tea.

Dr. Hawkes' argument was that a change in the religious perspective is necessary and substantiated it by listing four factors:

1. Boys and girls are becoming more and more economically maladjusted. Religion must be made vital to them so that they realize they have a life to live and not merely a million to make.

2. They are becoming more and more emotionally unstable. The Church can most satisfactorily work out this problem in common with other community agencies.

3. Youth is religiously aroused. The deep question is whether or not we can meet the religious needs in answer to their experience when our young men and women in the service of their country return home.

4. Youth has a suspended judgment. They must be taught that the things most worthwhile are the things that no one can take away from them.

Five needs of today's youth were then given: Bearings, in and by religious education; willingness and desire to seek advice from teachers of religion; control based on security and the removal of fear by substitution of something constructive in its place; example, Participation.

The gist of Dr. Hawkes' thesis was that God has a plan for our lives. It is our duty to find that plan,—not first to earn a living, not first to find a job, but first of all to be as near the Master as we can.

The discussion groups,—arranged for those teaching Junior and High School ages; Juniors, and Kindergarten and Primary,—were led respectively by Dr. Hawkes, the Rev. Gardiner Monks, headmaster of the Lenox School, and Miss Lillian Boyd, of the Massachusetts diocesan Department of Religious Education.

The president of the Church School Union, the Rev. Halsey I. Andrews, appointed by the Bishop of the Diocese, remains in office. Others elected to serve as representatives of the Church School Union on the diocesan Department of Religious Education were the Rev. Messrs. Laurence H. Blackburn and Howard M. Lowell, and Mr. George E. Wheatley.

spiritual" manner. Again, the sacrament of the Lord's Supper is not to be "reserved", "carried about", "lifted up", or "worshipped"—since all this is "repugnant to Scripture"; "overthroweth the nature of a sacrament" and "giveth occasion to many superstitions".

I have asked my critics, whose letters are unworthy of fellow-ministers, to cite the records of this Church, to prove my irregularity—and they merely sputter and explode with emotional bias! I want light—not heat!

REPATRIATES

confirming forty-four persons.

Of those remaining in China, whose return on another repatriation trip is hoped for, the two well known invalid people are progressing: Sister Constance, of the Community of the Transfiguration, not yet well enough to have risked this last trip, and Mr. B. W. Lanphear, making a good recovery from an operation in a Shanghai hospital. Miss Laura Clark, of Anking, voluntarily remained behind to stay with Sister Constance. Their camp, where Dr. Harry Taylor was serving, is not too uncomfortable, had better food than some others, and some degree of privacy. Others still interned are reported in good condition, Messrs. R. J. Salmon, George W. Laycock, Foster Teevan, George J. Sullwold, C. W. Harbison and wife, the former Frances MacKinnon; the Fred Browns, Gwen Cooper. Winifred Steward has been ill, but is well cared for.

Present at the service and the lunch and seemingly in fine form were the famous quartet, Misses Elizabeth Falck, Ann Groff, Marion Hurst, three nurses, and Anne Lamberton, hospital secretary and manager. Among other adventures, they will be remembered for their trip over the Burma Road in the lovable little Ford they named Marco Polo; their story, "Marco Polo Rides Again," being one of the best stories from that region. Friends were relieved to learn that Marco Polo had been well placed in a good home.

TWENTY-ONE OF MISSION STAFF RETURNED

New York, N. Y.—The twenty-one members of the China mission staff who returned on the Gripsholm repatriation ship to the United States, December 1, include: Two bishops, Wm. P. Roberts, of Shanghai, and Lloyd R. Craighill, of Anking. Two physicians, Harry B. Taylor, M. D., of St. James Hospital, Anking, and Walter H. Pott, M. D., of St. Luke's and St. Elizabeth's Hospitals, Shanghai. Five other hospital workers: the Rev. James M. Wilson, manager, and more recently chaplain, of St. Luke's; Anne Lamberton, secretary, and three nurses, Elizabeth Falck, Ann Groff and Marion Hurst. Ten faculty members from St. John's University and Middle School, Shanghai: Montgomery Throop, English literature; James H. Pott, education; John R. Norton, headmaster of the middle school; Donald Roberts, history; Walter H. Taylor, chemistry; Edward H. King, engineering; Ellis Tucker, mathematics; Philip B. Sullivan, economics; Charles E. Perry, history, and Florence J. Sherriff, Ph. D., assistant professor of government. Mrs. Sherriff is not a National Council appointee, but employed by St. John's. Also one other clergyman, the Rev. Hollis S. Smith, of Zangzok, and one deaconess, Katharine Putnam, of Yangchow.

The years of service given to the Church in China by these people and their wives amount to more than five centuries. Their terms range from that of Dr. Harry Taylor, 1905, closely seconded by the Rev. Dr. Montgomery Throop, 1907; to the most recent, Marion Hurst, R. N., 1935, but her years in China, if fewer, have not been uneventful.

First Meeting—Every Member Present

This was the first meeting of the newly elected board, of whose twenty-one members eleven are serving for the first time. Every member was present, was assigned to a committee and put to work before the first day ended, though more time than usual was given to reports and information that would help orient new members as to the function of the board and its committees and the National Council.

Resolutions from the Triennial Meeting calling for action by the board were noted. Some are already completed action (such as the appointment of two women, Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce of New York and Mrs. Stephen K. Mahon, Toledo, on General Convention's Joint Commission on Holy Matrimony), others are in process or will be dealt with during the triennium.

The printed report of the Triennial Meeting has appeared, called God's Gift and Our Task (32 pages, 10 cents, available from the Woman's Auxiliary, 281 Fourth Ave., New York 10). It includes resolutions adopted, with the United Thank Offering budget and the statement of policy for supply work; also the report of the Triennial's Continuation Committee listing suggestions

Stevenson, Grosse Pointe, Mich.; vice-chairman, Mrs. Roger L. Kingsland, Fairmont, West Va.; secretary, Mrs. Cowin. The next meeting will be in New York, Feb. 4-7.

As the board members had learned of the approaching marriage of the executive secretary, Miss Margaret I. Marston, to the Rev. Dr. Arthur M. Sherman, the board gave its official blessing and expressed its gratification that she will continue as executive.

An appropriation of $2,000 from the United Thank Offering is to be added to the sum of $8,000 already raised in free China for a church building to serve the new work at Maolin, where the Rt. Rev. Robin Chen, assistant bishop of Anking, has his headquarters.

NATIONAL COUNCIL

Honolulu January 11.

Bishop Tucker received notice during the Council meeting, of the appointment of the Rev. Canon Charles T. Bridgeman to be Archdeacon in Syria. The appointment was made by the new bishop in Jerusalem, the Rt. Rev. W. H. Stewart.

Dr. Lewis B. Franklin told Council that arrangements have been completed whereby it is possible to offer a blanket bond for treasurers of parishes, dioceses, Church organizations, institutions, etc., at a fraction of the cost of individual bonds.

National Council voted to affiliate as sponsor with the Service Men's Christian League, and Bishop Oliver J. Hart and the Rev. Dr. D. A. McGregor of the Council's Division of Christian Education, were appointed to represent the Episcopal Church on the League's Council. Council appropriated $3,000 and the Army and Navy Commission an equal amount, as the Church's present share in the work.

Council authorized the officers to proceed to put into effect January 1, 1944, the budget for that year adopted by General Convention, with the exception of a list of items totalling $151,320, action on which is deferred until the meeting of the Council next February, and the receipt of final reports from dioceses and districts as to their Expectations for that year. Dr. Franklin expressed the hope that all these items will be restored, that reports on expectations received so far are very encouraging, but that to achieve the complete budget, every diocese will have to meet its quota.

you baptize us in the Jordan River, to show that our sins are washed away?"

One day among the crowds of people who wished to be baptized stood the Coming One Himself. John saw Him and said quickly, "Why do You ask me to do this? I need to have You baptize me."

"I wish you to baptize Me," said the Coming One quietly. "I came to take the place of sinners."

When He came up out of the water, a pure white dove flew down and alighted on His head. And at that instant a voice spoke out of Heaven saying, "Thou art my beloved Son; in Thee I am well pleased".—Marian Madison.

The Manger and the Morn

We wish you Merry Christmas!
Aye, let us merry be;
For the Babe that in the manger lay
Was born for you and me.
And the Angels of the Heavenly Host
They sang right joyously.

We wish you Happy Easter,
And happy let us be;
For the Resurrection Morning comes
With joy for you and me.
But between the Manger and the Morn,
There lies Gethsemane.

O Holy Christmas Morning;
O Easter Day to be,
May God in loving kindness send
Their Peace to you and me.
And the Angels' joy abide with us
Through all Eternity.

—Margaretta James.

OUR CHRISTMAS VISION

JESUS, Lord of life and glory,
Who this Day was born,
Send to us the angels' message,
"Peace" to earth—war-torn,
And in spite of loss and sadness
Grant the sunshine of Thy gladness.

BY THY COMING Thou didst bring us
Joy in midst of pain.
Upturned faces see the Vision—
Christ has come to reign.
Though our world is dark and drear,
Light and Courage both are here.

THOU didst say to Thy disciples,
"Peace, fear not, have cheer."
In the world is tribulation,
But God's Day is near.
Heaven and earth sound forth the cry,
"Glory be to God on high!"

—F. G. W.

Christmas greetings from Shrine Mont, 1943.

CHRISTMAS AND NEW YEAR GREETINGS

However sad the darkening year,
Still CHRISTMAS brings a time of cheer—
Feasting, and carols, and at night
Candles on CHRISTMAS trees alight
A strange NEW YEAR stands at the door,
Like none that we have known before.
Whatever sorrows it may bring,
Our souls a song of hope shall sing.
If grief throughout the world prevail,
Let LOVE and COURAGE never fail!

—Alice Stone Blackwell.

CHRISTMAS

It was chilly that night in Bethlehem,
The crisp, clear air pulled cloaks tightly around shivering shoulders.
The shepherds marveled at the starlit beauty of the night.
It seemed, almost, as if the world had been cleansed by an unforgettable radiance—and they felt it.
Some followed their restless urge toward a glowing, happy manger;
Others breathed the life-giving splendor of that night and knew not from whence came the strange exhilaration in their souls.
There was not much excitement over this holy Babe then, but rumbles of Herod soon came from afar.
Both love and hate watched over His cradle—and they hovered, following, watching hungrily throughout His life.
Had love been the weaker, the failure of Christmas would have been absolute—but it was the stronger!
Jesus entangled His Godliness with the human heart—forever.
So Christmas . . . a quiet, lovely festival of hearts all tangled and entwined—woven into a pattern, each unseen in the burst of joyful sound . . .
"Good will . . . ."
"Good will . . . ."
Wild bells ringing, Lord Jesus.
"Good will . . . ."
"Good will . . . ."
To all mankind they 'claim . . .
And peace . . .
Earth's approach to Heaven!

J. W. Kennedy.

MORAL—LET WELL ENOUGH ALONE

"Our point was that it is presumption for any such unofficial group to even give the appearance of spreading ex cathedra for the whole Church. None of us, unfortunately, are that Catholic in our approach." From an Editorial, Dec. 18, 1943.

With the sympathy of a fellow editor! We try to correct one typographical error and the gremlins or the evil spirits which dwell in linotypes add seven others worse than themselves until the last state of that poor editor is worse than the first.

A VERY MERRY CHRISTMAS

HAVEN . . .

By J. W. KENNEDY

AT THIS TIME of year man's face softens, and the lines of worry and care grow dim, and there seems to be a new kind of look shining there. Everyone and everything is effected by it. Men seem to realize more pointedly than at any other time of year the discrepancies in their lives and the burning desire to reach up higher. (Does not the star symbolize the utmost in man which beckons to him?)

Most men are not poets in the usual sense of the word but at Christmastime men seek to write their thoughts and express their feelings in poetry. Poetry seems to come nearer to expressing the beauty of the inexpressible than does prose. On Christmas cards, in letters, on Christmas gifts, from doggerel to unchanted plain song, we find the flow of words, line by line, striving valiantly to express the release from earth-bound feelings, the stirrings of an inner new life struggling to be born.

The flame of the Christmas Spirit burns brightly today. Shall we seek to uncover wherein we have failed to express it in the most perfect form as we are capable. Is there a lurking bit of selfishness or antagonism or a grudge or an unkindness which needs to be dealt with? We must present ourselves on His Birthday without spot. Christmas is often spoiled by selfish over-indulgence. Plan now to guard against this danger of turning the glory of a starlit night into a nightmare of regret. Christ's spirit is within and no outside addition can take its place. Bodies weary with the toil of preparation should not be allowed to collapse into unconsciousness but to greet the Christmas Day with a joy and love which fills body and mind with strength. All the presents in the world can never make up for the lack of Christ's spirit in us.

IN SPITE OF haunting spectacles of misery on every side the glory of Christmas is felt within each home-locked heart. In the spirit of gay whimsey we might say: "Christmas comes to burnish the brass on the cobwebbed knockers of our better selves, and the oil of joy allows the door of once-a-year to swing wide with wondrous ease to bid the clamoring, hungry spirits of good cheer a hearty welcome as the bells ring out the gladsome songs of 'Peace on Earth.'"

It was Charles Dickens who took Christmas, warmed its dying embers and made it a festival of joy . . . showing forth in the immortal Scrooge the transmuting of a hardened heart by the insistent workings of the gentle spirit of love and kindness, and in Tiny Tim, the winsome, goodly gospel of the baby Jesus. Dickens retaught men about the season when the kingdom of Heaven reigns (for a moment) on earth; he softened their hearts and made them more child-like—that is, more Christ-like.

When Christ holds sway this once-a-year and releases our pent up generousness . . . we feed the poor, we clothe the naked and warm our hearts with such golden deeds. But human need (ever) continues (long after the holly has withered). May our Christmas Spirit (continue to) beam like golden rainbows that are never dimmed by the blight of 'afterward'—may it never become like a shabby patch of worn-out snow, or the dry, sad cry of a cast off tree, or the crunching destruction of "getting back to earth".

As the winter sun lays strips of velvet over earth's soon waning day, may the radiance from the Star of Bethlehem steal into our hearts and abide there this Christmastide and forevermore.

(So will come) a Christmas of peace and contentment (and) a New Year full of the blessedness of security and happiness.

Almighty God, Who hast given us Thy only begotten Son, to take our nature upon Him, and as at this time to be born of a pure virgin; Grant that we being regenerate, and made Thy children by adoption and grace, may daily be renewed by Thy Holy Spirit; through the same Our Lord Jesus Christ, Who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the same Spirit ever, one God, world without end. Amen.

Christmas Chimes

By B. S. MURRAY

SOON THE GLAD Christmas Bells will, in their own way, tell the sweet and pleasant story of the Nativity of Christ. Now loud—as if those bells had heard the "multitude of the Heavenly host praising God", and therefore must respond to their song of "Glory to God in the highest" by pealing forth the "good tidings of great joy . . . to all people". Then, soft and sweet was their music, as if they were echoing the angels' "Fear not," and were endeavoring to speak words of comfort, and to bring "peace" to troubled hearts on earth.

Listen then this Christmas to the Bells as they wing on the breeze chimes of Joy. Christmas is a day of joy for it is the birthday of Him Who is the great joy Bringer. Isaiah foretold that in His government and dominion and victories, as Immanuel, He would wonderfully increase men's joy and the total amount of joy in the world. The joy of the first century Christians was no mere rebound of animal spirits; it was an inner harmony of life coming from the conviction that "God is with us" and they were with Him. And that is the type of joy our war-weary world needs now. The world—the Church—needs more joy with the increased energy of life it brings and the endurance, vigor, and courage it confers. Then, too, as we prepare ourselves for the new era, we need Divine joy, which will create not only new desires and powers in our lives, but will also energise our faith and awaken within us a clearer vision of Divine love. Joy, then, is the gift of the Child born on Christmas Day.

As the Bells their old familiar carols play, they must be in unison or discord would ensue. To those who listen intelligently they suggest unity. Surely the Christmas message does this. The Festival of the Nativity is bathed in it. Stars and candles . . . oxen and angels . . . shepherds and wise men . . . cradle and a stable may be paradoxes but they are not contradictions. Rather, they suggest unity in diversity. The world in which we live is one world. A universe. We must make it a brotherhood. The bells of Peace will not bring in a new-world-order unless a great crusade of new men with the flame of freedom in their souls begin now to organize for Peace. This will involve sacrifices, adjustments, and a willingness to pay in money, discipline, and national pride. Tomorrow will need an abundance of unity! Let us catch the spirit of Christmas with its marvellous unity. At this season people will work together without any thought as to social and creedal cleavages. There are no dividing gulfs then—love is the cement that binds all elements together. How good it is to have one day at least in the year when divisions are forgotten and the fundamental unity of humanity is the dominant note. Not satisfied with this, we must carry forward the spirit of unity until unity reigns everywhere, every day.

THEN WILL LOVE dwell within each heart. The heart of Christmas is a heart of love. Love is the only argument for Bethlehem. Love is the only commandment from the Man of Galilee. Love is the only explanation of Calvary. Love is the only hope for today and tomorrow. Without Love Christmas has no meaning and there is no explanation to the Incarnation.

"Love came down at Christmas,
Love all lovely, Love divine,
Love was born at Christmas,
Stars and angels gave the sign."

The Incarnation is simply a great object-lesson of God's love. He loved before, but the Incarnation taught men that He loved and how much He loved. God so loved that He gave His only Son. The Gift Unspeakable! That must be the standard and measure of giving, a brimming, overflowing surrender of love in the ministry of joy.

One more chime must be added to make the Festival complete. It is the casting out of fear. That was the original word of the angelic message: "Fear not." If ever a world needed that reassuring command, our war-torn, fear-infested world does. One has only to think of enslaved Europe to see fear at its worst in 1943. This is not good enough after 2000 years of Christian teaching. The first step is to cast fear out of our own lives. Millions today are prisoners of fear. To these the Christmas faith has the remedy, for faith is the only thing that can eliminate fear. And Christmas can only be properly kept when hearts are full of confidence and minds freed of fear.

LET US GREET the future "by faith"; it is the Christian democratic way! Listen to the Christmas chimes! They announce the coming of the King of Liberty, the Master of Justice and the Light of the world. The Saviour. As you look at the Church steeple can't you see four shafts of light: freedom of speech . . . freedom of worship . . . freedom from want . . . freedom from fear? Surely these four constitute a challenge, for the only world worth building is a Christian world. We must spiritually commit ourselves to co-operate in making these ideals actualities. Alive to all new movements of God's spirit in the hearts and minds of men and determined to remedy injustice, vindicate right and truth, the Church of God, inspired by the Four Christmas Chimes of Joy, Unity, Love, and Faith, marches forward.

Listen again to the Bells, "God's messengers and servants." "Come and worship, worship Christ the new-born King," they peal forth o'er hill and dale, in city and village, everywhere. Let us go to Bethlehem! To our Bethlehem—the House of Bread—the Church of God in your community. So—

"Hasten with your greeting
And adore Him at the meeting
Of all faithful hearts that seek Him
At the Christmas Eucharist."

The Light of Christmas

By WILLIAM R. MOODY

"Arise, shine! For thy light is come,
"And the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee!
"For, behold, the darkness shall cover the earth,
"And gross darkness the people!
"But the Lord shall arise upon thee,
"And His glory shall be seen upon thee.
"And the Gentiles shall come to thy light,
"And Kings to the brightness of thy rising."

THESE WORDS, from the sixtieth chapter of the Book of Isaiah, are an apt description of the position of the Church of Christ in this hour. Surely there never was a time of more darkness and confusion and distress in the earth since the beginning than there is today. Yet, in this time of darkness and distress there is light for all who will see it. It is the same light which, centuries ago, had its first dawning in the sky over Bethlehem. It is the light of Christ.

We people who belong to the Christian Fellowship are, in this Christmas season, celebrating the only real hope of earth, the only doctrine capable of bringing a lasting peace. The Gospel of Jesus, with its message of human brotherhood and justice and righteousness under God, who loves us as a Father loves His own children, is like a light burning in the midst of a great darkness, throwing out its beams like a challenge, pointing the way towards hope, and giving the lie to sadness and despair!

As long as the light of Christmas shines in the world, it is a hopeful world, a world of promise! While that light shines forth, challenging the darkness and the evil, we have the assurance that we belong to that light, and not to the darkness; and that all that light stands for, with all its promise for mankind, is our rightful heritage. The Church is the custodian of that light, and its herald. Christians are, and have always been, light-givers, and hope-givers to mankind. And God says to His Church, and to His faithful ones in the Church today, "Arise, shine! For thy light is come; and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee!"

THE TIME for the lamps to be lighted is when the world is dark. So I say that there never was a time when there was more need for the light which the Church holds in its keeping than there is today. In every generation there comes one time when the light of the Gospel is more needed, and will be more apprciated, than at any other time. Indeed that time has come for our generation!

When men are sorrowful, that is the time for the Church to bring its consolation. When cruelty reigns, that is the time for the Church to speak of kindness and mercy, the exercise of which lifts mankind above the beasts, and shows his kinship with the Eternal God.

When the nations have been wounded in heart and spirit, that is the time for the Church to go forth to heal, "to bind up the brokenhearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and the opening of prison to them that are bound; to set forth the acceptable year of the Lord!"

Now, indeed, has the Voice of the Eternal Father come to His children in the Church, "Arise, shine! For thy light is come; and the glory of the Lord is arisen upon thee!"

If the Church does not bring forth this message—this message which is at heart the message of Christmas—this message of peace, and good will, and brotherhood—then it will not be brought forth at all in our time. There is no one else to bring it forth, except the Christian Church, and the Christian people in the churches! You know that, and so do I.

There is no other Gospel in the world like the Gospel of the Lord Jesus. Go over the whole field, and there is none. And there are no other people in the world with conviction enough in their souls, and with courage enough in their hearts, to stand up and speak boldly for these things which we know must come to pass before the world can have peace. Indeed, darkness does cover the earth, and gross darkness the people—but the Lord has arisen upon us, and His glory shall be seen upon us! That is the measure of our great privilege, as Christians—and that is also the measure of our duty!

IN THE MIDST of this dark world of today we must not let that light grow dim. We must defend it. We must proclaim it. We must live in the glory of it. Only so shall those who know Him not see to come to His light, and the Kings of the earth to the brightness of His rising!

We must give all our care to keep this blessed, holy light of God awake in our own hearts and in our own souls. No light will shine without being fed—not even the light of Bethlehem. We must feed this holy fire within us with renewed prayer, renewed faith, renewed study of His word.

We really must begin to pray more than we have been praying. That is one way to make the Christmas light shine brightly. Let your prayers follow those boys who have gone away from us out there to fight for us. Pray for them without ceasing. The united voice of prayer of a people will have its effect. It will shine forth like a light across the dark earth, and across the dark oceans, and some gleam of it will come to those for whom we pray, and will strengthen them in their loneliness, and in their separation, and in their trial.

And we must have faith. We must believe that those prayers will shine like light! We must believe that those prayers will strengthen those for whom we pray. We must have faith unswerving that right will triumph, and that all the sadness and the toil and the sacrifice of this present day will not be in vain. It takes courage to have faith like that. We must have that courage!

Our soldiers must have courage to die, if need be—but we, at home, must have even greater courage than they! We must have the courage to live and work so that their sacrifice will not have been in vain!

WE MUST GO BACK again to the Bible, which so many of us have neglected and forgotten. We must not let it remain a closed book; for in it are the words of Life! If the Christmas light is to shine for all the world, then that Book must be made an open book for all the nations to read! For that Bible is the book of liberty, and when it is opened, and kept open, in any nation, tyrannies in that nation will surely fall!

And we must not forget to be kind. The Christmas light will not shine without kindness. We must walk humbly, and in righteousness, and in honor, for the sake of Him whose Name we bear, and for the sake of those who need His Gospel in the world.

No Blackouts for Christmas

By FREDERICK WARD KATES

DESPITE THE CLAMOR and carnage of warfare and the cries of desolate and distressed human hearts sounding in almost every nation on the face of the earth, the peace of God, strange and still, lies over the world tonight. For, once a year, these nineteen centuries past, no matter what is stirring in the world of man of weal or of woe, a heavenly benediction mantles the earth on Christmas Eve as Christian men pause to celebrate with gladness and with song the Birth of Christ their King.

Many churches throughout the world where Christ is honored and worshipped are dark tonight, blacked-out because of war. But of this we can be sure: no matter what happens and no matter what may come in this fevered and suffering world, Christmas will not be blacked-out in the hearts and minds and souls of men. Three reasons are our warranty for this statement.

YES, CHRISTMAS will live on, year after year, to renew the hearts of men, for the Christmas Story, as told in the first two chapters of the Gospels according to St. Luke and St. Matthew, is the most precious art-treasure of the human race. Such beauty as this cannot perish and will not be allowed to perish from the earth.

As we read the Bible verses that tell the Christmas Story, we tread, if anywhere in this life, on holy ground. Not even in the fairyland of children is there such a tale. "Only God could have thought of Christmas." Yes, truly, only God, in His deep wisdom, so very different from our own, could have conceived the Christmas Story, so tender and so sublime in its sheer wonder and pure beauty.

Works of art and masterpieces of beauty all over the world bless and enrich mankind, but none compares with the treasure the race possesses in the story of the Christ-Child's Birth in Bethlehem of Judea long years ago this night. By such beauty as the Christmas Story men live. Without such beauty to nourish the soul, the spirit of man would dry up and wither and die.

No matter what may come to pass in our troubled world, we need never fear that Christmas will be blacked-out of the calendar or out of the hearts of men. Mankind is too grateful to God for Christmas to let it die. For the wonder of the Story, and the incomparable beauty of it, heals men's souls, comforts and assures their hearts, and makes faith white and shining again.

FOR A SECOND REASON Christmas will live on through the years. Without a vision people perish—this is true, and this is why Christmas will never die; it keeps alive and bright in men's hearts the vision of the kind of world God would have this world be—a Christmas world, a world where the kindly spirit of Christmas prevails, not for just a short season but for all the whole year through, a world where there will be "on earth peace, good will toward men."

This war-seared world of ours tonight is far from the kind of world in which God wants His sons and daughters to dwell. No man, I believe, would venture to maintain a position to the contrary. And this world of today is largely of our own making, and its tragic plight is eloquent proof that man, left to himself, can build little of lasting worth, that man without God is of poor avail. But the world, as God intends it to be, is a vastly different world from our pitiful planet of today.

Christmas comes each year and for a short time at least casts its heavenly spell over our lives and days, if, for no other purpose than this, to remind us afresh of the kind of world God wills this world to be. Christmas precludes the vision from growing dim, the vision of a fairer world for all men.

This Christmas vision of a Christmas world—without it we would be poor indeed—it will never be blacked-out of the hearts of men, for all men know—even those who defy it—that it is a blue-print of the kind of world men of goodwill must live for and labor to establish among men.

THE THIRD AND principal reason why Christmas will never be blacked-out of the hearts and souls of men is this: Christmas commemorates with never-diminishing vividness an event mankind never can forget. Once, just once, in the long history of this planet and in the story of men, God Himself visited this earth which He had made. Christmas Day is the joyous anniversary of that astounding event.

The great problem of all time was solved when Christ was born, for in Him, Who was God made flesh, men and God were brought together. Man and God were joined in His life as in no other life that has lived upon this earth. In Jesus, the two worlds met, the world of eternity, and the world of time, the world of God and the world of man.

Religion is often described as being a way of man to God, but Christianity defines religion differently. It declares triumphantly that God, on His own initiative, has made a way to man in and through the life and personality of Him Who was born at Bethlehem long centuries ago this night, Whose perfect humanity was the completely adequate instrument for the very life of God among men.

The Divine Invasion—this is what Christmas celebrates, the coming of God among men as perfect man. The Good News of Christianity is this, that when man by searching could not find God, and when man by striving could not find peace, then God spoke. More than this, in our extremity and desperate need, He came Himself among us. God was made flesh and dwelt among us and we beheld His glory full of grace and truth.

Why are we so joyful at Christmastide? Simply because we know that something sent from God stole into time and space 1900 years ago and crowned our human history with a heavenly life. Somehow, we know not how, but somehow, in Bethlehem, long years ago, a blessed contact was made between heaven and earth, between the divine and the human; eternity was translated into terms of time, the divine and the human merged—and by the design and purpose of God. Somehow the divine and human merged and met in a perfect, the only perfect, human life. God came along with that Child born centuries ago this night in a way that He did not come with you and

The Undiscovered Country

There is an undiscovered country that surrounds us every Christmastide. Wise men and women find the undiscovered country each returning Christmastide. But painfully there are not many wise. And so the undiscovered country of the Christmastide remains an unexplored region for millions.

The amazing thing is that often this undiscovered country comes very near to this world of ours. It comes near when the world is at peace. It comes near when some new religious renaissance sweeps the soul of man. It comes near when men of humble hearts discover the real beauty of the season; when with a quiet, simple trust they sense its real significance. This undiscovered land can come very near to all of us.

To change the figure, the land can be very far away. Or to express it yet another way, men may miss discovering this land by many degrees of both latitude and longitude. For to discover it, men have to set their course by a very definite compass. A compass in which there is no variance. Christmas, 1943, finds the world of men far off the course which would lead to the discovery of this undiscovered land. For men are following a course planned and plotted by their own fallible minds. This course has taken great groups of armed men to the places far away from their homelands, there to fight their fellowman. These men are discovering new lands. Literally they have gone to the ends of the earth, to establish through the sword of justice, a new world for all men. But it is man's way of establishing justice. We know that it must be that way now, for cruel men have insisted that the reign of their cruelties through the domination of particular racial groups shall rule the world. We know that the Ruler of the undiscovered country wills that it be done another way.

What is this undiscovered country and where is it? It is the land of human wills that have been transformed by the Light of Bethlehem's Hills. For > Bethlehem's hills are holy hills,

> Bethlehem's dells are holy dells,
> And from the hills and dells of > Bethlehem's holiness,
> There comes a mighty procession;
> That through all the world a way > proclaims,
> So that men here, there and everywhere
> Speed to swell its coursing way,
> Until from every kindred, every tribe,
> A way—becomes The Way,
> For all men everywhere.

The undiscovered country then is God's way for mankind as revealed in the person of Jesus Christ, whose birth we celebrate. From the days of Bethlehem's Holy Birth, until this very present, men have tried to build, a country in which the lovely influence of the Holy Christ, would be the one dominating motive to bind men together. The empires that have been built in this world have at times claimed His sovereign sway, but only in part. In the end they have always failed, because they have discovered that God imparts only to meek and humble hearts His Kingdom of love. For the Christ tells us that the Kingdom of God is within. It is to be built then by loving hearts spreading the contagion of their love.

Today it is hard for us to see that country. The horror of the present makes a great blackness. But there are those who know as Russell Bowie has so well expressed it, that there is "The Star that Gleams in the Blackness." It is the same Star that Wise Men of old followed. Their world was filled with darkness. But they followed the Star.

As Christians we, too, must learn to follow that Star through every blackness of cruelty, and terror and grief. For it is the Star that will lead us into the undiscovered country of God's Redeeming Love.

It is undiscovered and yet well known. Men everywhere have heard of God's way in the Christian revelation. But men have not been willing to accept God's way.

We are thinking and talking in these tragic days about building a new world. The ground of our hope in this matter as in all others is the character of God as revealed in the Incarnation. As Christians we know there is no other way to build a better world, than the Way given us by Jesus Christ.

May we help men everywhere to enter the undiscovered country of God's Love, for all men regardless of race, creed or color.

If we do this as individuals, we will become followers of the Star of true Christian hope.

Swiss Celebrations To Be Held As Usual

By MARIE WIDMER

WHILE MANY SWISS SOLDIERS still are keeping watch at the front, children in Swiss rural districts and even in some of the larger cities will enjoy their traditional Santa Claus celebrations. In Switzerland it is not on the night before Christmas when kindly, ruddy-cheeked Santa makes his rounds, but on December sixth, which is the birthday of the first Santa Claus which the world ever knew. He was St. Nicholas, Bishop of Myra in Asia Minor, who in the eleventh century gave presents to the poor yearly on that day.

At sequestered Bellwald, in the Upper Valais, Santa Claus doings start immediately after lunch with a gathering of all the school boys on the village square. Every lad carries a good sized cowbell and four boys are garbed in quaint costumes which in long forgotten days were worn to keep away supposedly evil spirits of winter.

"Santa Claus" marches at the head of the procession which stops at every home to collect apples, nuts, and cookies. The boys don't confine their calls to their own locality, but also make the round of neighboring communities. When dusk falls the youngsters return to their own village and after supper they proceed under the supervision of grownups to the Borough Hall where the local school master sees to it that donations received are properly divided.

There are also merry Santa Claus celebrations in the Aegeri Valley, canton of Zug, as well as at Kaltbrunn, in the canton of St. Gall. In the former district the school boys parade with illuminated lanterns and hats, cowbells and a voluminous bag to hold the collections. In the latter region the celebrants are garbed in white trousers and shirts, with herdsman's fancy belt and suspenders. They, too, ring cowbells and wear home-made, illuminated headgear of elaborate design.

EVEN ZURICH, the largest city in the country, takes keen delight in observing the old Saint's birthday on December sixth. In this great metropolitan area a tall Santa Claus, with flowing white beard, and carrying a huge bag on his back, leads a long procession of eager "helpers", mostly from 13-15 years old. These assistants wear long white nightshirts, huge cardboard masks and illuminated headdress fashioned by themselves under the guidance of their teachers. Equipped with horns and bells the boys exercise quite a pied-piper spell upon the inhabitants. Thousands of eager spectators, both young and old, line the streets wherever the merry parade goes, and simple Santa Claus gifts are generously contributed by friends of youth. Many a home is afterwards visited by the Zurich Santa Claus and his helpers, and all obedient children receive their share of presents. Naughty children, however, are sternly reprimanded and in urgent cases a switch, made by Santa himself from twigs of birch, is left with the parents of the little culprits.

THE CHRISTKINDLI, a beautiful angel, commemorating the birth of the Christ Child, is the bringer of Christmas joy and gifts in Switzerland on the eve before Christmas. This fairy spirit is said to be traveling on a magnificent, reindeer-drawn sleigh, heavily laden with trees and tantalizing packages.

With its National Red Cross in charge of work, Switzerland provides for vacations of three months each, either in private homes or in special centers for a yearly total of at least 40,000 of Europe's starving children from 4-14 years old. This photograph shows a group of French boys arriving at a Genevaa railroad station. Swiss volunteers are taking charge of them.

Presently, in every home of the land, families will gather around their fragrant, sparkling trees, and they will sing the beautiful carols of olden days and read the Bible's glad tidings of the Nativity.
